If, then, it be proposed to abolish the true cause, "politicians," not only will an "Amen" go up to heaven from the entire nation, but with their removal peace and union would be restored without another battle. "Slavery is dead," exclaim another class of patriots. Then why not bury it by the highway as other dead dogs are buried; why bring it into this House or throw its carcass as a stumbling-block in the pathway of our armies? Slavery is not dead, but has inflicted upon itself a fatal wound. Let it alone, and in a restored Union it will die of wounds inflicted by its own hands, without a subversion of Government and without a violation on our part of the oath we have taken to support the Constitution. It will die off fully as rapidly as we can discover the means of disposing of the emancipated slaves. In West Virginia, in Missouri, in Maryland, and Delaware, it is substantially destroyed. And Kentucky, too, generous Kentucky, the home of patriots and orators, Kentucky, which, never clamoring for aid to itself from the General Government, has always come to the rescue of New England when it asked protection for its manufactures or bounties for its fishermen; Kentucky, abused and persecuted by the radicals, will itself soon see its interest in getting rid of the incubus of slavery, provided the meddling abolitionists will allow its people time to reflect. But whatever of truth there may be in these views, our duty in the matter before us is a simple one: it is to observe our oaths of office and look to the Constitution in its true spirit as our rule of action.

Mr. DAWES. I now call the previous question upon the joint resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow me to offer an amendment. I will not detain the House by commenting upon it.

Mr. DAWES. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question to hear what the amendment of the gentleman is.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will not allow me to offer an amendment unless it should exactly suit him, I suppose it is hardly necessary to have it read.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will not allow me first to know what his amendment is I will renew my demand for the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the House will vote down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. DAWES. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 46, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Cole, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. So the whole subject was laid on the table.

During the call of the roll, Mr. DENISON stated that Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, was confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. NOBLE stated that he had paired with Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. MARVIN stated that he had paired with Mr. HARRINGTON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the subject was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAJOR DAVID H. HASTINGS.

Mr. STILES, by unanimous consent, introduced an act for the relief of Major David H. Hastings; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the Senate amendments to House bill No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering these amendments in the House?

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object.

The amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PENDLETON in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest that where there is no objection to the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, it will be considered agreed to.

The recommendations of the Committee of Ways and Means on the various Senate amendments were agreed to without division, except in the following cases, where special action was taken:

Eighth amendment of the Senate:

To change Tiber creek, where it now runs through the botanic garden, into a sewer, $10,150, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the items which was in this appropriation bill when first reported. But it was struck out then. It appropriates over ten thousand dollars to a purpose that is not essentially necessary. We have got along with this classical stream in its present condition a great many years, and it seems to me that the usual argument that this is no time for this expenditure applies to this appropriation. I hope this appropriation will not be made, and that no more money will be expended about this Capitol that is not actually required for the public service.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, this arching of the Tiber so as to prevent infection from it has been recommended for years. It was in the original bill presented here, but it was supposed to be out of order in consequence of an ancient rule that was revived. Anybody who will look at it will see at once that to all those who live here and do not expect to die pretty soon this is a material improvement. The whole stream, sluggish everywhere, becomes putrid there, and is to-day as green as any pool ever seen. It is to arch that stream below the garden that this appropriation is asked for. It has been always recommended, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

For continuing the work on the Washington aqueduct, $150,000.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. BROOKS. There seems to be some misunderstanding between the two Houses on the subject of clear water in Washington. I consider it a matter of prime importance that we have pure water before we go into further expenditure. I am not sufficiently informed on the subject to form an opinion about it. I listened the other day to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means with much interest in his explanation of the subject. The Senate has arrived at a very different conclusion. In my judgment, the whole matter should be left to three intelligent commissioners, such as constructed the water-works of Philadelphia, New York, Cincinnati, and other cities of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, the House recommended that the work shall be done in a particular way, so as to avoid the present mud hole, called the reservoir, and to bring the water direct from the Potomac. We found that although $3,000,000 had been expended the city never yet had received one drop of water from the Potomac, and that when the water was let into the upper end of the receiving reservoir it all ran back into the Potomac, very much to the annoyance of the people below, who found the water too filthy to use. We therefore thought it best to say how the rest of the money should be expended so as to be sure to bring the Potomac water into the city. The engineer or some one of the architects, after the bill was reported, asked us to give them the money and that they would expend it properly. The committee and the House thought they knew the mode in which it should be expended as well as those who expended $3,000,000 to no valuable purpose. We therefore, when we came to reconsider it, thought it right to let the subject go to a committee of conference, and if they can convince the committee of conference that it is better to leave $150,000 to these men I have no objection. I do not see what objection there could be to letting this go to the committee of conference.

Mr. BROOKS. I am willing to let the subject go to the committee of conference, and after $3,000,000 have been wasted on these works, if we trust the committee of conference with the finality of action, we will have the right to hold them responsible in reference to further appropriations hereafter and the introduction of good water into this city.

Mr. PRUYN. A few days before the question was voted on by the House I visited the aqueduct and upper reservoir very much with reference to looking at the condition of things there in regard to the impropriety of making this appropriation. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS], so far as the facts were placed before me, that very important improvements can be made in the water-works at that point, but I should be sorry to see the House disagree and refuse to let this subject go to a committee of conference. I hope the course suggested will be agreed to, and that the subject will be referred to the committee of conference.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and a message was received from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had adopted the report of the committee of conference on the tariff bill.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The committee resumed its session.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert:

For plans and detailed drawings for proposed changes in the Capitol wings to secure improvements in ventilation and the acoustics of the Halls of Congress, the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary; said outlay to be authorized and approved by the joint select committee of the two Houses on ventilation, &c., of the said Halls, and to be paid out of the aforesaid appropriation for the Capitol extension.

Mr. BROOKS. I would like to have some explanation of that.

Mr. STEVENS. We have two or three architects employed, and if they are competent they ought to do it without extra pay.

Mr. BROOKS. This is the only opportunity for me to say that I believe this is an unfit place to do business in, especially when the furnaces are going. I trust that something will be done to ventilate this place so that we may be able to stay here and do business. I do not expect myself to be here more than three months longer, but for the great mass of individuals who are to come to this place hereafter to do public business, I do hope that something will be done for the ventilation of this Hall. Thousands and tens of thousands of dollars have been thrown away here. It is impossible to stay in this House any length of time without going out to seek the fresh air. That is one of the causes of disorder. It is impossible to sit here and devote attention to the business that is going on. Members must breathe, they must have fresh air. Here the air is artificial and the light is artificial. Let the architects who have control of this matter prepare some plan for remedying the evil.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman says that this is an unfit place to live in, and I do not think it is a very clever place to die in. [Laughter.] Whether $1,500 is necessary to employ new architects I do not know. Gentlemen can concur or non-concur in the Senate amendment as they please.

Mr. PRUYN. I take it for granted that the regular architects employed upon this Capitol are fully occupied with that regular work, and that you will find it necessary to employ somebody who shall give special attention to this subject, and somebody, if you please, not connected with the building heretofore. I think it would be wise to go outside for the purpose of procuring proper plans for this purpose, and therefore I hope the House will agree to vote this $1,500.

Mr. MORRILL. In consequence of other duties I have been able to attend but one meeting of the select committee upon this subject. I desire to ask my colleague upon the committee, from Connecticut, [Mr. ENGLISH], whether any action of that committee has been had relative to this expenditure, and whether that committee deem this expenditure important, and have requested it or not.

Mr. ENGLISH. As a member of that committee I desire to state to the House that Mr. Anderson appeared before this committee with the original plans which he devised for this edifice. The plans have been of some service to the committee in their examinations in regard to the ventilation of this Hall as originally contemplated by Mr. Anderson. There has been no action taken by the committee in regard to compensation.

Mr. MORRILL. Another question; is this $1,500 to be appropriated for plans to be made hereafter, or is it to be made as a compensation for those already made and exhibited before the committee?

Mr. ENGLISH. The whole matter is new to me, and no action has been taken by the committee; but the committee have consulted the plans during one evening.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether the select committee recommend this appropriation.

Mr. ENGLISH. No action has been taken by the committee.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I desire to say that a bill has been reported appropriating $7,500 for Mr. Anderson. That is, I understand, for the plans which he has produced heretofore, and for services for which he has been paid.

Now, one word in reference to this appropriation. I believe that to appropriate $1,500 will be to throw away just so much money, because everybody knows that it cannot accomplish anything toward the ventilation of this room. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which I have the honor to belong, have investigated this subject to some extent. They investigated it in connection with the claims of Mr. Anderson, and we gave it considerable time and attention, but no member of the committee will say he is prepared to urge our views upon the House in this connection. I simply mean to say that the committee agree in saying that $1,500 would be a mere bagatelle toward accomplishing the great purpose in view. Seventy-five thousand dollars would be the least amount required.

Mr. PRUYN. This appropriation is for plans.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. This joint committee should make a thorough investigation of this matter. It is composed of able gentlemen, who are amply able to investigate this subject, and therefore I hope this appropriation will not be made, but that the joint committee will have time during the interim between the two sessions to thoroughly look into the matter. If that committee do now recommend this expenditure I have not a word now to say; but in the absence of any such recommendation I am opposed to it.

So far as the plans of Mr. Anderson are concerned, I would say that he has already been paid for them by pending legislation, and they are now at the command of that committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Has this appropriation any connection with the claim of Mr. Anderson?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I do not know anything about it. If it has it ought not to have.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to state that I am in possession of some facts in relation to the claim of Mr. Anderson to six or seven thousand dollars.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will say nothing for the present about that claim. It will not come up for action during this session of Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand that Mr. Anderson has already been paid everything he claimed, and has, besides, got his plans.

Mr. MORRILL. From the information already before the committee it is obvious that this appropriation is not needed. I therefore hope it will be non-concurred in.

Mr. BROOKS. I would ask the gentleman from Maine what he proposes to do now. Why put off all this matter? Why legislate for posterity instead of for the present?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I think something should be done now, but the matter was taken out of the hands of the appropriate committee and given to this joint committee. When that joint committee will report and recommend any feasible plan, I will certainly give it my hearty concurrence, but until we do get some report from an appropriate committee I am opposed to this appropriation.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the Clerk read the Senate amendment again?

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that the $1,500 would do the least good; and I quite concur in the remark made that it would be so much money thrown away. But I propose to submit something practical as a substitute for the Senate amendment, to the effect that a sub-committee of four from the joint committee on ventilation be directed to execute some plan for the ventilation of the two Houses of Congress, and that $25,000 be appropriated therefor. This sub-committee can sit during the recess and devise and execute some plan which will give us good ventilation hereafter. Acoustics are of minor importance. We can do without hearing, but we cannot do without breathing.

Mr. PRUYN. I suggest to my colleague to use the word "authorized" instead of "directed."

Mr. BROOKS. I accept that modification.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that duty will not be imposed on the committee already raised. It seems quite enough responsibility to impose upon them a recommendation to the two Houses of Congress to adopt some plan. If a plan be adopted

Mr. BROOKS. I would ask the gentleman from Vermont if he ever expects that one hundred and eighty or two hundred members of Congress will ever take the time to investigate any plan of ventilation. I know nothing about the theory of ventilation or of acoustics, but there is one fact palpable to me every day and every hour, and that is that this is not a place fit to breathe in, and that no natural breath can be inhaled by persons here. In the end this is to be done by some engineer or architect; but why not devolve this duty on a sub-committee? Why not give that committee power now? Why not have a properly ventilated Hall next session of Congress? Some architect, some engineer, some committee will have to direct and execute some plan finally, for a body of two hundred men has neither the time nor the capacity to act upon and approve any plan.

The time is now or never. The same debate would occur next winter, and nothing will be done. The same debate will occur the winter after, and nothing will be done. The whole tendency and management of the public business is to throw it out of the hands of the House and necessarily into the hands of a few committees, for necessarily the great body of the members of the House are not physically able to remain within these walls hour after hour. They must go out of doors to seek pure air. There is nothing I have desired so much during the night sessions we have had here as to escape from this Capitol. It would have been better that the two Houses should have their sittings out under the trees where we could have the pure air of heaven rather than to have been confined within these walls. Our business is to a considerable extent transacted by unanimous consent. Why, sir, this morning ten or fifteen gentlemen pressed through bills involving thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, if not millions of dollars, that the great body of the House will know nothing of until they read them in the published acts of Congress. It cannot be otherwise in this Hall as at present arranged, for it is impossible to sit here. I have been as constant in my attendance here and as constant in my attention to what was going on as my capacity would admit during the present Congress; but it is impossible for any member to know what goes on. Why, sir, our tenement houses in New York, some of them fifty, sixty, or one hundred feet under ground, some of them ten or twelve stories high, are better supplied with air; their tenants enjoy better ventilation than we who live within these gorgeous rooms, in this magnificent Capitol, amid this gold, surrounded by these pictures, reposing upon these luxurious seats. Sir, I would rather sit upon a broken bench under some leafy tree in the open air in some wild woods than to submit to the miserable confinement within this Hall.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman's denunciation of this Hall should perhaps be taken with some grains of allowance. I believe it is conceded by all that it is improperly ventilated, but the question arises whether we shall adopt the plan of the present architect, which involves no great amount of expenditure, or provide for some new plan. I believe the architect assumes that he can give any amount of ventilation required very easily without any change of the present plan. Gentlemen who understand anything of the construction of this building know that to go into a reconstruction of this Hall would involve an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Under these circumstances, I think it is no more than proper that we should exercise a considerable amount of caution, judgment, and discrimination before we authorize any committee, without the plan being submitted to Congress, to enter upon a work which may involve so grave consequences. I trust this committee will not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York, at least until the architect has had the opportunity of ascertaining whether a proper amount of ventilation cannot be secured under the present plan.

Upon the adoption of Mr. Brooks's amendment 70 voted in the affirmative, and 29 in the negative. Mr. RICE, of Maine, called for tellers.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me suggest that if gentlemen upon the other side of the House do not like my amendment let them change it to suit themselves. I do not care how it is done, I only want some plan adopted to give us pure air.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by adding thereto:

Provided, That no greater sum shall be appropriated under this appropriation than is necessary to increase the ventilation sufficiently upon the plan now in existence.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object to that amendment. The gentleman from Vermont and I differ upon many subjects, and I think upon the subject of ventilation. I do not know what these plans may be. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. All I desire is that we shall not be involved in an expenditure of half a million dollars without knowing what we are about.

Mr. FRANK. I presume there is no objection upon the part of any one to a proper investigation being made in regard to ventilation; but if any change is undertaken in the plan of this Hall there is no question but a very large amount of expenditure will be involved.

Mr. BROOKS. I am willing to limit the expenditure to $25,000.

Mr. FRANK. That is very well, but the gentleman will find that the expenditure of $25,000 will be but the entering wedge of appropriations of hundreds of thousands.

Mr. BROOKS. I am willing to add the proviso that there should be no change in this structure of the Halls of Congress. I do not care for the heat, but I want to breathe the fresh air of heaven. I am willing to endure this miserable artificial light, but I want to breathe. I do not ask for any change in the structure of the Hall; I only ask that some plan of ventilation may be adopted that will enable us to sit here and attend to the public business.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to move to amend still further.

The CHAIRMAN. Farther amendment is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to add a proviso that no greater sum shall be expended under this appropriation than shall be necessary to increase the ventilation upon the plans now in use.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand the gentleman from New York accepts that amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. The object of my amendment is to give the architect an opportunity to increase the ventilation upon his own plan, which he says he can do, and without any large expenditure of money. That can be done during the recess of Congress, while to make an entire change will require a year or more.

Mr. BROOKS. I want added the words "that there shall be no change in the Halls of Congress."

Mr. MORRILL. I am willing to agree to that.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was non-concurred in.

Mr. BROOKS. How does the question stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. With the Senate amendment non-concurred in.

Mr. BROOKS. What has become of the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The CHAIRMAN. The question fell with the non-concurrence.

Mr. BROOKS. I demand a division.

Mr. MORRILL. We are willing that the gentleman shall have a vote on the amendment in the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is nothing before the House, and I object.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to insert $2,499.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the point of order that there is nothing before the House on which to hang the amendment; the Senate amendment has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BROOKS took an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but subsequently withdrew it.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert:

Provided, That in courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the section may be read to which that is proposed to be attached.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of meeting any expenses in detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, or other securities of the United States, as well as the coin of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY. I make the point of order that the amendment of the Senate is not germane to the bill before the House. I cannot for my life see what right the Senate of the United States has to incorporate into a bill of the House distinct and substantive legislation. This is a bill to appropriate money, and emanates from the Committee of Ways and Means. It was reported from that committee, acted on by the House, and sent to the Senate. It has been returned with this amendment which has no reference to the object of the bill at all. It is distinct and substantive legislation, and on a subject of great importance, and which should not be acted upon in this light and hurried manner.

Mr. STEVENS. While that may be a good argument against adopting the amendment, the question of order cannot prevail. The same rules do not affect the Senate that affect the House, and they may add what amendments they please to the bill. This is a question of expediency and not a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to another point of order. It is that the whole amendment, that adopted by the House as well as the Senate amendment thereto, is out of order; that that section itself, which is the action of the House, and which by the admission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and of the Chair is subject to the orders and control of this House, is out of order inasmuch as it is a distinct matter of legislation not connected with the appropriation of money, and it ought not to have been, under the rules of the House, introduced into an appropriation bill by the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order comes entirely too late after a bill has passed from the possession of the House and been sent to the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope then—and that is the last thing I can resort to—that the committee will not concur. I think the whole thing is vicious and wrong in itself. I think that even if it is in order—and I am bound to believe it is not after the decision of the distinguished chairman—it is wrong for this House in so summary a manner as this, without consultation, without reflection, on the spur of the moment, and nearly at the close of the session of Congress, to take up and adopt an amendment offered by the Senate of the United States which changes the law of the land so vitally as that does. It is a subject which should have been sent by this House to its able Judiciary Committee to have been thought over, pondered on by them, adjusted by the committee, and reported from that committee to the House before action should be taken by us.

I have not time now, nor do I wish, to enter into a discussion of the merits of this case. I do not wish to show the reasons why negroes should not be admitted in the courts of the United States as witnesses, nor why they should be. My ground is that we are not now in a condition to settle this question. It comes on us too suddenly, and we have not the time to deliberate upon it which we should take to reflect upon a matter of this importance before it is settled.

Mr. STEVENS. I presume this is a question which every man who is deemed fit to have a seat in this House has thought on more than once. It is not suddenly raised now for the first time, nor is it suddenly presented to any man's mind.

The laws of the different States throughout the United States are various upon that subject; some of them go to the whole extent of the amendment, and some of them reject it. The object of the amendment is to make the matter uniform as to United States courts.

Mr. MALLORY. I will offer an amendment to the Senate amendment so as to make it uniform, as the gentleman claims that to be the object of the amendment. The gentleman says some States allow it, and some do not. If it was allowed in all the courts of the United States as is proposed by the provisions of this bill, he will see that the uniformity will be abolished and destroyed. I move to amend the Senate amendment by adding thereto the following:

That such testimony shall only be taken in the courts of the United States in those States where such testimony is allowed by the laws of the State.

That will make the matter uniform as the gentleman proposes.

Mr. STEVENS. That would make it uniform if the laws of all the States were alike; but if they are different I do not see where the uniformity is.

Mr. MALLORY. That makes it regularly irregular.

Mr. STEVENS. But the law will not be uniform if the State laws are different. I do not wish to spend any time on this matter. Gentlemen can have a vote on it in the House, and call the yeas and nays upon it. I will simply say that this system of allowing parties to a suit to testify has been tried in England and in many of the States of the Union, and every witness's testimony is allowed such weight as it is entitled to. That is the substance of the proposition before the House.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman accept my amendment to the Senate amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I will give the gentleman an opportunity to offer it in the House.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. The gentleman does not speak for me.

Mr. STEVENS. I speak for myself, for nobody but the chairman of the committee has the floor when the bill comes before the House. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I will give him an opportunity to offer his amendment before I call the previous question.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. The amendment can as well be voted on in the House after being admitted here.

Mr. STEVENS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. Then why not admit it here?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is agreed that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky shall be offered now and reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky offer his amendment at this time?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. I agree that the amendment may be offered in the House.

Mr. MALLORY. I withdraw the amendment at this time, and will offer it in the House.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That sections eight and nine of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation of slaves into any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1808," which said sections undertake to regulate the coastwise slave trade, are hereby repealed, and the coastwise slave trade is prohibited forever.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence.

Mr. BROOKS. I would suggest to the members from New England the danger of interfering with the coastwise trade. I would suggest to gentlemen living on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario that when the public begins to direct its attention to this coastwise trade a great many things may be thought of. The coastwise trade is now exclusively in the hands of American ship-owners. No British vessel can go from Nova Scotia to Eastport and from Eastport to Portland, Maine; no British or French vessel can go, under our coasting-trade laws, from New York to Boston. The coastwise trade is now a monopoly in the hands of New England men. The greatest protection that can possibly be given to any interest is now given to the commercial and coastwise trade of the country under our existing laws; and that protection to the coastwise trade on Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, and on the river St. Lawrence is exceedingly expensive to this Government because it enhances freights. The trade on Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, and the St. Lawrence could be done by British and Canadian vessels at a good deal cheaper than it is now done. The British, the Danish, and the French vessels, with their illy-paid sailors, could do the whole coastwise trade of the country twenty-five per cent. cheaper than it is done at present, and fifty per cent. cheaper than under the coming tariff and revenue bills.

I therefore suggest to gentlemen from the lakes and from New England that the less the people think of the coastwise trade of the country, the less that subject is debated, the less attention that is given to it in the Halls of Congress, the better it will be for the commerce of the country. The whole coastwise trade of the country, from the Atlantic coast to California, is now exclusively in American hands, and the expenses of transportation are therefore twenty-five per cent. greater than if the trade were free, and will be fifty per cent. greater under the new system of taxation. I do not know from what quarter that amendment came in the Senate; but the man who drafted it and had it ingrafted on this appropriation bill is an enemy to our trade and commerce and an enemy to New England. He is threatening the commerce of the country; he is endangering the monopoly which is now in American hands, solely for a wild, fanatical, troubadour, rhetorical theory about the negro. No coastwise trade of any kind exists now between New York and Charleston, or between Charleston and New Orleans or anywhere else. But once you open the coastwise trade of the country, and not only the Atlantic coast, but all the lake coast and the Ohio and Mississippi may be lined with the cheap steamers of the British provinces. Sir, if we are commercially wise, if we are thinking men, we shall not allow these wild, romantic, humanitarian ideas of the negro to set the people of the country to thinking upon the subject of the coastwise trade, now the fast friend of the ship-building interest of New England.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I believe, Mr. Chairman, the honorable gentleman from New York has mistaken the nature of that amendment. If I understand it, it does not propose at all to interfere with the coastwise trade, except so far as to prohibit the transportation of slaves in that trade. It interferes with nothing else whatever.

Mr. BROOKS. It refers to the coastwise trade.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. The coastwise slave trade; nothing else. The entire commerce of the country, so far as relates to the coasting business, except for the slave trade business, remains untouched in any way by the provisions of this bill, and I trust the honorable gentleman from New York is disposed to put a check upon the transportation of slaves anywhere within or without the Republic. The argument of the honorable gentleman, therefore, in my judgment, falls to the ground. I do not know a man, even a border State man, upon this floor who is not opposed to the extension of the slave trade of the country.

Mr. MALLORY. I cannot really understand what the gentleman from New York [Mr. Davis] means when he speaks of a coastwise slave trade. I understand the President's proclamation, as claimed by the other side of the House, has abolished slavery in every one of the rebel States. Slavery has been wiped out in Missouri by the gradual emancipation process which is going on. Gentlemen on the other side claim that slavery has been abolished in Maryland by the convention now in session in that State. Kentucky is, therefore, according to the theory of gentlemen upon the other side, the only State remaining where the institution of slavery has not been removed.

Now, I simply ask, if slavery exists nowhere in the country except in the State of Kentucky, what is there for this bill to act upon? How can there be any trade from Kentucky when all the rest of the country is free, or how can there be trade to Kentucky if the theory of gentlemen on the other side be correct? No, gentlemen, you must either give up your legal opinions in regard to the status of slavery, or you must confess that your slave-trade coastwise bill with nothing for it to apply to is simply an absurdity.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I desire to ask the honorable gentleman from Kentucky whether he is in favor of the slave trade.

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir, I am not; but let me say to the gentleman from New York that those who concur with him do not stand in the same position in which they did in years gone by. There was a time when the abolition leaders of the country would not consent to the prohibition of the African slave trade under the Constitution of the United States until 1808. If they could make anything by it, if they could see profit in it, if they could fill up their coffers and build up colossal fortunes by it you would not see this proposition advocated by members on that side of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill of the Senate (No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia.

Also, that the Senate have disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. TRUMBULL, and Mr. POWELL the said committee on their part.

Also, that the Senate have passed, without amendment, a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 435) concerning the location of lands within the State of Missouri;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg;

An act (H. R. No. 414) for the relief of the estate of B. F. Kendall; and

An act (H. R. No. 205) authorizing the issue of patents for locations made with certificates granted under the authority of the act of Congress approved March 17, 1862, allowing floats in satisfaction of lands sold by the United States within the limits of Las Ornegas and La Nana grants, in Louisiana.

Also, that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Nathaniel McLean, Richard G. Murphy, and Charles E. Flandreau; and

An act (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

Also, that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 228) providing for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes; and

An act (No. 336) to amend the act incorporating the Washington Gas-Light Company, and for other purposes.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My colleague has answered his question. They want to abolish it because it has ceased to be profitable to them.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I desire to say that the answer which the gentleman has attempted to make fails to reach its object. Those who are opposed to the extension and perpetuation of slavery are not opposed to it for the reason that they can no longer make a profit out of it. I do not know what motives may have influenced men in times past. I speak of my own convictions.

Mr. MALLORY. I made no imputations upon the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I did not suppose the gentleman did. I speak of my own convictions. I have been opposed to slavery from the beginning. My opposition arose not so much from its effect upon the slave population as from its effect upon the white race. There, I think, is the greatest, deepest, most damning crime of slavery. We in this country have suffered because slavery has created sentiments and feelings in a portion of the country which, as we now see, have tended to the overthrow of the American Government, the only home of freedom on the face of the globe; and therefore I am opposed to slavery. I am opposed to it upon the ground that it has attempted to subvert and destroy this, the best of Governments. I do not believe any gentleman from Kentucky or elsewhere upon this floor will rise here and say that that has not been the effect, and that that is not now the object of the institution.

If the gentlemen from Kentucky are opposed to the slave trade, as they say, and I believe they are, if, as they also claim, this is nugatory, I ask in God's name what harm will it do? Let us obliterate at least from our statute-books any recognition, even by implication, of the right to transport slaves from one State to another, either from Kentucky or any other State, north, south, east, or west. I am in favor of any provision which will secure so desirable an end as to prevent the carrying of slaves or the existence of slavery in any part of the country.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Chairman, I was not so much provoked by the opposition of the gentleman from New York to the amendment of the Senate as to the tone of taunt, as I may call it, in which he advised the members from the commercial districts not to discuss this coastwise trade in any respect, lest it should be brought to the attention of the country, and in the end be all abolished. I understood him to suggest that abolishing the coastwise slave trade will lead to the abolition of the coastwise trade. I venture to say that there is not a Representative from any place in the country, unless from the seceded States or the city of New York, who would make that suggestion, or really desire to abolish the coastwise trade.

Mr. COX. I will move an amendment for the abolition of these navigation laws that give you men of New England the monopoly of the carrying trade along the coast.

Mr. BLAINE. Do the New England States enjoy any greater monopoly than the States which border upon the lakes? If you cut off the commerce of the lakes and the commerce along the coast what would become of the country? As a commercial people the city of New York seem to entertain the sentiment universally that it would be the great emporium upon this continent even if local interests were broken down. Strike down the navigation interest of the country, throw our carrying trade into the hands of the pauperized sailors of Europe, and I ask where the greatness and commerce of that city would be?

Mr. BROOKS. I have no doubt that if the free trade system existed for the city of New York, if it were a free port with free powers everywhere, and without any protection given to coastwise trade whatsoever, disincumbered of tariffs and of penalties, instead of being a city of a million people, in twenty years it would have three million inhabitants.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, sir, by begging the rest of the country. That is a favorite idea with some gentlemen, and I think it was first broached by the gentleman from New York not now in his seat, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.] I think when secession was rampant in 1861 he took that ground in New York, and proposed that New York should be made a free port. I do not understand that the gentleman who has just spoken favors that idea. I believe, however, a favorite idea among the members of the peace party of New York is that the rest of the country, including the commercial districts of the East and the manufacturing and agricultural districts, can be made tributary to the greatness of New York in any and every event. Sir, there never was a grander or greater mistake, and I am surprised that a gentleman born and nurtured on New England soil should come here, and by his language become the mouthpiece and exponent of that unpatriotic and un-American foreign influence which dominates in New York. To-day in New York the sentiment is anti-American, and were it submitted to the voters of the city of New York now whether they would have Jeff. Davis President or a loyal Republican Union man North, Jeff. Davis would have thirty thousand votes ahead. [A VOICE: "What of that?"] What of that? Just this: if gentlemen suppose that the whole country will contribute to the prosperity and growth of the city under such circumstances, they are under a profound delusion. Let the gentleman who said "What of that?" stand up and let me look upon him.

Mr. COX. Nobody said "What of that."

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, he did.

Mr. COX. I will tell what he meant by it.

Mr. BLAINE. Did the gentleman say it?

Mr. COX. I did not say it, but I will tell what the gentleman meant by it.

Mr. BLAINE. Let the gentleman explain for himself what he meant when he said "What of that?"

Mr. COX. I suppose the gentleman understood that was said in an ironical way to show how utterly absurd the gentleman's proposition was.

Mr. BLAINE. It seems the gentleman from Ohio must come forward and apologize for everything said on that side.

Mr. COX. I do not apologize to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAINE. I stand here to reproach the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] for the unpatriotic suggestion that the great and wise navigation laws of the country which have made it so great among all the nations of the earth should be restricted in order that one great metropolitan city may be built up.

Mr. COX. One word. The gentleman makes an attack upon a member from New York who is now absent from the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not attacked him at all.

Mr. COX. You say he was in favor of withdrawing the city of New York from the Union. Now the gentleman must have heard the statement of the member from New York, when he said the other night that his object was to separate the city of New York, not from the Union, but from the legislation of the State of New York itself, because of some collision between the State authorities and the city. And moreover the only gentleman who made any proposition in this Congress for the secession of the city of New York is now a major general of the United States, appointed by Mr. Lincoln, and is now traveling from one end of this country to another. I mean Major General Sickles, a man who has proved himself a brave man.

Mr. BLAINE. I should infer from the detailed manner in which the gentleman spoke, saying that if the arrangement could be made so and so, such and such would be the result, and that New York would become so great a city—I say I should infer from all those details that the subject had been considerably canvassed in the city of New York.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not overlook Philadelphia.

Mr. BLAINE. Philadelphia is a mere outpost to the city of New York. I understand the gentleman used the language "What of that?"

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir, and the gentleman who prompted you ought to have known better.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Ohio speaks about offering an amendment to let in all the British shipping on an equal footing with our own. Let him just appeal to the House on that. I want him to go before the great trading interest of the Northwest on that question. I want him to say to his constituents who border Lake Erie, and to all his political associates on the northwestern lakes, that the cheaply built British and Canadian vessels are to be admitted to a free participation in the grain trade of that immense region.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Maine will not hold still, [laughter,] no matter how I try to restrain him; and I will have to ask some member over there to restrain him. [Laughter.] I believe this is an attempt, through an appropriation bill, to repeal the eighth and ninth sections of an old law of 1794, with reference to the coastwise trade and to the slave trade. That is a law comprising thirty-two sections, each section interlarded with others, and all bound up in the same bundle, making a sort of code on that subject; and this is an attempt to repeal it by a sweeping clause that does not even state the date of the approval of the act. Such legislation I cannot approve of.

Mr. BLAINE. And to improve upon that which is so very crude the gentleman rose and stated he would offer an amendment to abolish all navigation laws on the subject.

Mr. COX. I am coming to that.

Mr. BLAINE. That is a very fine rider.

Mr. COX. The only reason why I do not propose an amendment of that kind is—

Mr. BLAINE. That is a second thought; you said you would do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Maine would keep still—

Mr. BLAINE. You said you would introduce such an amendment. Now do it.

Mr. COX. You do not come from a coastwise State at all. You come from Washington county, Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. And I am not ashamed of my birthplace.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman to hold still while I explain my object. At the proper time and in the proper way I will move to strike down all restrictions upon commerce. The interests of agriculture which I represent are coincident with those of commerce. I want the largest and freest exchange of all commodities. I want the right to buy where men can buy the cheapest, and to sell where they can sell the dearest. We will make money in that way, and will not make money in any other way. We do not make it by your protective bounties, by your monopolies, by your marine or commercial restrictions. I am for striking them all down, and for giving the largest reins to commerce the world over, because I believe that thus only will agricultural interests be enhanced and aggrandized. I believe that then we would get our commodities cheaper, because it will cost less to bring them to market. I would not cut off a steamboat from trading on the Ohio river because it happened to be owned in Kentucky; and on the same principle, based on the everlasting principles of political propriety, I would allow vessels from Nova Scotia to trade to Maine or to Chicago or Milwaukee. This was a monopoly enjoyed by the New England States.

Mr. BLAINE. Who gave it to us?

Mr. COX. Who gave it to you? In early times it was given you by a compromise with southern men. You have broken your part of the contract and then hold the consideration.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has had about enough of my time.

Mr. COX. I think you have had about enough of it.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, you may go on, if you have not exhausted yourself.

Mr. COX. I think I have about exhausted my subject, and with it myself also.

Mr. BLAINE. I yielded to the gentleman from Ohio to offer an amendment abolishing these coastwise restrictions.

Mr. COX. I have not the time or patience to draw up an amendment, and it would be committing the same error which the amendment under consideration involves if I were to undertake in this hasty manner upon an appropriation bill to legislate upon so important a subject.

Mr. BLAINE. If I may be allowed the remark, I think the gentleman jumped a little too quick. When he started out he saw nothing but Yankee skippers and New England bottoms, but when he came to find that his proposition would also strike at the coastwise trade of the northern lakes, that it would affect Lake Erie and the coast of Ohio on which is a large and prosperous trade, he concluded he would not bite off his nose to spite his face. In other words, the sober second thought of the gentleman from Ohio has brought him to the reflection that the Northwest enjoys quite as much immunity from the present laws as the Northeast does.

But, sir, I rose to respond to the insinuation of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] which has been so industriously taken up by the gentleman from Ohio. I have heard about enough of this great protection which is extended to the New England States, and of these threats to leave New England out in the cold. I suppose in the councils where the gentleman from Ohio associates the new western confederacy is a part of their policy.

Mr. COX. I have never advocated such a thing. It is a gratuitous slander, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman may say this, but when I hear gravely discussed the proposition to break up this Government, and leave out in the cold the entire East, it occurs to me that it is a game we can stand quite as well as the West can. Now, sir, let me say, and I speak it with all due respect for the great and prosperous West, that for her to undertake to set up as an independent Power without access to the ocean in any direction, it can only be mentioned to be laughed at.

You could not exist a year as a separate Power. You would either become tributary to Jeff. Davis, or else you would ask to come back to your connection with the East. You have got to secure a commerce upon the ocean, the highway of the world, before you can amount to anything. You must either have access to the ocean through the Mississippi or to the Atlantic coast; and I tell gentlemen that when every single interest of the State I represent cannot challenge scrutiny and investigation at the hands of the gentleman from New York, or at the hands of any other gentleman, strike it down. And if the gentleman from Ohio will oblige me by offering his amendment I will vote for it, and do what I can to enable him to have the opportunity of recording his vote upon it in the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I had no idea when I offered the few remarks I made relative to meddling with the coastwise trade regulations of the country, that it would lead to such a fiery, ardent debate as has taken place. It struck me then and it strikes me now that when a people are enjoying great blessings, a great monopoly, out of which they are making large sums of money, in a particular trade, nothing is so unwise as to cause attention to that trade or provoke discussion upon it. Hence, I threw out the idea that New England and the lakes, which now enjoy the greatest monopoly a people ever enjoyed in any country, the greatest protection that could be afforded, could not wisely or properly undertake upon a mere appropriation bill to adopt a provision leading to suggestions, thoughts, and amendments in respect to any part of the coastwise trade of the United States. I think the suggestion was a proper one, and if there was anything in it to excite the feelings of gentlemen it must have been my mode of argument and manner of addressing the House, rather than the suggestion itself.

Many years ago, when there was a cry of liberty throughout the world, when the southern members upon this floor fell prostrate before Louis Kossuth, the idol of liberty from Europe, I rose here and called the attention of those southern members to the fact that they held four million slaves, and that the people who lived in glass houses should not throw stones. I rise now to tell the people of New England and of the lakes that, living as they do in a glass house in reference to the coastwise trade, they should be careful how they throw stones at the glass houses of any other people.

Mr. ARNOLD. My friend from New York some time ago startled the House and country by announcing that slavery was dead. I ask him whether he still thinks that institution is dead?

Mr. BROOKS. My opinions are in the speech I made on that occasion. There they are, and the opinions I then entertained I entertain now. But I am no undertaker, no grave-digger. I am not going to dig the grave in which to bury the dead body of slavery.

Mr. ARNOLD. If the institution of slavery is in fact dead, for which we must thank God, why would the gentleman continue the slave trade?

Mr. BROOKS. No slave trade exists with the South. Why should we fight shadows?

Mr. ARNOLD. I want to see the statute-book swept clear from every relic, every word that can give sanction to the institution of slavery. I wish that the declaration the gentleman has made were true, that slavery is dead. But we have only to witness the proceedings of the House to know and feel that the institution still lives, and that it has its friends here who are determined that it shall not perish. It yet lives. It has not only friends in the American Congress, but it has friends and armies yonder confronting the Union hosts. And so long as Jeff. Davis is able to marshal his army in defense of slavery, so long as the institution can marshal friends here, we cannot yield to the declaration that slavery is dead.

Mr. BROOKS. This should be introduced fairly by itself in a proper manner, and not be injected into an appropriation bill.

No slave trade has existed in the southern States since the war, and before that it was by the lines of railroad. It was not the custom in the South for ten years before the outbreak of the civil war to transport slaves by sea, even from Virginia to Louisiana. The transportation was mostly by land and by the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. Such legislation as this is unnecessary and uncalled for; and it is introduced here merely as a contribution to the excitement in the country in order to draw off public attention from the great cause of the white man's liberty. It is not necessary, and if it were necessary this is not the right way to bring it before the House.

But I have said enough on that branch of the subject. I rose to make some few remarks in reply to my honorable friend from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] No man has ever proclaimed aid and comfort to the enemy so effectually as he has done at this day and this hour. No man has ever been so guilty of moral treason as he has this day and this hour in the House of Representatives. The words he has uttered here will be caught up by the Richmond press and rung and rerung from the capital to Louisiana and the Rio Grande in one prolonged, continued echo.

The sentiment which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has uttered, and for which he ought to be censured, is that in the great commercial metropolis of the continent, a city which has poured forth soldiers by thousands and hundreds of thousands, that city which has poured forth millions and tens of millions of dollars into the public Treasury, that city whose seamen line the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific, protecting our commerce and blockading the ports of the enemy; in that city, he proclaimed here upon the floor of this House that if a vote were taken to-day there would be thirty thousand majority for Jeff. Davis, the president of the confederate republic of the southern part of the United States of America. I have too much respect for the honorable gentleman to call even that a slander. I will not characterize it by the plain adjective with which it deserves to be characterized, for in the heat and fervor of debate he may have made that proclamation without consideration. Nothing could be more unjust to my constituents. No people are more loyal; not to Abraham Lincoln, not to the Executive, whoever he may be, but no people on earth are more loyal to the Constitution of the United States than the people of the city of New York.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me ask the gentleman, as bearing upon that point, if the question were to-day submitted to the vote of the city of New York, whether they would take Jeff. Davis and the Montgomery constitution or Abraham Lincoln, whom would they vote for?

Mr. BROOKS. The people of the city of New York are more interested in the preservation of the Union than any other portion of the country.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask you if they would not take Jeff. Davis and the Montgomery constitution?

Mr. BROOKS. The question has been answered over and over again. There are fifty thousand majority now in the city of New York opposed to Abraham Lincoln, and yet they have contributed their money freely, their votes freely, their actions freely for the support and maintenance of this Government, and of Abraham Lincoln, its executive head.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman accused me of moral treason for making a certain assertion in regard to the probable vote of the city of New York, and I asked him his judgment as to the result were the question submitted to a vote to-day whether they should have Jeff. Davis and the Montgomery constitution or Abraham Lincoln and a prosecution of the war.

Mr. BROOKS. We want no new constitution.

Mr. BLAINE. Answer my question.

Mr. BROOKS. The Constitution we want is the Constitution of our fathers, and no other Constitution whatever. Under that we have prospered, by that we have lived, and by that, under the blessing of God, we will restore the Union. The Constitution of our fathers, the Constitution of our country is what we are struggling for, and this is the reason and the only reason we are opposed to Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. FRANK. I simply ask my colleague if he will not allow us to go on with the business of the House, and let this matter be postponed until next session?

Mr. BROOKS. Why, sir, if the gentleman thinks this discussion unprofitable I will sit down.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending amendment.

Mr. COX. I appeal to the gentleman from Vermont to allow me to have the eighth and ninth sections of this bill read.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I have a right to have the sections read which are proposed to be repealed by this legislation. We do not know what we are repealing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to. So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PENDLETON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 23) for the relief of the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments; Joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg;

An act (H. R. No. 497) in relation to the village of Deposit, Delaware county, in the State of New York; and

An act (H. R. No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate on the pending amendment to House bill No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, be closed in one minute after its consideration shall have been resumed in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PENDLETON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, the question being on the amendment of the Senate in reference to the coastwise slave trade.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I believe that in 1808 all our foreign slave trade was abolished. That did not destroy our foreign commerce. If we should abolish the coastwise slave trade I do not think our coasting trade would be in any very great danger.

Mr. COX. I would like to have the eighth and ninth sections of the act read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment, and it was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PENDLETON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the Senate amendments to House bill No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with a recommendation that some of the amendments be concurred in and that some be non-concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield for some two amendments to be offered.

PROPOSITION AS TO RECESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that this evening's recess be dispensed with.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered. The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 64, not voting 62; as follows:

Steele, Stevens, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chauler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dumont, Eckley, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Hutchins, William Johnson, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Law, Loan, Long, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, William H. Miller, Morrill, Nelson, Odell, Patterson, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, Voorhees, Ward, Williams, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—62.

So the evening session was not dispensed with.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PENDLETON asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. McDowell, on account of sickness in his family, and stated that Mr. McDowell was paired with Mr. McIndoe.

Mr. LOAN asked and obtained leave of absence for the rest of the session for Mr. Anderson.

Mr. HOLMAN asked and obtained like leave of absence for Mr. HARRINGTON, who was paired.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. FENTON asked and obtained an order to have Senate bill No. 232 printed, with a view to its being acted on to-morrow.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MALLORY. I now offer to the bill the amendment which I sought to offer in committee.

Mr. STEVENS. The amendments of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Kentucky being in, I demand the previous question upon the Senate amendments.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the recommendations of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be adopted on all the amendments except those on which a separate vote shall be asked.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS and Mr. MALLORY demanded separate votes upon their amendments.

The SPEAKER stated the question to be first upon the amendment of Mr. Brooks, which was to strike out the thirtieth amendment of the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the joint committee on ventilation be authorized to execute some plan for increasing the ventilation of the two Houses of Congress not involving a change in their structure, and that the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, to carry into effect any plan that may be agreed upon by the committee aforesaid or by a sub-committee thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. That amendment makes an appropriation, and is not in order to be offered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order on the ground that it is germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the consent of the House to continue the session until this bill has been disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock.

NEW YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HULBURD, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the members of the committee on public expenditures who have hitherto conducted the New York custom-house investigation have leave to sit during the recess of Congress for the purpose of taking testimony, with the same powers and authority as heretofore possessed by said committee in said investigation.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SCHENCK. I send up the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its adoption:

Resolved, That all subjects before the House of Representatives at the close of the present session, including those before the committees, shall be continued to the next session, and shall then be proceeded with in the same manner as though no adjournment had taken place; and papers which have been referred to committees, and may be in their possession at the close of the session, shall be returned informally to the Clerk of the House and by him restored to committees when appointed at the next session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is not that already provided for by the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. Under the present rule it is substantially provided for. Rule 136, found on page 33 of Barclay's Digest, embraces all that is embraced in the gentleman's resolution, except House resolutions referred to committees.

Mr. BROOKS. Then I will object to the gentleman's resolution.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 151, relating to enlistments, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I withdraw the motion to reconsider to report the bill back with various amendments.

If it be the pleasure of the House, instead of having the amendments read I can abridge the labor very much by explaining the amendments, the printed bill being in the hands of gentlemen. The bill as originally introduced and passed in the Senate was a bill to promote enlistments in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes. It came to the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, where it has been amended from time to time. It has now become necessary to strike out several of the sections of the bill for the reason that the Senate at one time and another have incorporated nearly everything in the original bill as amendments to other bills. We strike out the first section of this bill as it has been already passed, I believe, in the very words in the Army appropriation bill. It provides that—

All enlistments hereafter made in the regular Army of the United States, during the continuance of the present rebellion, shall be for the term of three years.

The second section has also been passed in the soldiers' pay bill. It provides that—

All non-commissioned officers and privates in the regular Army serving under enlistments made prior to July 22, 1861, shall have the privilege of reenlisting for the term of three years in their respective organizations until the 1st of May next; and all such non-commissioned officers and privates so reenlisting shall be entitled to the bounties mentioned in the joint resolution of Congress approved January 13, 1864.

The third section has also been passed in the soldiers' pay bill. It provides that—

Officers absent from duty, with leave, for a period not exceeding ten days, shall be entitled to receive full pay and allowances for such period; and so much of section thirty-one of the "Act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, as is inconsistent herewith, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

It passed providing that the aggregate absence of an officer, with leave, should not be more than thirty days in any one year.

The fourth section provides that—

Section thirty-five of the "Act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, shall not be construed to prohibit enlisted men at the Military Academy from receiving the extra pay theretofore allowed by law to enlisted men when employed at constant labor of not less than ten days, nor to apply to enlisted men employed as clerks and messengers in the military offices in Washington and at the several geographical division and department headquarters.

Those four sections having all been the subject of legislation are stricken out.

Then comes the section we propose to insert in reference to the battalion of engineers. It provides that—

The officer in command of the battalion of engineers in the regular Army be allowed the pay and emoluments of a lieutenant colonel of engineers, and that there be allowed to the said battalion one adjutant, one quartermaster and commissary of subsistence, to be selected from the lieutenants on duty with the battalion, with the same compensation as is allowed to regimental quartermasters and adjutants respectively.

I will explain that in a few words. There were four companies of engineer soldiers in the old or regular Army, consisting of one hundred and fifty men each, and one company of one hundred men for the topographical engineers. By the legislation of last session the topographical engineers and the engineers proper were brought together to make a battalion. There being one hundred and fifty men in the engineer companies and only one hundred men in the topographical company we have provided in the third section of the substitute that—

The President shall be authorized to recruit the fifth company of said battalion of engineers, which was transferred from the topographical engineers, up to the full number of the other companies of the battalion, being a maximum of one hundred and fifty men to the company.

The battalion will then consist of five companies of one hundred and fifty men each, and it is provided that the commander of that battalion of seven hundred and fifty men shall have the pay and emoluments of a lieutenant colonel. That is only fair and just.

The next section of the bill provides that—

There shall be added to the battalion of engineers one sergeant major and one quartermaster sergeant, who shall also be commissary sergeant, and each shall have the pay of a sergeant of engineers.

We propose to strike that out, it already having become a law in the soldiers' pay bill.

The Senate bill next provides that—

In addition to the cavalry, infantry, and artillery provided for by the act approved July 22, 1861, "to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," there be added regiments of volunteer engineers in the proportion, as the President may direct, not to exceed one company to each brigade of infantry, and to be organized or established by existing regulations, have the same pay and allowance of engineers in the regular Army, and be subject to the rules and articles of war.

The Committee on Military Affairs propose to strike that out. It proposes to raise a company of engineers for each brigade of infantry. There are now three or four hundred brigades of infantry in our armies, and that would authorize the raising of four hundred companies of engineers, which would be equivalent to forty regiments of men, who are to be paid higher than any other branch of the service. We did not think that forty regiments of engineers were necessary. In lieu of the Senate bill we have provided in the substitute that—

The President shall be authorized to raise regiments of volunteer engineers, not exceeding in all ten regiments, including those now in service and already authorized by law, which regiments shall be organized in the same manner as is provided by existing laws and regulations for engineer regiments, and put upon the same footing as to pay and allowances: Provided, however, That the officers and soldiers of such regiments of engineers shall be exercised in infantry tactics and drill, and may be employed at any time at the discretion of the general commanding in the field to serve as infantry.

The next section of the substitute provides that—

For the performance of topographical and such other duties as by their commanding officers shall be required of them, the President is authorized to appoint the following staff officers to serve during the existing rebellion: for each division in the field, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry; for each corps in the field, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a major of cavalry; and for each army in the field, consisting of more than one Army corps, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry, and all with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry; the engineer officers thus provided for to be appointed by the President, on the recommendation of the commander of the army to which they are first assigned, from the Army or from civil life, in the same manner as heretofore provided by law for the appointment of aids-de-camp to a corps commander, and any enlisted man so appointed shall be discharged by such promotion.

The next section provides—

That commanding officers may detail from their commands such non-commissioned officers and privates, as draught-men and assistants to their engineers, as they may deem necessary, who shall receive, while on such duty, the pay and allowances authorized by law to sergeants of engineers: Provided, That no engineer shall be entitled to more than three and no corps engineer to more than four such assistants.

This whole subject of the engineer corps was thoroughly considered, and consultation was had with the head of that corps and the Secretary of War. The committee concluded to limit the force, as I have already shown, to ten regiments, those to include the regiments already authorized; and it is deemed sufficient to increase the number to ten regiments instead of swelling the whole number to about forty regiments, as provided by the Senate amendment.

Mr. HALE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the language of the fifth section. It reads as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the performance of topographical and such other duties as by their commanding officers shall be required of them, the President is hereby authorized to appoint the following staff officers to serve during the existing rebellion: for each division in the field, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry; for each corps in the field, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a major of cavalry; and for each army in the field, consisting of more than one Army corps, one engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry, and all with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry; the engineer officers thus provided for to be appointed by the President, on the recommendation of the commander of the army to which they are first to be assigned, from the Army or from civil life, in the same manner as heretofore provided by law for the appointment of aids-de-camp to a corps commander, and any enlisted man so appointed shall be discharged by such promotion.

I think the words "and all with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry" must be a mistake, and that the words ought to be struck out.

Mr. SCHENCK. They are evidently a misprint, and ought to be struck out. I make that motion.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out section two.

Section two was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be added to the battalion of engineers one sergeant major and one quartermaster sergeant, who shall also be commissary sergeant, and each shall have the pay of a sergeant of engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WHEELER, from the committee of conference on the bill (S. No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first amendment of the House.

That the Senate agree to the second amendment of the House, amended so as to read as follows: in section one, strike out all after the word "west" where it last occurs in line twenty-five down to and including the word "west" in line twenty-nine, and the House agree to the same as amended.

That the Senate agree to the third and fourth amendments of the House.

That the House recede from its fifth, sixth, and seventh amendments.

That the Senate agree to the eighth amendment of the House, with the following amendment, to wit: strike out all after the words "provided further that," and in lieu thereof insert "no person shall be allowed to subscribe for more than $15,000," and the House agree to the same as amended.

That the Senate agree to the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth amendments of the House.

That the Senate and House agree to the amendment striking out the words "ninety working days" in section seventeen, and inserting in lieu thereof "four months."

L. M. MORRILL,

B. F. WADE,

W. T. WILLEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. PATTERSON,

J. G. BLAINE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would inquire of the gentleman how the conference committee have regulated the matter in reference to allowing colored persons to ride on the cars.

Mr. WHEELER. That is just as the House left it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How is it in reference to commutation?

Mr. WHEELER. That is as the House left it. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the report was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to so much of the second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out the fifth section of the bill, and agree to so much of the said amendment.

That the Senate recede from so much of their said second amendment as proposes to strike out the sixth section of the bill.

B. F. WADE,

W. T. WILLEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. PRICE,

E. B. WASHBURN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will explain in a word the report of the conference committee. The provision of the bill to which the Senate first disagreed was that which required the company to run its cars on Sunday. The Senate struck that provision out and inserted in its place a provision that there shall be no exclusion of persons from the cars on account of color, making the bill conform in that regard to that which has just passed the House under the report of a committee of conference in reference to the Metropolitan Railroad Company.

Mr. HALE. Does this report change the provision requiring the company to run cars on Sundays?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The committee of conference agree to strike that out and to insert in lieu of it a provision that colored persons shall not be excluded from the cars, making this bill conform precisely to that just passed under the report of a committee of conference.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. There was no disagreement on that point between the Senate and the House in the bill referred to, and consequently the committee of conference could not reach that point.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I saw there was no disagreement. The House has just passed a bill, by concurring in the report of the conference committee made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WHEELER,] providing that colored people shall not be excluded; and I am happy to find that my friends on the other side are found now in favor of such a measure.

Mr. COX. This side of the House never voted that way.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I desire to correct the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York [Mr. STEELE] was on the committee and I will certainly yield to him after I get through.

Mr. COX. I want to understand the first point.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If my friend from Ohio will be quiet for a moment I will explain it so that even he, I think, can understand it.

Mr. COX. I want to understand it before you pass from this point. Do I understand that you have struck out the clause requiring the company to run their cars on Sundays?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. And inserted another clause in reference to colored people? I understood the gentleman to say that only colored people can ride on Sundays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I presume the gentleman can have no objection to that, as he has just voted for a bill permitting colored people to ride in the cars.

Mr. COX. I never voted for it in my life, and I will vote now to table this report.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The fifth section provided that the route of the railroad past the east front of the Capitol should be changed, and that the cars should in future run round two sides of the square. This section was struck out by the Senate, and the committee of conference agree to that.

The last difference was in the sixth section, which simply provided that the company should commute its tickets, selling twenty-five for one dollar. This was considered a just provision, and it is one that was inserted in the Metropolitan railroad bill just passed. It was considered right and proper that a franchise of such immense wealth and making so much money should commute. It was not thought that that would be onerous on the company, as the number of passengers who would purchase tickets would not be very large in comparison with the whole number of passengers.

In regard to this provision about running the cars on Sundays, it was not considered a matter of any importance whatever, because the railroad company has, with the permission of the city authorities, put the cars on and run them on Sundays. I was in favor of that permission, and should be in favor of it if the company had not already, under the existing charter, put on the cars on Sundays. Now I will hear the gentleman from New York, [Mr. STEELE.]

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I should not have detained the House with any remarks, although I am opposed to this bill in its present form and hope it will be laid on the table, except for the unfairness of the gentleman from Illinois in stating that this side of the House had just voted for the clause that there should be no distinction on account of color.

Now, if the gentleman had examined the other bill which has just been acted on, and the report of the committee of conference on it, he would have found that that subject was not committed to the conference committee at all. Both Houses had agreed upon that subject, and consequently the report of the conference committee would not have interfered with that subject in any way whatever.

This bill has been agreed to by the conference committee in such a way as to yield substantially everything the House claimed. We might as well have had no committee of conference at all. The only points which were regarded by the House as of any importance have been insisted on by the Senate committee and have been yielded by the House committee. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

Mr. DRIGGS. I understand the provision allowing the cars to run on Sunday passed this House by an overwhelming majority, while that provision was stricken out in the Senate by a majority of only one, on a very small vote; and I think the House committee would have been right in insisting, as the feeling was so preponderating here and so nearly equally divided in the Senate, on the Senate concurring in the action of the House. I would prefer that the whole bill should be rejected than to adopt this report, and I move to lay the bill and report on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor, and the motion cannot therefore be made at this time without his consent.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York took his seat; several gentlemen rose and among them the gentleman from Michigan, who was recognized. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois has a right to retain the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not probably hear the Chair when he recognized the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair inquired of the gentleman from Illinois whether he yielded the floor to the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman from Illinois made no reply, and the Chair supposing silence implied consent allowed the gentleman from Michigan to go on.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I certainly understood the gentleman from Illinois in closing his remarks to say, "I now yield the floor to the gentleman from New York," and then to take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Illinois to give up his right to the floor. The gentleman knows that it is not the custom for the gentleman having charge of the bill on which he intends to move the previous question to give up his right to the floor.

The Chair decides that the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to know whether the rate of fare was changed in the original bill?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The sixth section of this bill requires that the company shall sell tickets at the rate of twenty-five for one dollar. It was thought that would not work a very great hardship upon the company, and that it would be a great favor to the poor people of the city, mechanics and others, who have to travel from one end of the city to the other in going to their daily avocations. The Senate, however, inserted an amendment allowing the company to charge an addition of two cents upon every passenger for a transfer ticket, probably about one third of the whole number of passengers.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the gentleman will yield to me I desire to make one or two remarks.

Mr. HIGBY. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will first be allowed to finish his statement of what the committee have done.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe I have stated the action of the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to know what the action of the committee was in respect to the running of the cars on Sunday—whether they abandoned that?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I seem to have been very unfortunate in making myself understood. I stated that the committee abandoned that for the reason that the company already have the right to run on Sunday and are running under the present law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to know whether the adoption of this report would not stop their running on Sunday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Of course not; why should it?

Mr. SCHENCK. I made the inquiry because I think the subject is one of importance. As far as I am concerned I would require them to put on twice the usual number on Sunday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am asked by a gentleman on my left whether we have allowed the company to charge two cents additional for transfer tickets. Not at all; we have required them to sell twenty-five tickets for one dollar. The Senate put in a provision allowing the company to charge two cents additional for the transfer, but the committee did not allow it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understood that the introduction and passage by the House of the bill requiring the cars to be run on Sunday was considered by the company as instructions; that they would not otherwise have commenced running on that day. Now if we disagree to the Senate amendments and do not compel them to do it, they will drop back into their old practice. Those who want to go to church or have a breath of fresh air cannot be gratified.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio knows well enough that this company has the right to run on Sunday.

Mr. SCHENCK. But they have never done it until we took action on the subject. When this amendment was introduced and the House passed it they considered that an instruction to them. They had the power before, but they never ran the cars on Sunday. They only commenced running them when we passed this amendment; and if we now pass the bill in this shape they will consider it an instruction to them not to run on Sunday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In order that the House may have an opportunity of deciding on the question, I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio to move that the House further insists on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and asks for another committee of conference.

Mr. SCHENCK. I make that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Chair whether the municipalities of Washington and Georgetown have granted to this company the right to run on Sunday?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order, the previous question having been called, and the Chair can only answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I declare that they have not given this company any such authority.

Mr. COX. I move that the report of the committee of conference be laid upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 31.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the report of the committee of conference was laid upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. COX moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and Cox, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 21.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER stated that the question recurred on the following amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] to the civil appropriation bill:

That the joint committee on ventilation be authorized to execute some plan for increasing the ventilation of the two Houses of Congress, not involving a change in their structure, and that the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry into effect any plan that may be agreed upon by the committee as aforesaid or by a sub-committee thereof.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 50.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I now submit the amendment which I had unanimous consent to offer.

Add:

Provided, That negro testimony shall only be taken in the United States courts in those States the laws of which authorize such testimony.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 57.

Mr. MALLORY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 66, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Bliss, Brooks, William G. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate, which was to add the following proviso:

Provided, That in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion on account of color, nor in civil action because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in

So the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. L. MYERS stated that Mr. KELLEY was paired off with Mr. ODELL.

Mr. FARNSWORTH stated that Mr. J. C. ALLEN was paired off with Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. INGERSOLL stated that Mr. MORRISON was paired off.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes taken on the Senate amendments; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment to the bill, and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes. As the report is lengthy I will not ask to have it read, but I will make a statement of what has been done by the committee of conference, and then if gentlemen desire to ask any questions upon any point I will answer as far as I am able.

One of the first amendments upon which the two Houses disagreed was that in relation to wood screws. The internal tax levied upon that article was 10 per cent. or 5 per cent. higher than upon anything else save jewelry. The Senate, therefore, saw fit to raise the tariff upon them to something like 2½ or 3 cents per pound. The tariff was fixed in the House on the idea of a tax of only 5 per cent. per pound. The conference committee agreed to reduce the amount 1 cent per pound.

The amendment of the Senate on old scrap iron was $7 in lieu of $9 per ton. The conference committee agreed upon $8. The Senate amendments in relation to wool were all agreed to with one single exception. Their amendment in relation to scoured wool placed the duty at four times the rate provided for other wool. It was fixed at three times.

The Senate amendment increasing the duty upon silk, singles, tram, thrown, and organzine, was reduced from 40 to 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The Senate amendment striking out the exception of raw silk to the 10 per cent. addition upon goods the production of places east of the Cape of Good Hope when imported from places west of the Cape of Good Hope was not agreed to, but the provision was left so that raw silk, singles, tram, thrown, and organzine, and raw cotton were excepted from the general rule of 10 per cent. addition upon all goods imported from other and different places than those of their growth east of the Cape of Good Hope.

Quite a number of the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in for the purpose of inserting other articles not enumerated in the bill. Those articles have been inserted and a duty provided for them; such as paints, carmine dyes, percussion caps, artificial flowers, wooden toys, and other articles.

On the subject of spices it will be recollected that the Senate struck out all the increase of duties made by the House. The committee of conference agreed to a slight increase on all the present rates, but not so much as was in the original bill. On cassia, cinnamon, cloves, there is an increase of 5 cents per pound, and on nutmegs the duty is increased 20 cents per pound, on mace 10 cents, on pepper and pimento 3 cents.

The reduction on statutory marble made by the Senate is acquiesced in by the committee of conference, striking out the 25 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the specific duty.

In regard to rice we agreed to a duty of 2½ cents a pound on clean rice, 2 cents on uncleaned rice, and 1½ cents on paddy.

The one hundred and fifty-eighth section, inserted by the Senate, allowing cans, carboys, and casks when exported to be returned free of duty, was amended by providing that it should be subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

There are two additional sections in place of the last section which was struck out. The section providing for samples being deposited with consuls abroad was not agreed to, it being believed that such a plan would be attended with infinite difficulty and would embarrass business. That was therefore abandoned, and two other sections were agreed to, in which I think the sense of the House will concur. One of these allows persons coming here from abroad to deposit such portion of the baggage as may be liable to duty with the collector, and to receive it back on his departure without paying duty upon it. This will relieve travelers coming here for temporary purposes by giving them the privilege of leaving the dutiable part of their baggage, if any such they have, with the custom-house officers, and receiving it again exempt from the payment of any duty.

Another section was added requiring all of the weights and measures of merchandise when imported to be the same as are used in the countries from whence the goods are brought. This is to produce uniformity. It is generally practiced by merchants now, but there are some exceptions. It was thought advisable there should be entire uniformity.

If gentlemen desire any further information in respect to any item in the bill I will answer any question so far as I can.

Mr. BROOKS. I would like to hear these two last sections of the bill read.

The Clerk read the sections. The first enacts that where officers of the customs or other salaried officers of the United States shall have been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect the license rules and regulations provided by the fifth section of the act of July 13, 1861, such officer shall be entitled to receive $1,000 per annum for his services under that act in addition to his salary or compensation under any other law, provided that the aggregate compensation of any such officer shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year. The other section provides that any luggage or personal effects of a person arriving in the United States in transit to any foreign country may be delivered by the parties having it in charge to the collector of customs, to be by him retained, without payment or exaction of any import duty, and be delivered back to such parties on their departure for their foreign destination, under such rules, regulations, and fees as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. BROOKS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont what are his views in reference to this luggage section.

Mr. MORRILL. It refers merely to articles that are subject to duty.

Mr. BROOKS. That is, he may make a mistake by bringing articles that he supposes to be free.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir. I am desired to state what the action was in regard to salt. The Senate had reduced the duty below even the present rate. It was agreed by the committee of conference to restore the duties so that they shall be what they are at the present time, which will be an increase on the tariff of 1861 just equal to the amount of internal tax imposed on salt.

I am also asked to state what the action was in relation to brimstone. The Senate receded from their amendment upon that, leaving it as passed by the House, $6 upon the crude article and $10 upon the refined. It was found that if we raised the duty upon brimstone at all there were more than twenty articles upon which the duties would also have to be increased—such as chromate of lead, nitrate of potash, nitrate of soda, and various other chemical articles.

Mr. Speaker, this is among the last bills upon which the House will be called to act in relation to taxation. I desire to say a word or two in order to give expression to my own confidence, at least, that this House has done all that duty requires in relation to taxation. The tariff bill, as now agreed upon, will largely increase the revenue upon tea, adding a duty of 5 cents, which puts a duty of 25 cents in lieu of 20 cents per pound. It will also increase it upon iron, upon spirits, upon wine, upon crockery and china-ware of every description, upon spices, and upon various other articles. There is no sort of question that upon all these articles this tariff will very largely increase the revenue. I believe I am not generally over-sanguine in my estimates relating to the result of financial measures, and I venture to say that the amount of increase that will be received upon this bill, over and above what would have been received under previous legislation, will be not less than fifteen to twenty million dollars.

It may be supposed that some of these duties are prohibitory, but I do not think there are many such, if any, for the reason that we tax our own people on the production of similar articles. Take, for instance, the article of iron; the cost of its production has been very largely increased from the scarcity and price of labor and also from the internal tax which we impose, and so with nearly every article of manufactures. The cost of production from various causes has thus been so largely increased that it will be impossible for our manufacturers to continue their business if the duty upon foreign merchandise was not largely augmented. I believe, therefore, there is no doubt but this bill will largely increase the revenue derived from imports.

In the next place, in relation to the internal tax bill we have sought out many new sources of revenue. The whole business of the country is made tributary to the Treasury of the Government. In addition to the taxes we have heretofore imposed upon railroads we have added a tax upon all freights of lake, river, and coast, of vessels, canals, and steamboats; all of these have to contribute a certain percentage from their gross receipts. Not a passenger or a pound of freight will now be taken without toll to the Government. In the next place, we have increased the duty upon iron so that I believe we shall collect under this bill more than four times what we collected under the last bill.

We have increased the duty upon tobacco, snuff, and cigars so that we shall collect somewhere about three times as much as was levied under the former law, and have so much improved the machinery that we shall realize not less than six times the amount heretofore actually collected. We have increased the duties upon liquors so that we shall collect something like ten times as much in the end and seven and a half times as much at once as we have collected heretofore. We have largely increased the duties upon molasses, sugar, and cotton. The duty of 2 cents upon cotton alone will yield a large sum. We also provide for a large increase upon the subject of licenses, not only increasing the number but increasing the amount—requiring a license upon almost every description of business transacted. The $1 upon the sales of wholesale dealers for every $1,000 in excess of $50,000 will immensely increase the revenue. Besides all this we have a general sweeping clause in relation to licenses, so that every man whose receipts amount to $1,000, be he whom he may, working-man, trader, miner, or professional man, is to contribute something for the support of the Government.

Then we have very largely increased the amount of the revenue we are to receive from stamps, both in their amount and scope enlarging and increasing. Even the little article of friction matches may be expected to add over a million dollars to the revenue. We have also increased the amount we are to receive upon ale and beer from 60 cents to $1 a barrel.

We have provided for largely increasing the revenue to be derived from banks. Every bank in the country, whether national or State, will contribute hereafter 1 per cent. upon its circulation, a half of 1 per cent. upon its deposits, and a half of 1 per cent. upon its capital. In addition to that, for the purpose of keeping the circulation of the banks within bounds, we levy a further tax of 2 per cent. upon all circulation above 90 per cent. of their capital. We also levy a tax upon all their circulation beyond the average of the past six months. This will very largely increase the amount of revenue to be received by the Government. Then we have included several other corporations not included before, such as turnpike companies. And we have increased the tax upon express companies, the business of which is prosperous, and they are sure to make good returns.

In addition to that we have not only included a tax upon legacies of personal property, but we have included tax upon successions, so that every estate which now passes from a deceased person, whether by will or otherwise, is sure to contribute something to the revenue of the country.

We have also increased the income tax, increasing it in amount, and, by the way, providing a law that can be more completely executed. And let me say here that there was some defect in the law, or those who executed it were not efficient, or we should have received a larger amount of revenue from this source than we have. I know of one man who has been forced to pay within the last few weeks $55,000 on one article manufactured in the city of New York, it having been found that he had defrauded the Government of that sum. On further search it was discovered that he had not paid enough and he was compelled to pay $14,000 more, and while this examination was going on he tried to defraud the Government of $1,100 more, which he has also been compelled to pay. This man first returned, under oath, an income of $25,000, and when he was hard pushed by the revenue officers he returned, under oath, an income of $113,000. If the provision now incorporated in relation to income be faithfully executed there will be a heavy increase of the revenue from this source.

Mr. Speaker, all these subjects were thoroughly and fairly considered. I will say that they were fairly considered by the House as a whole. And I think that we shall raise by this bill, when fairly in operation, not less than $1,000,000 a day for every day in the year, Sunday included, so that we can retire "greenbacks" to that extent from the time these measures go into effect, or soon after. When that is done I shall look to see our credit put upon a firm foundation. I desire to say for one, as a member of this House, as an American, that we shall pay every dollar of our debt; that any man who takes the Government bonds is just as sure of his pay as he would be with a mortgage of $100 on the best estate of $10,000 in the country.

Mr. Speaker, when this is done if a succeeding Congress finds it necessary they can raise other taxes. I wish to say that the resources of the country are yet wholly untouched. Why, sir, our first tax bill raising $100,000,000 was, if I may be allowed the expression, but a flea bite. If need be we could pay our war expenses dollar by dollar as we go. We have accumulated a large amount of material, and I do not think that we shall be likely hereafter to employ so large an army as heretofore; we have already driven the enemy into much narrower limits and fewer men will be required; but if necessary to increase our receipts we have vast resources now wholly untouched. We have scarcely touched a single agricultural production as yet—nothing that I remember with the exception of cotton, sugar, and tobacco; and when it comes to that we can find a vast number of articles subject to tax and a proper tax, especially if my friend from New York [Mr. WARD] will consent to a repeal of the reciprocity treaty.

Mr. COX. I would like to know how much we will raise by this increased tax and how much by other increased duties on imports.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not entered into a calculation for that. For the last few weeks I have not kept track of our importations or of the duties collected. The 50 per cent. joint resolution will, I presume, diminish the amount of revenue we shall receive this year. That is my judgment. If it had not been for that my computation would have been $100,000,000.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to ask the gentleman a question. There are rumors that the Committee of Ways and Means are likely to ask for an additional tax of $100,000,000. Is there any truth in that?

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I know there is not.

Mr. STEVENS. Since my friend has been speaking documents have come to the Committee of Ways and Means asking for $85,000,000. Whether the committee will report it or not is another question.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me ask the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania if the source from whence that income is to be derived is recommended.

Mr. STEVENS. The sources are designated.

Mr. BROOKS. Is one source the real estate of the country?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think that is mentioned among them. I have not looked over the papers except while my colleague has been speaking.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the committee taken any action on that subject?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think the committee have come to any conclusion upon the subject. The committee have as yet no information in their possession.

Mr. MORRILL. I am fully confident that the measures we have already perfected will place the finances of the country in a sound and substantial condition.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Have the committee acted upon that question at all?

Mr. STEVENS. They have not. The communication only came in since I have been sitting here.

Mr. COX. I want to know how much the gentleman would probably, in his estimates, deduct from the amount to be raised by this tariff in consequence of the passage of the 50 per cent. resolution, as it is called.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not watched the amount of importation and the amount paid since the resolution went into effect, and therefore am not able to give him the statistics.

I call the previous question upon the report.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, and request a committee of conference of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

HARBOR DEFENSES.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending 30th June, 1865.

First amendment:

Strike out the following:

For sea-wall of Great Brewster's island, $40,000; for repairs of sea-walls on Deer and Lovell's islands, $10,000.

The committee of conference recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Strike out the following:

For repairs of sea-wall at Buffalo, $37,500.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend concurrence.

Mr. GANSON. I hope the House will non-concur. This is precisely such a case as that of Massachusetts. The appropriation is recommended by the Secretary of War, and it is a matter of absolute necessity for the protection of that harbor and the general benefit of the West. We have nothing now which we can export but the products of the West, and a large portion of that comes through the harbor of Buffalo.

The breach in this wall was made in January last, and the engineer who examined the work says there is danger that the balance of the wall will be destroyed by the first storm. We have made an appropriation of $250,000 for the benefit of the lakes and of the sea-coast, but that appropriation will not be sufficient to do the necessary work.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the citizens of Buffalo have been obliged to raise a fund from private sources for the purpose of protecting that wall.

Mr. GANSON. Certainly they have; but this appropriation is for the Government property, and the citizens of Buffalo have no right to go there to make permanent repairs.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

On page 21, after the word "dollars" insert the following: For land defenses of San Francisco, $177,000: Provided, That no portion of the same shall be expended on fortifications now in progress there.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the several votes upon the Senate amendments; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. STEVENS moved that the House insist upon its disagreement to the several amendments of the Senate, and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that bills be taken up for reference only.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object. The question was taken on Mr. WILSON's motion, and it was agreed to.

OVERLAND MAIL CONTRACT.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to concur with the amendments of the Senate; and I move the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will not press the previous question until we are heard on this matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his demand for the previous question?

Mr. ALLEY. I will withdraw it for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a question of much importance and in which there is a great fraud, and I wish to be heard on it.

Mr. ALLEY. I think the matter is very well understood.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand it very well, but I do not think the House does.

Mr. ALLEY. If the gentleman wants any explanation—

Mr. STEVENS. No. I want to give some explanation.

Mr. ALLEY. It is a bill to authorize the Postmaster General—

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, I know very well what it does.

Mr. ALLEY. I do not like to refuse to allow members to speak on this question, but I think it is a matter which the House understands.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I will move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ALLEY. This matter was fully discussed in the House the other day, and if the proposition is right in itself I think that all will agree that the Senate amendments are very proper and should be concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. It is not right in itself.

Mr. ALLEY. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated the other day that it was not right in itself, but he failed to convince the House of that. The House decided against his view of the case by a very large majority, as I believe it would do now on a discussion of the case.

The amendments adopted by the Senate are such as the House will agree to, and I think that the gentleman himself [Mr. STEVENS] will make no objection whatever to them. His objection lies to the original proposition that has passed the House by a very large majority on a full, thorough, and fair discussion. For one, I should be exceedingly glad now to discuss the whole question; and I think I could convince every disinterested man in the House that by the adoption of this proposition the Government will save at least a million dollars. But I do not think that it is worth while to consume the time of the House at this late stage of the session on a proposition which is so well understood, which has been so thoroughly discussed, on which the House has already decided by so large a majority, and which the Senate adopted by an almost unanimous vote, adding to it these amendments. Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to ask me any question—

Mr. STEVENS. I want to discuss this matter. The other day the gentleman refused to allow discussion and moved the previous question.

Mr. ALLEY. Not at all. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STEVENS. And when I asked for a postponement of the matter till Monday he refused it. I think the evidence shows it to be a fraud from beginning to end. I do not mean to say that the gentleman knows it to be so.

Mr. ALLEY. I stated to the House at the time my convictions of what would take place; and the result of the whole thing has proved that all I stated was correct.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman stated it before a bid was opened, and I want to know how he happened to know about it. Unless there is an opportunity to amend this bill I hope it will be laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not insist upon the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he has some information upon this subject which is not in the possession of the House, and I think he should have the opportunity to give it. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. ALLEY. Certainly, I will withdraw the demand. So far as I am concerned I would desire above all things to discuss this question most fully. Notwithstanding the assertion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I think I can establish most clearly to the satisfaction of the House that he is entirely mistaken in this matter. My only object in declining to yield the floor for the purpose of going into a general discussion was to save the time of the House, and not because I declined at all to avoid a full and fair discussion. The bill has been considered very fully in the House; it was discussed fully in the Senate, and received the almost unanimous assent of that body. The House also passed it by a very large majority, although opposition was made at the time by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The amendments of the Senate are, I think, a decided improvement upon the original proposition, and I think every gentleman here will concur with me in that opinion. I now give way to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. I cannot yield for the purpose of having an amendment offered.

Mr. STEVENS. If I cannot have the floor with full rights to it I do not desire it at all.

Mr. ALLEY. If the gentleman will allow his amendment to be read the House can judge of its propriety.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will not hear my amendment unless he will yield the floor for me to offer it and speak upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to yield the floor.

Mr. ALLEY. Yes, sir, I will yield the floor and hear what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has to say.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to substitute the following for the first amendment of the Senate:

Provided, That the lowest bidder at the recent letting shall decline or refuse within twenty days after the passage of this act to enter into a contract, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the said mail service.

Mr. ALLEY. I have no objection to that amendment being offered, and if I cannot convince the House that it would be a most unwise policy to adopt it I will not quarrel with the decision.

Mr. STEVENS. Now, sir, when this bill was up before it was some days before the bids had been opened. There had been regular advertisement, and sealed bids had been received and were in the Department. Their contents were unknown to anybody in point of law before the gentleman introduced his bill. He brought before the House a bill to continue the contract with the present contractors another year at the old price of $1,000,000.

Mr. ALLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon if he will allow me to correct his statement; the price was $550,000.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, sir, it was the old price.

Mr. ALLEY. It was, but not $1,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS. It was $1,000,000 in the first place, but it was finally arranged to send a portion of the mail around by water, and I believe $150,000 which was deducted from the overland contractors was paid for sending a portion of the mail by water. The gentleman's bill was to continue the contract with the same contractors for another year.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask the gentleman to allow me to correct his statement again. It was not for a year but for nine months. The contract was to continue from the 1st of October next to the 1st of July following.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well, it was to continue up to the time of the regular mail-letting. Well, sir, at that time I did not know that there was a single bid in. I knew the bill was an extraordinary one, I knew something of the contractors; I had information that a man from my town was to put in a bid, but I had no knowledge of any other bidder at that time, and I begged of the gentleman to allow the measure to be postponed until the Monday, following when the bids were to be opened. The gentleman did not think it proper, but said that the Government would have to pay $1,000,000 more by this postponement. I understand him now to change by saying that the Government can get it for half a million dollars less.

Mr. ALLEY. The gentleman will allow me to correct him again. I then said that the Government I thought would save several hundred thousand dollars, and perhaps a million. My judgment is that by the adoption of this joint resolution, if the Postmaster General shall act on it, we shall save a million dollars. I think I shall be able to show that, if not to his satisfaction, at least to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. At that time the House believed from what the gentleman said that unless we acted on it then, as everything was increasing in price, we would have to pay an enormous sum for carrying this mail at private contract. Hence he advocated giving it to the old contractor at the same price.

When the bids came to be opened it turned out that one of them, a responsible party from my own county, had offered to do it for $750,000, $100,000 less than the amount contained in the resolution. Another bidder, one of the sub-contractors for two thirds of the route, offered to do it for $820,000. Some days after the bids were opened somebody connected with the Post Office Department, with the authority of the Postmaster General no doubt, intimated to the lowest bidder at Lancaster that he had better withdraw his bid—that something was going on that would make it desirable. He telegraphed to the Department to withdraw his bid. In answer he received from the Department a notice dated Washington, June 15, 1864, the day after the bids were opened. I believe that it was the next day.

I may say here that by law no man is allowed to withdraw his bid after the bids have been opened. After that the sureties are liable if the contractor fails to fulfill the contract for all the damages that may be sustained in consequence.

After what I have stated took place Mr. Hiestand, the lowest bidder, received from the Post Office Department a communication that the Postmaster General had accepted his proposal under the advertisement of March 22, 1864, for carrying the United States mail from the 1st of October, 1864, to September 30, 1868, on route No. 42626, between Atchison, Kansas, and Folsom, in the State of California, at $750,000 a year, with celerity, certainty, and security.

Mr. ALLEY. The gentleman states that that was the day after the day on which the bids were opened. That letter was written the afternoon of the day that his proposal was accepted. The next morning a telegram was received from the party withdrawing his bid.

Mr. STEVENS. The advertisement was, I think, that they should be opened on the 13th. It does not make any difference. The bids ceased on the 14th.

Mr. ALLEY. They were received up to the morning of the 15th, and after the bids were opened this letter was sent to this party.

Mr. STEVENS. It does not make any difference. It goes on to say that the contract should be executed by himself and security, and sent on immediately. Service was to begin promptly on the 1st of October, whether the contract be executed or not. Mr. Hiestand, as soon as he received that notice from Assistant Postmaster General McLellan, wrote the following letter:

WASHINGTON, June 21, 1864.

DEAR SIR: Having received a notice from George W. McLellan, Esq., Second Assistant Postmaster, that I was the lowest bidder for the overland mail service, and that the same has been awarded to me for the sum of $750,000, I am here prepared to execute the necessary bonds for the performance of the service.

Awaiting your pleasure, respectfully yours, &c., JOHN A. HIESTAND.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR, Postmaster General.
Address No. 25 Willard's Hotel.

Now, sir, the Senate amended that after it went there authorizing it to be given to the old contractors at that price, or to any other responsible bidder. Now, there is but one responsible bidder for $820,000. This has been done when the lowest bidder has been notified that he will be held whether he gives bond or not. Is this thing to be got up for the benefit of these people in this way?

If, as the gentleman says, it can be taken for less, why was it not bid for at a less price? And if it cost more, Mr. Hiestand is notified that he will be held to his contract, whether he executes a new contract or not. He had given two sureties, and the three are worth more than all the difference between that bid and the sum at which it is now to be given away. I say this thing is extraordinary, unparalleled, unjust, and suspicious, to say the least of it.

I do not wish to detain the House long, but I do wish to have them understand exactly how this thing has been carried on. This legislation was not introduced because Mr. Hiestand declined to take the contract, because it was introduced weeks before. The bill passed this House before the bids were opened at all. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads refused to give time until the next Monday until the bids should be opened, because, he said, of the enormous losses which would be inflicted upon the Government if we did not pass it instantly; and it was rushed through on account of the known integrity of the gentleman and the reliance which could be put on his word. Had anybody else taken that course it would have been considered suspicious.

Mr. ALLEY. I did withdraw the previous question to allow the gentlemen from Pennsylvania to say what he desired to say. The House was convinced by the statements made, and it was upon the statements and arguments presented that the House pursued the course they did.

Mr. STEVENS. I only asked that the bill should be postponed until the following Monday, but the gentleman insisted that great wrong would be done the country unless the bill was passed then. I did not have the facts before me then, and did not know who had put in bids; but still I thought the proceedings strange. Nobody would know the bids if the matter was honestly conducted in the Department. Nobody had the right to suppose that the Government was going to lose anything, and to come here and say so, because the contract was not let, and the bids should have been a secret in fact to everybody.

I say this is a most alarming species of legislation, without regard to the question of the loss of fifty thousand or of a half million dollars. It is the most alarming species of legislation I have ever seen introduced into Congress, and I have seen very strange things here.

Mr. ALLEY. I hope I shall have the attention of the House to this matter for a few moments, for it is all in a nutshell. I will begin at the commencement and show the House the precise state of the case. It is very well known to the members of the House that this overland mail contract is a big one, that it requires a large outlay, and considerable time to arrange for the fulfillment of the contract. The Senate early in the session passed a bill which came to the House and was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House, authorizing the Postmaster General to contract with this overland company for four years upon the same terms that they had had it for the last four years. I thought, for one, that it was a very exorbitant sum to pay for the services rendered. I thought then, and I believe now, that those services can be rendered for less than half a million dollars and be amply remunerative to the contractors.

I have examined the subject most thoroughly, and have been over every item of expense with the parties in interest, with these contractors and with others, and I have listened patiently to all they had to say. I have made a multitude of figures in connection with estimates upon it, and I believe I know as much about it as any other person; and it is my deliberate and firm conviction that whoever gets this contract for $500,000 gets a contract which will be not only amply remunerative, but that he will make a large fortune out of it, upon a basis of anything like a sound currency. Therefore I was opposed to the Senate bill. In consequence of that Senate bill, and of the action of the House on this matter, a note was sent to the Postmaster General by a member of the Post Office Committee in the Senate, requesting him to withdraw the advertisement for a new contract on account of this pending legislation, and stating that the note was written by the authority of the Post Office Committee. The Postmaster General acted in good faith, as I believe, and in accordance with that request withdrew the advertisement. Some weeks subsequently to this a new advertisement was published soliciting new bids, and from conversation with parties in interest, parties who were original bidders under the former advertisement, from the dissatisfaction expressed by parties all around, and from the opinion of the Postmaster General, without any definite previous knowledge in reference to the bids, I became convinced that the Government would be placed in the power of a few individuals, and that unless some action were taken immediately, the prospect was that the Government would be obliged to pay $1,000,000 or more for this service for the next four years, which was not in my opinion worth half the money.

What was to be done? The business of the House was so blocked up for weeks and months that the Post Office Committee could not get in any report. I tried once, twice, thrice, and again to get in a report, but could not succeed. The time had almost expired. Under these circumstances, after conference with the Post Office Department, seeing the exact state of things, and knowing that the Government would be liable to be grossly cheated unless some action were taken, I did propose that action, and I begged the House to pass that joint resolution. The House listened attentively, was convinced by my reasons and arguments, notwithstanding the opposition of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, and adopted my proposition.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he did not know anything about the bids, and he resisted the measure. He told me in conversation that it should not be done; that friends of his were interested in the bids. He actually went so far as to say, although I supposed it was said ironically, that he himself had an interest in the matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I beg leave to say that I never said such a thing.

Mr. ALLEY. I did not suppose it was said in earnest. I supposed the gentleman was speaking ironically.

Mr. STEVENS. I never said so.

Mr. ALLEY. I supposed it was said in a Pickwickian sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir. I never said it at all.

Mr. ALLEY. Those who know the gentleman from Pennsylvania know very well that he is apt to speak in that way. I did not suppose that the gentleman had the slightest interest in it. Nevertheless, that was the reply he made to me when I went to him to induce him to withdraw his objection. He said, "Oh no, nothing of the kind. This is the best way."

Mr. STEVENS. When was this—before or after the opening of the bids?

Mr. ALLEY. This was at the time you made the objection to the joint resolution. I went and explained the matter to you and tried to convince you, but you would not listen to a word, and said that there were parties in interest whom you knew very well, and who were bidding.

Mr. STEVENS. That was after the bids were opened.

Mr. ALLEY. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. I never said such a word before, for I did not know a party that had bid.

Mr. ALLEY. Well, I did not suppose you did. It will be recollected by the House that the gentleman stated that the joint resolution should be postponed for a week. I said, "No, do not postpone it for a week, for then it will be too late. To-morrow or next day the time will expire; and if nothing is done previous to that time the Government will be bound to accept these bids, and it will be in the power of two or three individuals." I said that in my judgment some of them were straw bidders. I believe so now. I believe that the gentleman's constituent was a straw bidder. I think the reason why he came in subsequently was that he must have been bought off. It seems to me susceptible of no other reasonable solution; but, whether bought off or not, he saw he was in a very bad predicament, and that it was necessary for him to come forward and renew his bid to protect himself from the consequences of its withdrawal. He had telegraphed to the Department that he would not take the contract, and he afterwards found it necessary to come forward and offer to take it, and bring forward his sureties; for he was liable to be held for the difference between the amount of his bid and the amount which the Government might have to pay—the difference between $750,000 and $820,000, the next bid.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from all the information I can get, and I have talked with all the parties in interest, every one of them, that is my opinion of the state of the case. But no matter for that. Grant for the sake of argument that the parties all acted in perfect good faith, that they meant all they said, that they were not acting in collusion with each other, but were really in honorable competition with each other and intended everything just as it appears upon the record in perfect good faith; grant all that for the sake of argument, and how does the case stand? The overland mail company agree to carry the mail over this route for four years at $820,000 per year. This constituent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who by the way is a very responsible party, as I understand from the gentleman, though I am informed by very good authority that he has no such pecuniary responsibility as to warrant him in taking this contract—

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman inform me who is his authority for that statement?

Mr. ALLEY. You know the man, and I ask you if he is responsible. I will take your word for it.

Mr. STEVENS. I know a great many liars; but I should like to learn the man who is the gentleman's authority for that statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEY. I ask you whether you do not know that townsman of yours who made the bid?

Mr. STEVENS. I do know him as well as I know anybody else.

Mr. ALLEY. Now, will you state from your own personal knowledge—and of course that is sufficient for me; and if you state differently I will withdraw my statement—that the person who made this bid is a gentleman of such pecuniary responsibility as would warrant him in entering into a contract involving an outlay of $750,000?

Mr. STEVENS. I can promise the gentleman from Massachusetts that he is a man who would not undertake what he is not able to carry out; he is a man who was lately a senator in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and could obtain any amount of security required.

Mr. MOORHEAD. He is responsible; I will vouch for that.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. This man varies in politics from me, but I desire to state notwithstanding that fact that he could obtain security for $1,000,000 any day if he needed it, and that he will carry out everything he undertakes to do.

Mr. ALLEY. I will then take it for granted that that is all so. Then what are the facts in the case? These overland mail gentlemen agree to take this contract for $820,000 a year. This party from Pennsylvania agreed to take it for $750,000 a year. He then notified the Department that he could not take it, but subsequently came forward and offered to take it at $750,000 a year.

Mr. STEVENS. I thought the gentleman said the bid of the Overland Mail Company was $880,000.

Mr. ALLEY. No, $820,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I thought it was a sub-contractor who bid $820,000.

Mr. ALLEY. I refer to Mr. Halliday. He is the chief man in the concern, and he offered to take it for $820,000. This Pennsylvania, as I have said, offered to take it for $750,000 for four years. Now, as I have already stated, I believe that any man who gets the contract at $500,000 will make a fortune out of it.

Well, sir, the Government is now in a position, in view of all these circumstances and in consequence of the action of these parties, where it may pass this resolution as amended by the Senate without doing any injustice to anybody and without just complaint of dishonorable action from any one in the slightest degree. The question then arises, what is for the interest of the Government? Is it for the interest of the Government to give $615,000 for nine months, or $750,000 a year for four years for services, which, in my opinion, are not worth $500,000?

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a telegram from the postmaster of St. Joseph, Missouri, the eastern terminus of this overland route. This telegram was sent for another and entirely different purpose, and the party who received it showed it to me for another and different object, but it was so proper and pertinent in the case that I asked him to give me the original and retain a copy for himself, so that when the question came up I could, if it became necessary, read it to the House for the purpose of showing how much actual service was rendered for this sum of money. We are only receiving $75,000 net for what for four years we have been paying $1,000,000. Here is the telegram:

NEW YORK, June 17, 1854.

C. C. WOOLWORTH:
Average weight daily letters, one hundred and fifty pounds; franked, one hundred pounds; printed, nine hundred and fifty pounds. Letter by mail.

JOHN L. BITTENDER, Postmaster.

About nine hundred and fifty pounds is distributed in the Territories, and all the other mail matter is about one hundred and fifty pounds per day. So that the carrying of one hundred and fifty pounds of mail matter daily to California and one thousand pounds to the intervening points costs and has cost the Government for the last four years $850,000 per annum.

I say, sir, that the House ought to adopt the resolution and refuse to agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which, if adopted, gives this contract to his constituent at $750,000 per annum for four years, to carry to California such a small amount of mail matter. What I have stated agrees with the statistics at the Department and the information I have received from all quarters.

I think, under the circumstances, I have said enough to explain to the House the exact condition of things in reference to this matter. The only question is whether you will give $615,000 for nine months or $750,000 a year for four years. Such is the position of things that we cannot help ourselves sooner. One thing or the other has to be done. I say that it is better to give $615,000 for nine months than to give $750,000 each year for four years.

Mr. McBRIDE. I understand that this contract was advertised for in the month of August last. After being advertised for several months, the Postmaster General withdrew it with a view to legislation by Congress. Subsequently a new advertisement was issued and these bids were offered under that advertisement. Now, after that contract was offered to the lowest bidder, now nearly seven or eight months afterwards, it appears, according to the gentlemen and others, that this is an extraordinary compensation for this service.

Mr. ALLEY. I cannot yield any further. These points have been all gone over and over again, and I think they have been explained to the satisfaction of the House. I think that further discussion is unnecessary, and I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. McBRIDE moved that the whole subject be laid on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS's amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LE BLOND asked that leave of absence be granted to his colleagues Messrs. J. W. WHITE and McKINNEY.

There was no objection; and leave was granted accordingly.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

On motion of Mr. RICE, of Maine, the House took from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to an act (H. R. No. 255) granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia; and they were concurred in.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUARANTINE AND HEALTH LAWS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a draft of a bill for the more efficient execution of the third section of the act respecting quarantine and health laws. I ask unanimous consent to introduce that bill.

There was no objection, and the bill was introduced and read a first and second time. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or erect suitable warehouses and other conveniences for the storage of goods and merchandise imported in any vessel, subject to quarantine or other restraint pursuant to the health laws of the city of New York, at such convenient place or places within or near the port of New York as the safety of the public revenue and the observance of such health laws may require, and appropriates $20,000 for that purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 271) relating to the law of evidence in the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

COST IN PRIZE CASES.

Mr. GANSON asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution reciting that the costs of proceedings in the case of the prize steamer William Bagley, condemned at New Orleans, as charged by the district attorney, marshal, register, prize commissioner, and attorneys for captors, were exorbitant, and directing the Attorney General of the United States to investigate the proceedings and examine into the accounts of fees charged therein, and to report to the House the items of the various bills, whether in his opinion they are legal, and if not, wherein they are illegal, and whether any further legislation is requisite to guard against exorbitant charges in prize suits.

Objection was made.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

The next bill taken from the Speaker's table was a bill (H. R. No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, with Senate amendments.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Before that motion is put, the Chair would like to know whether this order of business is to be continued to-morrow morning.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I suppose it falls with the adjournment.

Mr. FENTON. I hope that, by unanimous consent, it will be continued to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurring on concurring with the Senate amendments,

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WILSON and Mr. ENGLISH.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 30.

So the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. FENTON. If the gentleman will give way I will move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I would suggest first that the pending order of business be continued to-morrow morning.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. C. A. HAUN.

The next business taken from the Speaker's table was an act (H. R. No. 466) for the relief of the widow of C. A. Haun.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. COX moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. WADSWORTH called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn; and also tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at ten o'clock and forty minutes, p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 30, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL.

On motion of Mr. COWAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITION.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of Polish refugees and citizens of the United States, praying that Polish refugees serving in the United States Army may be protected from arrest as subjects of the Russian Government; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. COWAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a joint resolution (S. No. 76) to enable the Commissioner of Patents to pay for work done under act of March 3, 1857; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

EXPENSES OF PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

Mr. COWAN. I now move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 117, to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses in calling out the militia of that State during the recent invasion. It is the bill which we had under consideration and partially proceeded with yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO SENATORS.

Mr. GRIMES. With the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I wish to ask leave of absence after to-day for the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH,] who is necessarily compelled to leave.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to move that leave of absence be granted to my colleague [Mr. HOWARD] who is necessarily absent, called home by sickness in his family.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. My colleague [Mr. HARDING] has been called home. I move that he have leave of absence for the residue of the session.

The motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CARLILE. I ask the consent of the Senator from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer a resolution.

Mr. COWAN. I have no objection if it does not displace the order.

Mr. CARLILE. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives do adjourn their respective Houses sine die on Saturday next, the 2d day of July, 1864, at twelve o'clock m.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object. I do not want that resolution acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up House bill No. 244, to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government.

Mr. COWAN. I think I am entitled to the floor upon House bill No. 117, which was taken up by universal consent, and I only yielded to allow some formal business to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the Senator from Ohio is in order, several matters having been entertained by the unanimous consent of the Senate, which is equivalent to a unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. COWAN. I hope, then, that the motion of the Senator from Ohio will be voted down in order that we may dispose of the bill that we considered yesterday and very nearly finished. It will not take, I should think, ten minutes at the outside. I trust the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio will be extended to me in this case. Certainly his bill will take a long while. It is likely to provoke extended discussion.

Mr. WADE. I do not know that it will; but if that is the case, it admonishes me that it ought to be acted upon the sooner.

Mr. COWAN. Still it is sufficient for us to try to get everything else out of the way.

Mr. WADE. I hope we shall dispose of this bill. I have given way so often and the adjournment is so near at hand that I cannot, consistently with my duty to the House of Representatives, who sent it here, or the committee of which I am chairman, consent to postpone it any longer unless the Senate should do it by a vote. If they see fit to do it it is their act not mine. I must stand by the bill.

Mr. COWAN. I can only undertake to say to the Senator from Ohio that I shall throw no obstacles whatever in the way of his bill by occupying the time of the Senate if I am allowed to take up this bill. I hope, therefore, the motion will not prevail.

Mr. WADE. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COWAN. I have just a word further to say. Yesterday a bill was considered and almost matured. I cannot conceive it possible that it will require ten minutes in order either to pass it or reject it. It is one of considerable importance to the State which I represent, and of some importance, I apprehend, to States represented by some other Senators. I could have insisted yesterday upon its continued consideration, but I yielded to other business. I hope the Senate will allow it to be taken up and finished this morning. The bill which antagonizes with it is a bill in the charge of the honorable Senator from Ohio, which involves great questions, questions perhaps lying at the foundation of the very organization of our Government, and which will no doubt provoke an extended discussion upon the part of Senators.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope my friend from Ohio will allow the Senator from Pennsylvania to dispose of his bill, which will take but a few minutes, in the morning hour, and then his bill can come up at any time. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to be allowed to have his bill voted upon as I understand it will take but a short time.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Grimes, McDougall, Morgan, Pomeroy, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wiley—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, and Wright—21.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

A bill (No. 255) granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia;

A bill (No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for a relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty;

A bill (No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; and

A joint resolution (No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. ALEXANDER H. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. JOHN GANSON of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate (No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SCHENCK, Mr. DEMING, and Mr. WARD managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (No. 563) in addition to the act respecting quarantine and health laws, approved February 25, 1799, and for the better execution of the third section thereof; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COWAN. I now move to take up House bill No. 117, to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses in calling out the militia of said State during the recent invasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is already before the Senate. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to amend the bill by striking out the following proviso:

Provided, That the expenses of none of the militia of any State shall be paid under this act who refused to be mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a motion that the doors be closed for the purpose of having a short executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (No. 242) to establish Portland, in the State of Oregon, and Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, ports of delivery;

A bill (No. 264) for the disposal of coal lands and of town property in the public domain; and

A joint resolution (No. 38) explanatory of the tenth section of an act to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of the public lands in the United States, approved the 30th day of May, 1862.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following House bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 564) for the relief of Eliza Cass Woodbridge;

A bill (No. 565) granting a pension to Rachel Mills, widow of Peter Mills, deceased, late a major in the United States Army; and

A bill (No. 566) for the relief of Francis Paterson.*

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate, with an amendment to each; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 233) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines; and

A bill (No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents.

The message further announced that Mr. PENDLETON had been appointed a member of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1865, in the place of Mr. STEVENS, who declined to serve.

The message also requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill of the Senate (No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the House thereto, for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in the engrossment of the amendments.

AMENDMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

The message further announced that the Clerk of the House was directed to return to the Senate the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto; and to communicate to the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives in the following words:

Resolved, That the amendment of the Senate (section No. 12) added by the Senate to House bill No. 549, in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said bill with the amendments be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

The Senate proceeded to consider the message of the House of Representatives returning the bill (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, with the action of the House on the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill, with a view of striking out the clause which is objectionable to the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move to reconsider the vote ordering the amendment to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose it will be necessary also to reconsider the vote by which the amendment made in Committee of the Whole was concurred in in the Senate, and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOOT in the chair.) The question now is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, and that is open to amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the following section:

And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of paying the bounties and of enforcing the draft provided for in this act there be levied and collected, in addition to the duties imposed by law, a special duty of five per cent. on all incomes exceeding $600, accruing during the year 1864, which duty shall be assessed and collected in the mode and according to the provisions, penalties, and restrictions provided in the act approved —, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes;" and this duty shall be payable on the 1st day of October next, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as to the time and mode of assessment as will secure the collection of this special tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

LAND GRANT TO KANSAS RAILROADS.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 233) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines, which has just been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, with a view of concurring in the amendment. It will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to add the following proviso to the first section of the bill:

Provided, That said railroad shall be a public highway, and shall transport troops and munitions of war of the United States free of charge.

Mr. POMEROY. I doubt very much the propriety of that amendment. I know that such a proviso used to be inserted in the land grant bills making land grant roads, but we have constantly been paying those roads just the same as though that clause were not in the bills. The Illinois Central railroad had a land grant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must arrest the consideration of this bill. The doors were reopened temporarily to receive a message from the House of Representatives, and by common consent this was taken up with the understanding that it would lead to no debate at the time. The Senate are in executive session, the doors having been opened only by unanimous consent to receive a message.

Mr. POMEROY. Will not this be the unfinished business of the legislative session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I will let the bill go through rather than object to it.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside and the doors closed according to the order of the Senate in executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

BILL RETURNED TO THE HOUSE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill (S. No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the House of Representatives thereto; and it was Resolved, That the Secretary return the said bill and amendments to the House of Representatives agreeably to its request.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in obedience to law, the accounts of George A. Cutler, E. H. Caruth, Isaac Colman, G. C. Snow, and R. P. Elder, Indian agents under the southern superintendency, having in charge the refugee Indians for the first quarter of 1864; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 17th of May, a copy of the record in the case of Commodore Wilkes's recent trial before a naval general court-martial; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. HALE that the report be printed was referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 17th of May, a copy of the proceedings and findings of the naval court of inquiry in the case of Commodore Charles Wilkes; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. HALE that the report be printed was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LAND GRANT TO KANSAS RAILROADS.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I move to take up Senate bill No. 303, just returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, for the purpose of concurring in the amendment of the House.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope not. When the doors were closed I had a similar motion under consideration to dispose of the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 233, and I hope that may be disposed of first.

Mr. TEN EYCK. This will not take a second.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Neither will the other. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOOT in the chair.) The bill taken up on the motion of the Senator from Kansas which was unfinished at the time the Senate resumed its executive session will be first in order; and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to add at the end of the first section of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That said railroad shall be a public highway, and shall transport troops and munitions of war of the United States free of charge.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to make just one remark upon that amendment. It is a new provision that never was in any land grant before. We have heretofore made railroads public highways for the Government to transport troops over free of charge, but the construction has been that the Government should furnish its own locomotive and its own cars. There is not a railroad in the world that would ever agree to carry them free of expense and furnish its own locomotive, its own cars, and its own fuel. In all the other land grant bills it has been provided that the Government might use the roads, but the Government must furnish its own rolling stock.

The House of Representatives have inserted a proviso in this bill that we shall carry troops and munitions of war free of any expense to the Government. It is a new provision which ought not to be in the bill. It never was in any other bill that I had anything to do with, and ought not to be in this. I have no objection to making the road a public highway, and if the Government wishes to put on locomotives, and cars, and rolling stock, and engineers to carry its troops, it may do so; but we do not propose to build roads for the Government and furnish all the rolling stock and everything else, and then carry troops and munitions of war for nothing. It never was required of any other railroad company that I know of, and ought not to be required of this company.

The amendment was concurred in.

INTER-CONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I now renew my motion. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents. The amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the owners or officers of said telegraph line to make any contract, either directly or through any intervening party or parties, for the transmission of dispatches for any newspaper or newspaper association upon terms different from those open to the enjoyment of all other newspapers or newspaper associations.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER subsequently said: I move that the Senate reconsider its vote concurring in the amendment made by the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 302, to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents. I do it at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] who wishes to make a statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONNESS. I want the statement to be made first before that question is put.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a statement, and that is all. If I am in error the Senator from California will correct me, and I will not press the motion. The amendment of the House of Representatives is as follows:

Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the owners or officers of said telegraph line to make any contract, either directly or through any intervening party or parties, for the transmission of dispatches for any newspaper or newspaper association upon terms different from those open to the enjoyment of all other newspapers or newspaper associations.

There is a very extensive association in this country known as the associated press, who pay very large sums for the transmission of their news, and they are enabled, having so much telegraphing done, to make a contract with the telegraph companies to do their telegraphing at a less rate than they charge individuals; and it is nothing but fair and right that they should, having so much to do, be allowed to make a special contract. This amendment, as I understand it, prohibits any such arrangement as that. I will ask the Senator from California if that is not the operation of it?

Mr. CONNESS. I know nothing about the origin of this amendment in the House of Representatives, but I suppose it was put in there by some of the members from the Pacific coast to meet this condition of things. As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, there is such an institution as the general associated press on this side of the continent. It is an association open to all newspapers who see fit to join it and pay a pro rata proportion for the news that they collect. That is all fair and right. Then there is on the Pacific slope what call themselves an associated press. It consists of three newspapers—the Sacramento Union and two papers published at San Francisco. The so-called associated press there make a contract with the associated press here and the telegraph company for the transmission of the news collected here by the associated press to be conveyed to the Pacific, and it is sent there at a certain rate, which the Pacific associated press pays.

The Pacific associated press have made themselves a close corporation. They will allow no membership but the three present papers. They will allow no other paper to enter into the partnership. The result is, they have, over a line subsidized both by the General Government and the State of California, the entire control of all this great war news, and everything that excites the world, for the benefit of their papers, and thus they crush every other paper that attempts to come into competition with them. There is an instance now existing. A daily paper, a Union paper and a very able one, published in San Francisco—I wish I had the dispatch received within a few days from the proprietor of the paper to read—has not only offered to pay a pro rata proportion for the news, but has offered in addition to give a bonus of $5,000, and made a tender of it, to be allowed to enter the association; but they would not accept it at all simply because they desire to keep the monopoly of the news.

The people there are full of excitement upon each day to learn what transpires on this side of the continent, much more than Senators here can appreciate, because you get it here every hour of the day and by all sorts of instrumentalities. Sometimes the telegraph line is interrupted for a day or two days, and then the excitement becomes intense. There is no medium through which the news can reach the people there except through those three papers, and they will not permit any other medium to be established. It is totally different from the associated press on this side of the continent, which is liberal and enlightened in the greatest degree. They accept any partnership that is respectable, and allow them to remain just as long as they see fit to remain in it, and when they conclude not to remain any longer they allow them to decline and go out and cease paying.

This amendment of the House is intended to prevent this telegraph company from permitting that kind of arrangement. It is not only inconsistent with the institutions under which we live and with all fair dealing, but it is making use of an instrumentality for which the Government of the United States pay $40,000 a year and the State of California is now paying $6,000 a year as subsidies to carry out this system. I suppose no Senator will object to the corrective that is proposed to be applied.

Mr. HALE. I see the evil of which the Senator complains, and would do anything in reason to rectify it that would not inflict greater evil upon others. But in attempting to remedy that evil the Senator is inflicting an evil on the whole associated press. He says the associated press on this side are liberal and do what is right. If this amendment prevails, however, they are entirely cut off from this arrangement.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Let us see:

That it shall not be lawful for the owners or officers of said telegraph line to make any contract, either directly or through any intervening party or parties, for the transmission of dispatches for any newspaper or newspaper association upon terms different from those open to the enjoyment of all other newspapers or newspaper associations.

Mr. CONNESS. That is under this bill. This is a new project which is to control the news between the two continents; not across one continent, but between two. I have a bill before this body to apply to this line across the continent, and when that question comes up it will be in order to discuss it; but this amendment contemplates the prohibition of any arrangement of this kind under this bill.

Mr. HALE. What is it?

Mr. CONNESS. It is the Collins Russian and American telegraph bill.

Mr. HALE. It strikes me that if this amendment should be adopted the result will be this: they will be prohibited from making any contract with any associated press for the transmission of intelligence at a less price than is paid by an individual newspaper.

Mr. CONNESS. I have made an effort to suppress the abuse existing over the present line, which does not apply to this bill, as I have stated. I have made this kind of effort that I will now state. In the first place, the Overland Telegraph Company have been applied to to interfere and stop this condition of things, to refuse to let the news pass over their line unless it shall be given freely to each newspaper alike who shall pay a proportional price for it. They say they cannot do it. Why can they not do it? They say they cannot do it because they have a contract with the associated press here to carry their news; the news is their property, and they have a right to send it where they please, and they have a right to sell it to whom they please. They say, "We cannot help it; we have simply to accept the news that is given to us and receive the compensation that we agreed to take it for and pass it over our lines." That sounds very fair on the part of the telegraph company. We then went to the associated press at New York and made a statement of the condition of things that exists to them, and they refused point blank to interfere. Now, how shall we have a free transmission of news, and how shall the entire public receive it over the lines that are subsidized by the Government, and who will interfere to prevent the correction wherever the correction is applied?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote concurring in the House amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope it will not be reconsidered.

The motion was not agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1865, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. POMEROY it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SUMNER, Mr. TEN EYCK, and Mr. CONNESS.

ENLISTMENT OF INDIANA VOLUNTEERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate a communication from the Governor of the State of Indiana which will be treated as a memorial from the Executive of Indiana.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, June 21, 1864.

To the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, Congress of United States:

I desire to present to you, and through you to the Senate and House of Representatives, an important question growing out of the enlistment of recruits anterior to the 1st of January, 1863, for three years' regiments then in the field.

The men thus recruited in Indiana had the understanding that they were enlisted for the unexpired term of the regiments into which they went, and would be discharged along with them. This understanding grew up from several causes:

1. From the general impression which prevailed that the country would not require their services after the expiration of the term of the regiment, which would be from about the middle to the close of the year 1864.

2. Because the recruiting was carried on for particular regiments, and not for the general service, carrying with it the idea that the recruit was to serve in that regiment and no other, and it not being known then that the regimental organization would be extended beyond the first three years by the reenlistment of veterans or any other process.

3. Because this understanding was universally encouraged and presented by recruiting officers, and was agreed to and concurred in by United States mustering officers, as I am informed and believe, then on duty.

4. From the general reading, though perhaps not critical, of several orders issued by the War Department, providing for and regulating recruiting for the old regiments, apparently proceeding on the hypothesis that the recruiting was of a regimental character, and not for the general service, and that the recruits would be held only for the unexpired term of the regiments, and would be mustered out along with them.

But from whatever cause the understanding may have arisen, or however erroneous it may have been, it is absolutely certain that it existed, and so full was it that in the month of October, 1862, many of the men who had been drafted in Indiana for the period of nine months volunteered into old regiments for the unexpired term with the assurance that they would be held no longer; and I most respectfully submit that good faith requires that it should be strictly carried out.

Nor was this understanding, as I am advised, confined to Indiana, but prevailed extensively in other States. It is undoubtedly true that the rolls which the men signed described an enlistment for three years, or during the war, but this was explained, as I learn, as the necessary technical form of the enlistment, and did not disturb the conviction in their minds that they would be held only for the unexpired term of the regiment.

The question has been presented to the War Department, and by it decided that from the form of the enlistment the men would be held for three years from the date of enlistment, and without regard to the expiration of the term of the regiment into which they volunteered. Although it may not be in the power of the War Department to grant the relief sought for, yet it is undoubtedly within the power of Congress, and I respectfully but earnestly call their attention to it as alike demanded by justice, good faith, and sound policy.

O. P. MORTON,
Governor of Indiana.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

LAND TITLES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the Senate postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia. It is a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and is deemed of some importance by the inhabitants of the District.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

All deeds heretofore recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia, which have been executed and acknowledged by femmes covert (their husbands having signed and sealed them) for conveying any real estate, or interest therein, situated in the District; and all acknowledgments of deeds heretofore recorded, which have been made by femmes covert (whether they have executed the deed or not) for the purpose of releasing their claims to dower in the lands described therein, in which acknowledgments the form prescribed by law has not been followed; and all deeds heretofore recorded, which have been executed and acknowledged by an attorney-in-fact, duly appointed for conveying real estate situated in the District; and all deeds heretofore recorded, executed, and acknowledged, or only acknowledged by such attorney-in-fact for conveying real estate situated in the District, as to which the acknowledgment was made before officers different from these before whom proof of the power of attorney was made, and as to which the power of attorney was proved before only one justice of the peace; and all deeds heretofore executed and recorded for the purpose of conveying land situated in the District, acknowledged out of the District of Columbia, before a judge of the United States court, or before two aldermen of a city or the chief magistrate of a city, or before a notary public; and all deeds heretofore executed and recorded for the purpose of conveying land situated in the District, acknowledged by an attorney-in-fact, duly appointed, or by an officer of a corporation, duly authorized, who has acknowledged the same to be his act and deed, instead of the act and deed of the grantor or of the corporation; and all deeds heretofore executed and recorded for the purpose of conveying land situated in the District to which there is not annexed a legal certificate as to the official character of the officer or officers taking the acknowledgment, are declared to be of the same effect and validity to pass the fee simple or other estate intended to be conveyed, and bar dower in the real estate therein mentioned in favor of parties in actual possession, claiming under and through such deeds, as if such deeds had been by such femmes covert executed and acknowledged, or acknowledged in a case of a dower right, in the form heretofore prescribed by law; as if such deeds had been executed and acknowledged by the grantor in the deed; as if such power of attorney had been proved before the officer or officers taking the acknowledgment; as if such power of attorney had been proved before two justices of the peace; as if such acknowledgment had been made before any judge of a State court, or before two justices of the peace; as if such attorney-in-fact or officer of a corporation had acknowledged the deed to be the deed of the grantor or of the corporation; as if such deeds had thereto annexed a certificate, in legal form, that the officer or officers taking the acknowledgment were really what they purport to be; but the certificate of acknowledgment by a femme covert is to show that the acknowledgment was made "apart" or "privily" from her husband, or use some other term importing that her acknowledgment was made out of his presence, and also that she acknowledged or declared that she willingly executed or that she willingly acknowledged the deed, or that it was her voluntary act, or to that effect; and when the power of attorney shall have been executed by a femme covert it is to be effectual and sufficient if there shall have been such an acknowledgment of it as would be sufficient, under the provisions of this act, to pass her estate and interest therein were she a party executing the deed of conveyance, the record and a copy thereof of any deed recorded to be evidence in the same manner and to have the same effect as if such deed had been originally executed, acknowledged, and recorded according to law.

The second section repeals and abrogates all exceptions in favor of parties beyond the District of Columbia, which may by existing laws be replied or relied on in any action or proceeding brought in the District, but this section is not to affect the right of parties in actions now pending, and such as may be brought within one year from the passage of this act.

The third section provides that in all actions hereafter brought to recover possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia, if it shall be made to appear, by the party claiming the same adversely, that the lands have been assessed on the tax list of the levy court of the county of Washington, or on the tax books of the corporation of Georgetown or of Washington city, to him and those through whom he claims, for the space of twenty years, and that he and they have paid taxes on them during that space of time, then such payment of taxes on lands so assessed is to be taken and considered as sufficient evidence to prove an adverse possession.

The fourth section provides that the acts of Congress, approved May 31, 1832, and April 20, 1838, in reference to the acknowledgment and record of deeds of land situated in the District, shall be taken and construed as cumulative with the acts of Maryland on the same subject in force at their passage; and that an acknowledgment made and certified in compliance with any one of those acts, and before any officers authorized by either of the acts to take an acknowledgment, (whether in or out of the District of Columbia,) shall be good and effectual; and if it shall appear that the grantor "acknowledged said deed," it is to have the same effect as if he or she acknowledged the deed to be his or her act and deed. And any acknowledgment made by a femme covert under either of those acts of Congress (which shall be sufficient under the provisions of this act) of any deed executed by her husband, and heretofore recorded in the District of Columbia, is to be good and effectual to bar all claim on her part to dower in the lands described therein, situated in the District, although she shall not have executed the same.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with several amendments. The first amendment was in section two, line seven, to strike out the words "one year" and insert "three years;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That this section shall not affect the right of parties in actions now pending, and such as may be brought within three years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the third section, as follows:

That in all actions hereafter brought to recover possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia, if it shall be made to appear by the party claiming the same adversely, that said lands have been assessed on the tax list of the levy court of the county of Washington, or on the tax books of the corporation of Georgetown or of Washington city, to him and those through whom he claims, for the space of twenty years, and that he and they have paid taxes on the same during said space of time, then such payment of taxes on lands so assessed shall be taken and considered as sufficient evidence to prove an adverse possession.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line four, to change the word "record" to "recording."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line seven, after the word "force" to insert "in said District;" so that it will read:

That the acts of Congress approved May 13, 1832, and April 20, 1838, in reference to the acknowledgment and recording of deeds of land situated in said District, shall be taken and construed as cumulative with the acts of Maryland on the same subject in force in said District at the passage thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

A bill (No. 466) for the relief of the widow of C. A. Haun;

A bill (No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (No. 39) for the relief of Alexander Cross.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHALEY, Mr. W. B. WASHBURN, and Mr. A. W. HUBBARD managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 109) to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 255) granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 405) to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 435) concerning certain locations of lands in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for the relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty;

A bill (H. R. No. 446) to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company.

JOHN S. PHELPS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be discharged from the further consideration of House joint resolution No. 113 to settle and pay the account of John S. Phelps, of Missouri, as a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I will state in a word the circumstances. This is a resolution to settle the accounts of John S. Phelps, a member of the last Congress. It has passed the House of Representatives and been referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses in the Senate. Two of the members of that committee are absent and will not return at the present session. The Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK,] the other member of the committee, has given me authority to ask that the committee be discharged—I believe he is satisfied with the justice of the resolution—and to ask that it may be considered. The reading of the resolution of itself will show that it is proper. It is merely to adjust his accounts.

Mr. CLARK. I have not the least objection to the committee being discharged, because I am alone and have no authority and cannot act. It is proper that some consideration should be given to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor.) The first question is on discharging the committee from the consideration of the subject indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to settle and pay the accounts of John S. Phelps, of Missouri, as a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. It directs the proper officers of the Treasury to settle and pay the balance due to John S. Phelps, of Missouri, as a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, for salary and mileage, deducting any amount which he may have received thereon, or which he may have received as military governor of Arkansas.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to inquire whether Mr. Phelps was military governor of Arkansas while he was a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. Perhaps the Senator from New York can inform us whether he was military governor of Arkansas and a member of Congress at the same time.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand the facts to be that at the request of the President he acted as military governor for a little while; but whatever he received as military governor he is to be credited on this account. He had no commission, no appointment as military governor. He merely acted at the request of the President.

Mr. POMEROY. I thought he had an appointment.

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir; no commission, no office.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. CHARLES M. WETHERILL.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of Dr. Charles M. Wetherill. It will take but a moment. It is a very small matter.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. C. M. Wetherill the sum of $750 in full for his services as chemist of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HALE. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOWE. I can state the facts quicker than the Secretary can read the report, perhaps. Dr. Wetherill was appointed chemist in the Agricultural Department. About the 4th of April last, at the request of the President, he was detailed by the Commissioner of Agriculture and ordered to report to a gentleman in Philadelphia to conduct some chemical experiments upon gunpowder. He was detailed for one month. Some time after the expiration of the month the gentleman under whose direction he was laboring then requested the President to have him detailed for a further period of time; and thereupon the Commissioner or the chief clerk of the Commissioner wrote to him to remain there until further orders. He remained until the 1st of October, and then the Commissioner discharged him from his office as chemist for the Department.

Mr. HALE. Why do they not pay this claim there?

Mr. HOWE. The Commissioner declines to do it. Dr. Wetherill was at work the whole time. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAHAM WARD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Naham Ward back to the Court of Claims. It is a simple resolution authorizing the Court of Claims to examine into the validity and legality of the claim. The Court of Claims under the former law passed upon the claim and allowed the petitioner a portion of his claim.

Mr. CLARK. I have no particular wish about the discharge of the Committee on Claims; but before that is done, and before the resolution is passed upon, I think it my duty to bring to the knowledge of the Senate the character of this claim.

It is a claim over eighty years of age, and involving from sixty to one hundred thousand dollars. Seven years ago there was a favorable report from the Committee on Claims upon it, allowing over sixty thousand dollars. That report has sometimes been before Congress, but has never been acted upon so as to give the claimants the sum awarded by the committee. They now desire and the House of Representatives has passed a resolution referring them back to the Court of Claims. They have had one judgment in the Court of Claims under the old law, and the report was made to Congress for the action of Congress upon it, but Congress has never acted upon it; and, it having been reported here late in the session, the Committee on Claims have not had time at this session to examine it and to see whether there ought to be a judgment on that report, or whether it is better to refer it to the Court of Claims or not. It was deemed proper that there should be action on the report by one branch of Congress or the other, and I desire to submit to the Senate the character of the claim.

Mr. WILSON. I think we had better postpone it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I can make a statement that will satisfy the Senate. When the Senator from New Hampshire is through I wish to make a statement in regard to this claim. I think it is a matter of sheer justice.

Mr. CLARK. I think the claim should be brought to the attention of the Senate and the Senate should fully understand what they are doing before they send it back again to the Court of Claims after they have had one judgment there.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not familiar enough with this claim to know whether it ought to be passed by the Senate or not; but I have examined the papers sufficiently to make this statement of facts, which the Senator from New Hampshire will bear me out in.

Naham Ward, an old citizen of Ohio, asserted this claim before Congress, and it was frequently reported by committees of both branches of Congress. It was a claim for the proper payment of certain notes. The history of those notes was clearly traced in the papers connected with the case. It was presented and allowed by committees of both Houses of Congress, but never during the same Congress so that he could get relief. He died. It was presented then to the Court of Claims when that court was organized. That court allowed the claim; and I have read a portion of the decision of the court, in which they say it is perfectly clear that this claimant has a right to this remedy under the law. That judgment of the Court of Claims was brought to Congress, after full examination by the court, and I believe both Houses since that have passed resolutions to pay him the money.

I know that an attempt to pass a resolution paying the heirs of Naham Ward $60,000 on an old claim of this kind would probably give rise to so much discussion and elicit so much controversy, that they probably could not have a hearing before the Senate, or even one of the committees of the Senate; it would take too much time. This resolution which has already passed the House of Representatives simply refers this claim back to the Court of Claims, without any advantage from the previous decision, for the consideration of the court under the present law. In other words, it puts these claimants precisely where they would have been if no judgment had been rendered in their favor by the old Court of Claims. If these parties had not presented their claim in the old Court of Claims, and had not got a favorable judgment from that court, they would have a right to apply to the present Court of Claims for the very relief they now ask.

Under these circumstances, I ask whether it is fair to deny them a hearing before the Court of Claims now, or to make a favorable judgment in the old Court of Claims operate as a bar to them presenting their claim to the present Court of Claims? That is I believe a statement of the case, if I understand the papers correctly. I looked over them just sufficiently to inform myself of these leading facts. If the Senator from New Hampshire had the time and would take the time to examine the case, and would pass his judgment upon the merits of the claim, I would not ask to have his committee discharged from its further consideration. All I ask is that these heirs of Naham Ward, deceased, who are known to me personally as constituents of mine, shall have the same right as any other citizen to present their claim to the Court of Claims established by us; and I think the mere fact that they have already got a favorable decision of that Court of Claims should not deny them that jurisdiction. I am told that is the trouble with them now. They cannot present a petition in the Court of Claims because it is barred by the favorable decision of that court. That is the effect of it, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. CLARK. I have no doubt that will be the legal effect in the Court of Claims. I have no doubt if they were to go there, without coming through both Houses of Congress, the former judgment would be pleaded in bar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Although in their favor.

Mr. CLARK. But the Senator is not quite correct, I think, though he means to be so, when he says they have a favorable report. The inference would be that they had a favorable report to the extent of their claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I did not so state.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator did not so state; but that would be the inference of the Senator's language, perhaps. It should be stated that the court did not allow anything like the full value of the claim. The original certificates were valued at, I think, $400, and the court valued them at less than $300; but then it should be stated that the court was divided when they gave a judgment even for that amount, two of the judges being in favor of the claim and the other judge being very decidedly against it. But here is the point: they had the report from the Court of Claims; they then come to the House of Representatives; they do not ask judgment on that report.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken there, for I looked at that. They do ask judgment upon that report; but the committee in the House of Representatives said they had not time to go into this controversy, and the committee, against the wishes of these heirs, reported this resolution to send the claim back to the Court of Claims. They do not want anything more than is allowed by that Court of Claims; they do not claim anything more; they consider the judgment as conclusive against them except as to the amount found due to them in the Court of Claims; and they say even if the Senate committee were now to give them a favorable judgment for $60,000, they would have to go back to the House of Representatives, and the House would say, "We will not agree to this now; we will send it to the Court of Claims." They want one thing or the other. They ought either to have that judgment affirmed and the money paid, or else they should be allowed to go before another tribunal and have another chance where the judgment will amount to something.

Mr. CLARK. I do not understand the matter to be precisely as stated by the Senator from Ohio, though I have no doubt he understands it so, because in talking to one of these parties he did not so represent it to me. I asked him why he did not take a resolution for the amount of that judgment. He said there was some difficulty in the action of the House of Representatives under the rule; I could not understand what; and I told him I did not see why he could not just as well have his resolution passed for the amount of the report of the Court of Claims as to have this new resolution passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the Senator that. Under the rule of the House—

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator allow me to make a motion that the Senate at half past four take a recess until seven o'clock?

Mr. CLARK. We can finish this in a moment and then have a recess.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us settle this question first. Under the rule of the House of Representatives, a bill containing an appropriation cannot be acted on unless it goes to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of Claims in the House of Representatives said they could pass a resolution referring the claim back to the Court of Claims without a reference to the Committee of the Whole. That technical rule of the House was put up against my constituents to prevent them from having the justice that the committee said they ought to have. The Senator probably is not very familiar with those rules.

Mr. CLARK. I am not familiar with the rules of the House of Representatives. I desire to inquire of the Senator, if he represents the claimants, whether they will take the resolution with an amendment providing that the judgment of the court shall not exceed the former judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection except that that would send the resolution back to the House of Representatives, and would involve them in some trouble.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There can be no harm in sending it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CLARK. I think they should take one of two tribunals: they should either allow Congress to act upon the old report of the Court of Claims, or it should be referred back to the court with a proviso that their judgment shall not exceed the former one. If they will agree to that, I shall have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if an amendment is made the resolution will have to go back to the House of Representatives, and they will be unable to obtain action during this session at least. I hope the Senator will allow them to go before the present Court of Claims with the same rights and authority they would have had if they had never presented their case to the old Court of Claims. That is all they ask.

Mr. CLARK. I heard the same objection once made to a bill that I was pressing, and an amendment was proposed on the other side to limit it to $40,000. I did not claim but about $30,000; but I think the Secretary of War allowed $66,000, and I afterward moved its repeal. I do not think it is a sufficient answer in a claim of this kind involving $100,000, that an amendment would delay it a little while in the House of Representatives. I do not think we should be in such hot haste to vote money out of the Treasury. I think it should be examined.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us take it up, and if a majority of the Senate think the amendment ought to be made I shall not object, although I think it would be unjust to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the resolution indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate at half past four o'clock take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the motion by saying twenty minutes to five o'clock. I desire to dispose of this matter. I am on a committee of conference and may not be able to attend to it this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the longest time named first. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, as a separate motion, not an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to postpone the present and all other orders for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 511.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have now succeeded in getting this resolution before the Senate, and it might as well be acted upon at once.

Mr. WILSON. If we can take a vote I shall not object; but I desire to have the bill I have indicated taken up now, so that it may be disposed of this evening.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not object to that after this resolution is disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in the power of a majority of the Senate to control the question.

Mr. CLARK. I understand the Senator from Ohio is willing to accept the amendment to the resolution that I have indicated. If he is willing to agree to that I shall withdraw all opposition to the resolution and let it be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. If he is willing to do that I have no objection; but we should not at this period of the session be spending hours upon a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; if it is understood that we can have action on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to take up House joint resolution No. 90.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Naham Ward back to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the resolution by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That said court shall allow no larger amount than the sum heretofore allowed by said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed and the resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION LAWS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and,

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The President pro tempore appointed Mr. FOSTER, Mr. TEN EYCK, and Mr. WILLEY.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 511, to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, with a view of leaving it as the business in order after the recess.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall now take a recess until seven o'clock, and I will make that motion.

The President pro tempore. The recess has already been ordered.

GENERAL FRANK P. BLAIR, JR.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a matter that I presume we can get a vote upon before the time fixed for the recess arrives. I do not suppose it will lead to any debate. It is the resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary on the papers referred to it in reference to the cases of Generals Schenck and Blair. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that resolution. If it leads to debate I shall not press it.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution reported by Mr. TRUMBULL from the Committee on the Judiciary on the 15th of June:

Resolved, That an officer of the United States whose resignation has been duly accepted and taken effect, or who, having been elected a member of either House of Congress, qualifies and enters on the discharge of the duties of a member, is thereby, in either case, out of the office previously held, and cannot be restored to it without a new appointment in the manner provided by the Constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; we shall be without a quorum.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; let it pass without the yeas and nays.

The resolution was adopted.

SALARIES OF SLAVE TRADE OFFICERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Senate to take up a little bill that will not take three minutes. It is House bill No. 552, to increase the salaries of the judges and arbitrators appointed under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. I hope that bill will not be taken up now.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will hear what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If it is to increase salaries I object to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I think we had better abolish the judges and other officers.

The President pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained at the present time.

EXTENSION OF LAND LAWS TO KANSAS.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 193, to extend the eighth section of an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights."

There being no objection, the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the provisions of the eighth section of an act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights, to Kansas. Nothing in this bill or the act mentioned is to be so construed as to prevent the State of Kansas from using the lands when selected under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, or the proceeds of their sale, as a permanent fund, the rent or interests of which to be applied for the support of common schools in the State.

Mr. HARLAN. There are one or two clerical amendments that should be made to the bill. In line five of the first section, after the words "preemption rights" I move to insert the words "approved September 4, 1841."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. In line six of the same section I move to strike out the word "that;" and insert the words "the State;" so that it will read, "shall be extended to the State of Kansas."

The President pro tempore. That amendment will be made; and the Senate, in pursuance of its order, will now take a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock, p. m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying for such an amendment of the Constitution as will expressly recognize the obligations of the Christian religion; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented seven petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

COLFAX STREET IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 550) to establish Colfax street in the city of Washington and District of Columbia, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. POMEROY. When the Senate took a recess it was just about to vote on the passage of a bill which was then under consideration. I desire to have that bill disposed of, and then I shall have no objection to taking up this bill.

The President pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. POMEROY. We had better dispose of the bill we were considering at the time the Senate took a recess.

Mr. GRIMES. What was the bill?

Mr. POMEROY. A bill extending the act of Congress passed in 1841 relative to the public lands to my State. It was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole and just about to be put on its passage when the time fixed for the recess arrived.

The President pro tempore. If objection be made this bill cannot be considered at the present time.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not want to object.

The President pro tempore. No objection being made, the bill reported by the Senator from Iowa is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, which provides that from and after its passage the alley, which is sixty feet wide, across square seven hundred and twelve, and which connects L and M streets north, and the west line of which is two hundred and twelve feet east of the east line of First street east, shall be known as Colfax street.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF LAND LAWS TO KANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume the consideration of the bill which was under consideration at the time the Senate took a recess, being the bill (S. No. 193) to extend the eighth section of an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM SAWYER AND OTHERS.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up House bill No. 133.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that bill is not on the Calendar, and has never been reported from the committee.

Mr. WADE. I was going to ask that the committee be discharged. It was sent to the Committee on Private Land Claims, I believe, and they intended to send it to the Committee on Claims, but I do not know whether they did or not. I move that the Committee on Private Land Claims be discharged from its further consideration, and that the Senate consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of the State of Ohio. By the treaty of St. Mary's with the Miami Indians, of October 6, 1818, the west half of section No. 26, the east half of section No. 28, and section No. 27, lying in the county of Auglaize and State of Ohio, were reserved and granted to Joseph Richardville and Joseph Richardville, jr. All of those lands have since been sold in several parcels to divers persons by the United States and by the State of Ohio, under and by virtue of a grant from the United States; and by virtue of a judicial sale upon a judgment rendered against Joseph Richardville, jr., survivor and sole heir-at-law of Joseph Richardville, sr., the title granted to them by the treaty in all of those lands has become vested in one Madison Sweetzer, the purchaser at the sale; and he has established his title to the lands by sundry judgments in ejectment, recovered in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio, against the tenants in possession, holding under titles derived, directly or indirectly, from the United States. The bill, therefore, requires the Secretary of the Interior to cause the unimproved value of those tracts of land to be ascertained, by the valuation and assessment of a commissioner to be appointed by him for that purpose, and which commissioner before he proceeds to the assessment and valuation of the same is to take an oath faithfully and impartially to perform his duties as such commissioner. When the Secretary of the Interior shall thus ascertain the unimproved value of the lands he is to report it to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable moment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE A. SCHREINER.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 240, for the relief of George A. Schreiner; a bill reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of George A. Schreiner, of the county of Wyandotte, State of Kansas, upon the list of pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence the 1st of January, 1864, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. JONES.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 251) for the relief of John T. Jones, an Ottawa Indian, for depredations committed by white persons upon his property in Kansas Territory.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs that there shall be paid, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to John T. Jones the sum of $6,700, in full for depredations committed upon his property by white persons, that being the amount adjudged by the Commissioner to be the value of the property destroyed.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state to the honorable Senator from Iowa that this bill has passed the Senate once before, and there is no written report connected with the bill as it is presented to the Senate at the present time. There was a report at some previous session. The committee were familiar with the case. There is no doubt of the justice of the claim. We under treaty were bound to pay for depredations committed by white persons; and the amount of destruction of this property clearly appeared. The Senator from Kansas knows personally much of the circumstances.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this man lived with his tribe at the time these depredations were committed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes; he was at the time connected with the tribe, and has always been connected with them.

Mr. POMEROY. He is a chief of the tribe.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He is a very respectable man in the tribe, one that they look up to.

Mr. GRIMES. Has the tribal organization been kept up?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It was at that time, and I think is still.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Since then the land has been divided.

Mr. GRIMES. I should think if at the time these depredations are said to have been committed the tribal organization existed the appropriation should be for the benefit of the tribe, for they owned all things in common as long as that organization did exist.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. No; he had separate property—a very fine house and store.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Jones was burnt out in 1856, and his claim as audited at that time was $16,000; but the bill passed the Senate some two years ago for this amount, $6,700. Mr. Jones thought he ought to have $16,000, and told the committee of the House of Representatives that he would not take the bill as it passed the Senate. It was then defeated in the House; that is, it was not called up; it was defeated by not being called up. But now Mr. Jones, as a patriotic man, has sent word to me that in the condition of the country he is willing to take anything. Though he considers this sum only about one-fourth of what he ought to have, he is willing to take the bill as reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator's colleague [Mr. HARLAN] investigated the matter very fully, and is very well posted in regard to it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The truth is, the original claim involved speculative damages.

Mr. GRIMES. Who perpetrated those outrages?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The border ruffians who invaded Kansas.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The army that destroyed Ossawatimie destroyed his property. I was within a few miles at the time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Kansas if there are any precedents in the legislation of Congress for paying a claim like this. It seems to me questionable whether it comes within any principle heretofore established.

Mr. POMEROY. We have frequently paid claims of this very character. In the last few years there have not been any such depredations committed; they have all been the other way.

We have paid for depredations committed by Indians on whites. We have always paid those claims, and when we have made treaties with the Indians generally we have made direct appropriations to the whites for depredations committed by the Indians. But this is a case where the border ruffian army in 1856 destroyed Mr. Jones's property. Mr. Jones is a man who graduated at Hamilton College, New York. He is a distinguished citizen of my State, liberally educated, and no man in the State stands better. He was rich until his property was destroyed. Since then he has been a poor man.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is a hard case, unquestionably; but what I want to know is, whether Congress has paid claims for property destroyed in the border troubles in Kansas.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator will allow me I will state that at the time these depredations were committed the law in relation to the intercourse in the Indian country and between white citizens and the Indians was then in existence and unrepealed, by virtue of which it was provided that if white persons committed depredations on the Indians and their property and it could not be ascertained who they were that had committed them, the Government of the United States should reimburse the Indians for these depredations.

When these border ruffians were out there in Kansas and went to Ossawatimie, as they passed along back they passed through this reservation and burned Jones's house and destroyed his property. He was a rich, well-to-do Indian and the chief and leading man of the tribe. We rejected the speculative damages and confined it to what was estimated to be the real damage suffered by the destruction of the property.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That explanation is satisfactory to me. I only wanted to know on what ground it stood.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 339, and that the Senate proceed with its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 339) to repeal a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department," and for other purposes. It proposes to repeal the joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department. It further directs the Secretary of the Interior to assign for the temporary use of the Commissioner of Agriculture such rooms in the Interior Department suitable for the business of the Commissioner and necessary to enable him to perform efficiently the business of the office as can be so appropriated with the least inconvenience to the transaction of other public business.

It also appropriates $100,000 for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for the use of the Department of Agriculture, on any unoccupied public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, to be indicated by the President, and to be expended under the direction of the President; but the whole cost of the erection of the building is not to exceed that sum.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to amend the bill by striking out the third section appropriating $100,000 to build a new building. I do not suppose the Senate want to commence the work of erecting any new building at this time. That is the point with me. The other parts of the bill provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall give any spare rooms he may have to the Agricultural Department, but I cannot believe that the Senate will consider at this time a proposition to appropriate $100,000 to build a new building.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no doubt but that it would be true economy to do so. The Department is now renting buildings all around through the city for the occupation of the clerks, and to enable them to get along with the business of the Government. The clerks of the Pension Bureau and other bureaus of the Interior Department are now occupying the buildings around that square and other places, and I have no doubt it would be true economy to put up a small building. The necessity of the first and second sections will be manifest if the Senate will hear a statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I ask to have read.

I think I ought also to state that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is satisfied with the passage of the bill, if the third section shall remain. He is impressed with the necessity of providing for this Department somewhere where its business will not interfere with the business of other Departments.

The Secretary read the following memorandum:

The Virginia, Ohio, and revolutionary military rooms, and the rooms west of the passage, which includes the swamp land division and the military division, under the acts of 1847, 1850, and 1852, occupy of floor surface, in square feet..... 4,000

East of the passage, which is also claimed, contains our military warrant files, under the aforesaid acts, part of the swamp land clerks, and the returns office..... 1,800

Total floor surface, in square feet, (equal to one fourth of the entire office)..... 5,800

West of the passage our file cases occupy every available space, and present a frontage of 1,736 square feet, which at cost eight years ago, when they could be built at about half of present prices, cost per foot, $4..... $6,944

In the military division of Virginia, Ohio, and revolutionary claims, our cases have 600 feet of frontage, at $4..... 2,400

In the passage the cases have a frontage of 1,296 square feet, at $4..... 5,184

East of the passage a frontage of 1,324 feet, at $4..... 5,296

Total original cost of cases, at prices little more than half their cost at this time..... $19,834

We cannot do business without these files for our books and papers. They contain not less than six million title papers and records, any one of which is liable to be called for any day, and many of which are called for every day.

The removal and refitting of these, even if we had other rooms and cases, would be an immense labor, and it would be years before the office could recover from the displacement of more or less of these, which would necessarily take place.

The mere locality of particular files is a part of the education in the office, which will cost years of labor to acquire if they be disturbed.

It is tearing down one fourth of our office, which can never be perfectly rebuilt, to make room for another office; to build an office, and force us to build a new one also. It is the expense and loss of tearing away a perfect structure, that two imperfect ones may be constructed at great cost.

It may be said that our cases can be removed. To this it is answered:

1. They are exactly where they are wanted now, and will not occupy less room anywhere else.

2. There is no other suitable room in the building, and none, to our knowledge, elsewhere.

3. There are rooms in the building which will be equally as good for the Agricultural Department, now unfurnished, and which may be fitted for that purpose as cheaply as ours, thus saving our present furniture.

4. The cases are fitted to the building.

The Secretary of the Interior has been repeatedly requested to assign these rooms to the Agricultural Department, but, after careful examination of their use, refused.

We have already surrendered to the Pension Office and other offices eleven rooms, covering a floor surface of over six thousand feet, and we can surrender no more without dividing the office, endangering its archives, and rendering the transaction of its business expensive and irregular.

The seeds and fruits brought into this building by the Agricultural Department are filling it with vermin, which endangers our files and records, and to place these in the very center of the office will render the whole mass of valuable title papers, upon which depend the estates of millions of our people, insecure.

I will not extend this memorandum, though objections to the act are but half stated. For it there is not one valid reason.

Respectfully submitted, J. M. EDMUNDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. This matter about the rooms for the Agricultural Bureau has given the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior a great deal of trouble. The rooms assigned to the Agricultural Department are totally inadequate in space and in location for the business of that Department, as well as its preservation; and therefore a joint resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives to appropriate two rooms belonging to the Land Office to the use of the Department of Agriculture. It was considered, examined, and deemed necessary to assign these two rooms to the Department of Agriculture, and a resolution of that kind was finally passed. The Commissioner of Public Lands now informs us that it is impossible for him to do without these two rooms that are proposed to be assigned to the Department of Agriculture; and the Secretary of the Interior also says that the crowding of the various rooms in the Department is very troublesome; indeed, the increase of clerks in the Pension Bureau has compelled him to take several rooms belonging to the Land Office and use them for the purposes of the Pension Office, and the whole building is crowded to excess. Besides, he represents that the seeds introduced by the Commissioner of Agriculture necessarily introduce with them vermin, mice, &c., which endanger valuable papers.

On the whole, therefore, I think it is better for us to rent a building for the Department of Agriculture or erect one. It is impossible now to rent a suitable building, and I think it would perhaps be best to build a small building of reasonable size for that purpose. The Department of Agriculture is now crowded in an inconvenient and improper place and must have more room. If the Senator from Kansas wishes to economize, probably it might be better to rent a building for the present; but I am satisfied it will be a great deal cheaper in the end to take some of the unoccupied space around Washington and build a plain brick building for the Department of Agriculture. That will then give to the Pension Office and to the Land Office the rooms now occupied by the Department of Agriculture, and will give them the whole building, and probably save the Government in rent the cost of the building in a very short time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At first I thought this third section ought not to be adopted; I was of the opinion of the Senator from Kansas; but on reflection, and especially on hearing the communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office read, I think it is better to pass the bill as reported by the Senator from Iowa. The Senate will observe that the Commissioner of the General Land Office states the fact that the accumulation of seeds in the Department brings vermin into the building and is injuring the important documents of the Land Office and perhaps of the other offices. Anybody can see, I should think, at a glance that this Agricultural Bureau ought not to be in connection with bureaus of the Department of the Interior having very valuable files. We all know the value of the files of the General Land Office. They are the foundation of the titles of whole States; and if vermin are introduced into that part of the building and these files are destroyed, as is stated by the Commissioner, it is a very strong reason for providing elsewhere for the Agricultural Bureau.

I thought myself that the General Land Office had little enough room. I had some opportunities of knowing about that. It was a beautiful office, well arranged, all the furniture fitted to the building, where it ought to remain permanently, at very heavy cost to the Government. It is one of the best fitted up offices of the Government, and it is so arranged that all the files are immediately accessible and very secure indeed. I cannot conceive of a much better arranged office than it was. But I understand that since the business of the Pension Office has increased so very much since the war, eleven rooms have been taken from the General Land Office and given to the Pension Office, and still the business of the Pension Office is not sufficiently provided for in rooms. I know that you cannot take more than these eleven rooms from the General Land Office without very materially interfering with the business of the people. That is the people's office, most emphatically. The people from many States have business in that office every day in the year; and I am very reluctant to see the files so disturbed that they cannot be turned to immediately, and with great convenience and certainty.

Let the Bureau of Agriculture be provided with a building. It need not be an expensive building. The files of the Agricultural Bureau will never be of much value. Its business completes itself each year. It gathers seeds and gathers information, &c., and it cannot have very valuable files such as belong to the General Land Office and the Pension Office. A cheap building, therefore, can be built for it. It need not even be fire-proof, I suppose. There are gardens down here, as has been suggested, sufficient to furnish ample room for a building of that kind, where the Commissioner of Agriculture, a very accomplished and elegant gentleman as he is, can have his baronial mansion in the center of his grounds, and may superintend the whole thing admirably. One hundred thousand dollars I understand will build a very elegant house for him. Let him have it; let him have his seeds and rats all to himself; and there need be no more trouble in the Interior Department. I hope the bill will pass as reported.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not desire to make any factious opposition; but I do insist that to enter upon the work of erecting a new building at this time, with prices as they are now, is at least a piece of folly, if not of wickedness. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has very well said, in the communication which has been read, that it will cost twice as much to build a building now as at any other time. This appropriation of $100,000 will build about as much as $40,000 would in ordinary times. At a time like this, when labor is almost impossible to be had, when prices have gone up to fabulous figures, the proposition comes in and is coolly made here for this Department now to have appropriated to it $100,000 to build a new building, as if Washington had no buildings.

I do not insist that this bureau or Department shall be in the Interior Department building. I am anxious to repeal the resolution that was passed which the first section of this bill proposes to repeal. I am willing to agree to the first section. I would not insist on taking rooms from the Land Office if they cannot be appropriately spared; but I object to the third section which appropriates $100,000 to erect a new building, and I think that is an appropriation which it would be at least unwise to make at this time. That is all I have to say about it. If Senators think this a good time to commence erecting buildings they will so vote. I like to discharge my public duties as I would my private duties. I would not undertake to build for myself a building now in Washington or anywhere else with prices and labor and the condition of the country such as they are. We are able to stay here in Washington because we have got a standing Army, and we have kept it so for three years; and now, just at such a time as this, when our currency is going the Lord knows where, we are proposing to appropriate $100,000 to build a new building for the Agricultural Department. When the Department was created we were assured it would not add expense to the Government. That I recollect was one of the arguments used in the Senate when the measure was introduced to have a separate Department. I will not prolong the debate. I only want to vote against this third section of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to suggest to the author of the bill to amend it in the third line of the third section by inserting the words "when the President shall direct," so that the building need not be erected immediately.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I move to amend the bill in the third line of the third section after the word "agriculture" by inserting the words "when the President shall direct."

Mr. McDUGALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana, who has been a Commissioner of the General Land Office, whether when the resolution was passed giving rooms in the Department of the Interior to the Agricultural Department there were not rooms in it not used and whether they are not now vacant, having no particular present employment and never have had any.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from California asks me whether at the time rooms were assigned in the Interior Department to this Agricultural Bureau there were not unoccupied rooms in the General Land Office.

Mr. McDUGALL. No; in the part of the building heretofore assigned to the General Land Office.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On the second and third stories that are peculiarly appropriated to the General Land Office there were none, and there was a want of room after the eleven rooms were assigned to the Pension Office; but there is a basement story that the General Land Office cannot use. It was used to some extent to store away seeds, I believe, some time ago. The valuable files I think were never safe to be put down so low as that, and I do not think so now. Perhaps that may do for the Agricultural Department.

Mr. POMEROY. I learn that there are now six good rooms in that basement story that are not used at all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Those are not the rooms that have been taken from the Land Office. The rooms that have been taken are those that were fitted up at the cost of many thousands of dollars for the files, and now it is proposed to take those files out of their places, provided at great cost, and use the rooms to put seeds and such things in. So far as the basement story is concerned, I take no interest in it. I do not think it is fit for the Land Office.

Mr. McDUGALL. I object to the entire third section of the bill; that is, the construction of a new building. We have now twice as much room as can be profitably employed in and about the business of the Government; and we have twice the number of persons in and about these rooms that are required in the transaction of their different departments of business. The idea of making a new structure at this time to accommodate a Department of the Government when we have, properly used, plenty of room, looks to me as a piece of, inexcusable extravagance. For that reason I am opposed at the present time to commencing the erection of a building with an appropriation of $100,000, which may, as buildings have in the course of business here, cost $500,000, or $500,000 multiplied by two.

Then again I differ with the notions expressed by the Senator from Indiana. Whatever he may think of the merits of the present Commissioner who has charge of the Bureau of Agriculture, or whatever I may think, or any other gentleman may think, it was a Department contemplated in the organization of our Government—one which, if well conducted, would be of immense value with proper and legitimate adjuncts. That the material they have for preservation is or should be of great value no one who regards the development of the great paramount interest of the country, that is, that interest which belongs to the soil, can for a moment doubt. The man who says the preservation of the material that belongs to the improvements in the way of production, not only by the distribution of seed but by everything that belongs to the earth and is produced from it—that their preservation, that their organization, that their being put in intelligent form and in intelligent form communicated to the people, and the knowledge obtained preserved, is not of the first value, does not understand what lies at the foundation of the true prosperity of any people.

The Bureau of Agriculture, wisely and well administered, would be of infinite value to all the people of all this country. They have been collecting together not merely all the fruits of the earth and the germs that produce all the fruits of the earth, that they may be distributed and used among our people, but they have been gathering together all the minerals that lay hid throughout our whole country, whether they were of gold, or silver, or iron. Everything developed in the country has found in that Department a place, an office where they can be received, where they can be generalized, and where they can be made accessible to the people of our country, and where, having been not only generalized and made accessible, but put in proper form, may be exhibited so as to become a part of the popular knowledge of the country. The bureau properly is one of the most beneficent offices that exist under our system of Government. I thought so when it was first organized. Whether it has been well administered, whether the person who is chief of the bureau is fit to administer it, is a question foreign to the merits of any question involving legislation on our part.

I myself think that the rooms assigned, as far as I have been advised, in the Department of the Interior by the resolution which it is now proposed to repeal, were assigned for the reason that they were not demanded by the General Land Office. Such is my information. I know that there is a little angry quarrel—I have heard so, at least; I do not know it—between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Agriculture, and we have been surrounded by quarrels in and about gentlemen belonging to the Departments and executive offices; but these things should not disturb the course of business, and certainly not demand from us legislation.

I am satisfied that the resolution referred to should not be repealed, and most certainly, convinced that a bill making an appropriation such as filled the conception of the Senator from Indiana, a beautiful edifice where the Commissioner of Agriculture should sit and dwell surrounded by his own gardens, the fruit of his own genius, that he might cultivate—that that should be done by an appropriation of $100,000, to be multiplied by ten is, in my judgment, a most unsound proposition.

Mr. HARLAN. I regret to say a single word in addition to what I have said, for I know that the patience of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] is well-nigh gone now; but I wish to say that I examined the rooms to which the Senator from Kansas refers, and no one of them, in my opinion, is fit for a clerk to occupy. The Commissioner of Agriculture is now in the basement of the building, and these rooms are still below those that he occupies.

In reply to the remark made by the honorable Senator from California, I will say that this appropriation is to complete the work. The section contains this proviso:

Provided, That the whole cost of the erection of said building shall not exceed the sum appropriated in this act.

I am on both committees, the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Agriculture, and I perceive no other way of arranging this matter satisfactorily to the parties in interest and in such a way as to promote the public welfare. More room is needed; and although it may cost a little more to erect a building of the same size now than it would have done years ago, rents are high in proportion, and if we were to rent a building we should have to pay in excess of former prices also, and thus soon use up the whole appropriation in paying rent for a building large enough for the purpose. I think the bill ought to pass. I do not desire to occupy any more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the third section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the third section as amended.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Doollittle, Harlan, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wilson—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harris, Howe, Morgan, Pomeroy, and Trumbull—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, and Wright—20.

So the bill was passed.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 307. It is a very short bill, which has passed the House of Representatives, entitled "A bill to regulate commerce among the several States."

Mr. WILSON. Before the recess, on my motion, a House bill which is a more important one than this was taken up, and I do not like to give way. I hope the Senator will let us pass that and then I will go with him to take up the bill he mentions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not ask the Senator to give way. I ask to have the bill taken up. It is a very short bill which has passed the House of Representatives, and I pledge the Senate that I shall occupy no time in debate. All I ask is a vote. I see no reason why it should delay the Senate five minutes. I hope the Senate will stand by me in taking it up, and I hope they will vote upon it and pass it, and I expect they will.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand the bill the Senator proposes to take up to be that in regard to the railway?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; the bill in regard to the Camden and Amboy railroad.

Mr. BROWN. Does he suppose that can get through without debate?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly. I am not going to talk about it.

Mr. BROWN. Nobody else does.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will take it up and vote upon it.

Mr. BROWN. Without debate?

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course. I have nothing to say about it. I believe every Senator in this body understands it perfectly, and I certainly shall not say anything about it. I hope it will be taken up and voted upon.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have been anxious to have an adjournment within the course of a couple of weeks at least; but if we are to take up this sort of measures at the close of the session it is impossible; and certainly this bill will not pass without some debate. The Senator ought not to expect that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I pledge the Senator from Indiana that no discussion will take place on the part of the friends of this measure. If its enemies see fit to occupy the time of the Senate, I cannot help that; but I do not think they will. I am going to let them talk themselves out in short time, and I am not going to give them food for a relash of the same speeches. I am going to keep quiet.

Mr. CONNESS. How long is this discussion to go on before the vote is taken?

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 9, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Howe, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, and Wilkinson—9.
NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Clark, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Powell, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Hale, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—10.

So the motion to take up the bill was not agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume the consideration of the bill which was before it at the time it took a recess.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. There is an amendment pending, I believe, to strike out the word "and" in the eleventh line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. It is my purpose to detain the Senate but for a single moment in stating the object of this bill.

Some months ago General Sherman wrote a very pressing letter to General Holt, urging some action in regard to this question. He said that humanity required some legislation; that at least a thousand lives in his department would be saved by the adoption of his suggestions. He stated that the country was infested by guerrillas; that they were committing crimes that made humanity blush; that they were continually arresting these men and trying them before military commissions and convicting them, but the sentences had to be sent on to Washington before they could be executed, and it took an average of six months before any answer came back; and during that time, not having prisons in which to put these persons, many of them escaped; it made the punishment of guerrillas uncertain; and the result was that the people, where they had the strength, were taking the power into their own hands, and were retaliating upon these guerrillas; that our soldiers when they captured them, now very often, to use a phrase of the soldiers, "lost them in the swamps," or "they fell off a log," and were "lost in bringing them in." He said it was necessary that these guerrillas should be put on the same footing as spies, as murderers, and that class of men, be tried and convicted, and the sentence carried into effect by the general commanding the department.

This bill was prepared by General Holt, was sent to the committees here, reported in the House of Representatives, passed that body, and is now before us. An amendment has been adopted to it; and I trust the bill will receive the support of the Senate. I believe as a question of simple humanity that it ought to be passed. The intelligence that comes to us now from every quarter of the country is that these guerrillas are more active and more fiendish than ever. If we want to check them they must be speedily punished, and if we want to prevent the people whom they are attempting to murder or the soldiers in the field from executing upon them summary punishment, we must, when we arrest them and try them, punish them promptly, and let all parties see that it is a great crime that must be speedily and swiftly punished. We are convicting them. I saw an account that there were five executed the other day in the West. The guerrilla that shot General McCook has been taken, and although he joined the rebel army since, he has been tried, convicted, and sentenced to be executed, and execution will undoubtedly follow. I hope that the bill will pass without any opposition.

A word in regard to the definition of "guerrilla." General Holt tells me that it is just as well understood as the word "spy," and as clearly defined and understood in his office and in the court-martials and military commissions, and they are tried just as regularly as though they were mutineers or murderers or spies. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will pass the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to hear the bill read as it now stands.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, shall apply as well to the sentences of military commissions as to those of courts-martial; and hereafter the commanding general in the field or the commander of the department, as the case may be, shall have power to carry into execution all sentences against guerrillas for robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, and for violation of the laws and customs of war, as well as sentences against spies, mutineers, deserters, and murderers.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That every officer authorized to order a general court-martial shall have power to pardon or mitigate any punishment ordered by such court, including that of confinement in the penitentiary, except the sentence of death or of cashiering or dismissing an officer, which sentences it shall be competent during the continuance of the present rebellion for the general commanding the army in the field, or the department commander, as the case may be, to remit or mitigate; and the fifth section of the act approved July 17, 1862, chapter two hundred and one, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, so far as it relates to sentences of imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] had prepared an amendment to the first section, and I thought it was a very proper amendment, and as he is not in I will offer it. It is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this section shall be confined in its application to the States in which insurrection has been declared to exist, and the term "guerrillas" herein contained shall not be held to include persons employed in the authorized military service of the enemy.

Mr. WILSON. I think that amendment had better not be put in the bill. I am very well satisfied on inquiry of those who understand this subject, who know all about it and have it before them every day, that it would be a great disadvantage to do it. Take, for instance, the State of Missouri; all the accounts are that portions of the State are overrun with guerrillas. There is no other power to arrest and try them but the military power. They are doing that. They are trying these men; and they executed five out there a few days ago. They are imprisoning and fining them according to the enormity of their offenses on the loyal people. They are a class of men that work in daytime and are out murdering during the night. They are now committing terrible ravages on the country. Perhaps at no period of our history have the guerrillas been so formidable and so cruel as at the present time.

There will be no sort of trouble come from this bill. These men are now tried wherever found, whether they are in Kentucky, or Tennessee, or in Missouri, or any of the other States that are in the war regions of the country; of course not in the regions of the country where there are not some raids or liability to raids. I think the bill is just what it ought to be; and I am sure that the Senator from Indiana, if he had devoted any considerable time to the subject in consultation with those who have the administration of it and examined the letters of military officers from the field, would be satisfied that the passage of this bill will have a tendency to check these crimes and prevent people taking the power into their own hands. One of the worst features of war anywhere is when people undertake to avenge their own wrongs; and when soldiers become accustomed to arrest bad men and they find they are allowed to make their escape or are not punished, they make up their minds they will not take them prisoners, but will shoot them on the way. It is a very bad thing and ought to be checked.

Mr. WILLEY. I have some doubt about the operation of this bill, arising out of the fact that however well the term "guerrilla" may be understood in the Departments here, I myself have no very definite idea of its application. But I rose principally to state that if we are to have this bill passed, I should regret, if it is to have any beneficial effect, that it should be confined simply to the States declared to be in insurrection. If the Senator from Indiana had had some of the experience that we have had in West Virginia he would be very glad to avail himself of any remedy which would have a tendency to prevent the murderous, diabolical cruelties and depredations of these worse than fiends. Men shoot down our farmers on the highway going to mill; drag ministers out of the pulpit and hang them on the trees in front of their churches, or take them away and shoot them a short distance off. They commit every species of inhumanity and diabolical cruelty. That kind of cruelty and depredation is yet to some extent prevalent in a considerable portion of West Virginia. I imagine it is the same in Kentucky, and the intelligence is that it prevails to a very great extent in Missouri. If this bill is to be passed, and if it is to have any beneficial effect, these are the very States—Missouri and West Virginia and Kentucky—where these benefits would be most felt, because it is in those States I imagine that the greatest depredations are committed by these guerrillas. Within the lines of the enemy themselves there is not much of it, or even in those portions of the States within our lines that are declared to be in insurrection there is not so much of it as there is in the States of Missouri, Kentucky, and West Virginia.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the Senator having the bill in charge and the Senator from West Virginia take exception especially to the first part of the proviso, and as the Senator from West Virginia represents one of the States which would be excepted by the proviso, I am willing to strike that out of the amendment.

So far as I am myself concerned, the principal purpose I had in offering the amendment was to prevent troublesome questions arising during the prosecution of the war. If we, under such a law as this, execute persons because they are found in small bands, when they in fact belong to the army of the enemy, we shall find ourselves met with retaliation on the part of the rebels. Senators recollect the case that grew up in Kentucky where two officers of the regular army of the enemy were executed under an order of General Burnside. One of my own townsmen, a captain in the Army, whom I esteemed very highly indeed, was selected at Richmond by lot to be put to death because of that, and barely escaped, though he finally did, and is at home now. But such questions ought not to arise if we can avoid them.

I understand it is the policy of the Government to treat the regular forces of the South as belligerents. The last part of the proviso simply applies to that; that the term "guerrilla" shall not be construed to include persons who are in the regular service of the rebel army. By that proviso we shall avoid very disagreeable and embarrassing questions which can do the service no good. If I have the authority to do it, I modify the proviso by striking out the first clause which excludes the States not in insurrection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator modifies his amendment, and it will be read as modified.

The Secretary read the amendment as modified, to add to the first section the following proviso:

Provided, That the term "guerrillas," herein contained, shall not be held to include persons employed in the authorized military service of the enemy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from West Virginia will look closely at this bill he will see that it does not provide for punishing anybody who is not to be punished by existing laws. That is not the object of the bill. The object of the bill is simply to do away with the necessity of sending to the President the finding of the court for his approbation, and to let the finding be carried into execution without sending to the President for an approval of it. That is the law now as to many offenses. The department commanders have authority by existing laws to carry into execution the findings of courts-martial and military commissions in a number of instances; but the department commanders have not authority to carry into execution the judgments of the courts in other cases. The object of this bill is not to create a new offense, not to punish anybody as a guerrilla or otherwise who is not punishable by existing laws, but simply to do away with the delay occasioned by sending all the findings of these courts to Washington to be approved of by the President before the finding is carried into execution. That is the whole of it. There is no creation of a new offense by this bill. The first seven lines have reference to an existing law, and the eighth line commences in these words:

And hereafter the commanding general in the field, or the commander of the department, as the case may be, shall have power to carry into execution all sentences against guerrillas for robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, and for violation of the laws and customs of war, as well as sentences against spies, mutineers, deserters, and murderers.

The only change from existing law is to allow the department commander to carry into execution the finding of the court in the cases named, as well as in the case of spies and deserters.

Mr. WILLEY. I so understood the bill. The Senator from Illinois misinterpreted me if he supposed I was opposing the bill. I was opposing that portion of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana which proposed to exclude my State for instance—I spoke for that only—from the operation of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from Indiana by adding, "and whose operations shall be conducted according to the laws of war." I hope the Senator will accept that.

Mr. JOHNSON. What the laws of war are in cases of this description there are a variety of opinions about. The rebel authorities suppose (and I regret to say that in some instances I think they are right) that some of our officers and soldiers have not conducted themselves according to the laws of war; and if we permit ourselves to judge of what are the laws of war under the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, and we are found executing those who are doing what they are being tried for doing under the authority of the confederate government, they will do the same thing as against our men, and the result will be retaliation on both sides. I think it would be better, if the honorable member would concur with me, that he should withdraw his amendment and let the bill stand as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maryland what necessity there is for the proviso of the Senator from Indiana. This bill does not create any offense. I have not understood that there was any complaint or any trouble as to the character of the offense; and why not leave that just as the law now stands? It is not proposed to amend it at all. We have not understood—at least I have not—that there has been any difficulty which this proviso would settle.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am told there has been difficulty in point of fact. Two or three men have been hung or shot who it was said should not have been treated in that way. I am as willing to leave it to the authorities as anybody else; but although it may be that the Judge Advocate General understands what a guerrilla is, it is by no means true (because the honorable member from Massachusetts has not told us what the understanding of the Judge Advocate General is) that his understanding of it is our understanding; and it is still less probable that his understanding of it will be found to be the understanding of the several commissions who are to try these offenses. There is nothing in this bill, however, which authorizes the trial of any offenses which could not be tried before. As I understand it, it gives to the military commission the authority to try the same offenses as court-martials could try now. The difference between what the law now is and what it will be in addition to that particular is, that the sentence is to be carried out, although it may be capital, without the consent of the President. Upon that there is no difference of opinion, I understand, in the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think there is any objection particularly to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana; I do not see any myself; but inasmuch as this bill did not create any new offense, I thought it was just as well to leave it as it was, and not undertake to put on a limitation now unless there had been some difficulty in the practical operation of the existing law, and I was not aware that there was any, which this amendment would be likely to obviate. My understanding of the bill is that it is not intended to apply to the cases of persons who are in the regular organized service of the rebels.

Mr. WILSON. That is the understanding of it certainly. I do not know that it will do any harm to put it in here in the shape of a proviso, although I do not think it necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is safer to put it in.

Mr. WILSON. It may be safer, but it is certainly understood to refer to persons not regularly in the service of the confederate States in the army. One person who was in that service, the murderer of General McCook, was captured as a prisoner and has been tried and ordered to be executed. The Government has taken this ground: the offense was committed before he was in the service, when he was acting as a guerrilla, without authority; and he has been tried, although he belonged to the rebel army when captured, and has been sentenced, and is awaiting simply an examination by the President to order his execution.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he is not aware that these guerrillas are organized in the rebel service, that they are organized as partisan rangers and commissioned as such. We have had some of them twice captured and twice paroled, and among them one of the most notorious guerrillas in our neighborhood. They are for the most part men who were scoundrels before the war, timber thieves, as we call them in the country, men who had plenty of pork in the winter and no hogs in the summer. [Laughter.] And yet these men, who are constantly committing their depredations within thirty or forty miles of where I live, in northwestern Virginia, are under regular commission as partisan rangers. We passed a law in our State to punish them, but when they are taken the United States claim them as prisoners of war, and to avoid difficulty in the exchanges they have generally been given up. If some amendment like that which has been offered by the Senator from California could be adopted, to add if necessary a new description here, I think it would be of service. So far as regards these partisan bands who roam about and do these things which the laws of war do not warrant, we ought to have the privilege, when we can catch them, of putting them where they will do so no more.

Mr. CONNESS. Such has been my understanding in regard to these partisan bands. My opinion is that they have been authorized by the so-called confederate government. I think there is scarcely a doubt about that. The Senator from Massachusetts says a good many of them are. I think there is no doubt but that they have placed them under orders for the very purpose of saving them, and in case we should punish them for their infamous crimes and excesses making a claim against us for the act.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Illinois that there is no necessity for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana; that there is no new crime created by this bill. There is simply a mode provided for punishing crimes of a scandalous and heinous character, violative of all the laws that govern civilized warfare. The courts that are to try these offenses will understand the question, understand the laws of war, understand the jurisdiction given them by this bill. But if you are going to add the proviso of the Senator from Indiana and adopt it, that no matter what crime these guerrillas may commit, no matter in what manner they may carry on the war, or what acts they may perpetrate, if they are under orders by the so-called confederate government they are not to be subjected to trial and punishment, then I think you should amend the language so that they should be held, if under orders, to observe the laws of civilized warfare. Those are well understood. The military commission into whose hands they would fall for trial or be brought before will understand the entire case. I hope the amendment I have proposed will be adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I have modified my amendment at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois by inserting the word "regularly" before "authorized," so as to say that the term guerrilla shall not be understood to include persons who are in the regularly authorized force of the rebellion. I certainly have no sympathy with the class of persons who are to be punished, but I do have a sympathy for our own soldiers who are in the field who are likely to suffer if we by law or otherwise depart from the usages and principles of war. I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from California, because I think it is likely to cause troublesome questions. Suppose that one of our soldiers were taken from the regular service a prisoner by the South; they put him to death; refuse to treat him as a prisoner, and then when we call on the authorities there to know about it and proceed to retaliate for it, we are told that the soldier was not conducting himself as a soldier ought, that his operations were not according to the usages of war. Would we receive that as a sufficient answer? I do not know how this question is, but the Government has treated the army of the South as a belligerent, that the persons taken in war are to be treated as prisoners of war. That has been decided. Now the question is, whether we ought to say that any of the soldiers of the South taken in acts not authorized by the usages of war shall be put to death because of that. I think it is a doubtful question, and perhaps will give some trouble. The Senate can do as they like about it. I have but little care about it.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not proposed to put them to death. Their punishment will entirely depend on the degree of excesses they may commit.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to know from the chairman of the committee whether he understands the view of the Administration to be that a soldier who is a regular soldier, authorized by his Government, taken in an act not authorized by the usages of war, may then be treated otherwise than as a prisoner of war. To illustrate: I noticed in a letter which was read by my colleague yesterday from a gallant colonel from Indiana, that he spoke in the course of his letter of having been directed to burn a town, and the soldiers went into one of the private houses and took the silver-ware. It was afterwards charged before the McDowell investigation that the silver-ware was not accounted for by Colonel Slack. He says in his explanation that it was taken by the soldiers, and by some lieutenant was hid in the ground. Certainly this thing of making war on private property, stealing private property on either side, is not according to the usages of war; but if a soldier be taken doing an act not authorized by the usages of war, is he to be treated as a criminal or as a prisoner of war? That whole question ought to be understood when we vote upon the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the Government, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia, treats even these wandering bands of robbers and murderers who are regularly in the service as prisoners of war when they were captured. They have been delivered up as such. When we have captured men belonging to Mosby's gang we have treated them, I think, as prisoners of war. We have so treated similar bands in other parts of the country. These guerrillas are a class of men who are fighting on their own hook, who fight their own battles. They are generally men who are acting from revenge or from the desire to plunder, and they are committing all sorts of offenses. At the present time they are exceedingly formidable in middle Tennessee, overrunning everything, murdering men everywhere. They are very strong in portions of Kentucky, and they are strong in Missouri. Undoubtedly mixed with them are some persons who are regularly in the rebel service; but I suppose it is the practice of the Government when it finds that class of men—necessity imposes it on them—to recognize them as soldiers of the confederate States.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is not ten years since the term "guerrilla" was a popular term in our country, when the people of all the States of the Union I think without exception, and the people of England as well, thought that that was an honorable term. When Wellington fought the Peninsular campaign, and when the people of Spain joined the standard of England, or England lent her assistance to Spain for the purpose of establishing the rights of Spain as against French aggression, the guerrillas of the mountains in Spain challenged and commanded the admiration of the free people of the world. They were guerrillas. They were fighting for their homes, their native land, and their independence of French subjugation.

We have heard of guerrillas again since that time, and we understand that there is a guerrilla warfare carried on now by the people of Mexico as against French aggression in their country. They, with their party chiefs, occupy the mountain passes in particular locations, and when they acquire sufficient force pounce down like the falcon upon their game; and so far as I know, in such conduct they have the admiration of the American people. They are guerrillas.

In the war of the Revolution there were partisan bands invited by our own Government; and who has challenged more of the admiration of the young men that now have grown to be old men and the young men who are still young and the lads growing up in the land than Marion, a partisan leader, and in the same sense a guerrilla?

I am charitable enough to believe that the people of various portions of the South, certainly many persons of the South, think they are right in maintaining this war against our Government; and there are chiefs of counties, and, if you please, lords of mountains, who can bring about them crowds of men willing to follow their arms for the purpose of making war upon the enemy.

There are these things we all know, for we have had the severe experience of the fact. We know that their conduct in this respect has been invited by their government; and so it would be by our Government were we in the same position with them, on the defensive. There never has been a war of invasion that, with the general consent of the public authority of the invaded party, the people have not been allowed to meet together, band themselves together, choose their leaders, and make partisan war. Such has been our own history. Such has been the history of similar wars in Europe. Such is a part of the history of this war. The partisan leaders who now disturb us on the banks of the Mississippi are only carrying out the policy that has belonged to defensive war always. They have done it with the consent of the authorities of their government.

It is true that in old and barbarous times the partisan leader, the chief of a clan, the lord of a house was drawn and quartered if he was made captive in battle. Long since such a rule was ignored as a rule of the laws of war. Mankind have pronounced such proceedings inhuman since the time Montrose walked to the scaffold in the city of Edinburgh.

There may be such persons as are described by the Senator from West Virginia—men who have no hogs in the summer and plenty of pork in the winter; there may be those men who live in the bush by day and about the house at night; but they furnish no more foundation for law than did the Foresters of the time of Richard for the laws of England.

If we regard the well-established laws of war and the rules of Christian civilization as they have incorporated themselves into the modern laws of war, we must recognize certain principles, and among them is this, that while we may conquer and subject those who are in arms against us as a body of people, being our enemies, when we have captured their persons they have that kind and charitable right that does not authorize the execution of a belligerent either on the gallows or by the ax.

Since the time of the French Revolution, and even in that time, such doctrines did not obtain. I trust that no such doctrine will obtain in this country as this, that when we find an enemy in arms and he does not have in his pocket a commission, or his captain commanding has not a commission from the chief of the confederate government, he being opposite and adversary, he is to be hung like a felon and his head cut off and placed on the steeple of the nearest town. These things have been done but a century gone. The barbarism of past ages I do not wish to see repeated in the age to which I belong. The barbarism of ruder Governments I do not wish to see repeated in a Government where we profess to be an enlightened people, highly civilized, and with the light and instruction of the Christian religion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question returns on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I want to call the attention of my colleague to the word "guerrillas." It is not an accurate expression, though it is a common expression, and I think it ought not to pass into our legislation. "Guerrilla" is a Spanish word meaning "a little war;" and it first came into use in the English language after what is known as the Peninsular campaign in Spain when the French soldiers were pursued by partisan bands or guerrilla bands, and the engagements that were incident to such pursuits went under the name of "guerrillas" or "little wars." I have in my hand a Spanish dictionary which I sent for into our Library, and I will read the definition of this word:

"Guerrilla: a diminutive; a war of partisans; predatory warfare; skirmish; a slight engagement."

It is not a term describing the men or the parties who are engaged in this business, but it describes the business. Therefore to be accurate there ought to be some other word associated with it, as for instance "marauders." I would suggest wherever the term "guerrilla" occurs you add "marauders," so as to read "guerrilla marauders." "Guerrilla" should be the qualifying term and "marauder" would be the noun denoting the men or the parties engaged. That would be an accurate phrase; the other, I think all agree, is not an accurate phrase though it is a very common one; we use it familiarly every day. I think it would be better both in the title of the bill and then in the first section where the phrase occurs. My colleague says he has no objection, and I move where the term "guerrillas" occurs there be substituted the words "guerrilla marauders."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. There are one or two amendments that we agreed to on another bill, and when I proposed last night to put them on the bill for the amendment of the enrollment act it was objected to. We, however, reported them, and they are very important provisions—very little things, but important in their way. I offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That when a soldier in hospital shall be discharged from the military service, but shall be unable to leave or to avail himself of his discharge in consequence of sickness or wounds, and shall subsequently die in such hospital, he shall be deemed to have died in the military service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That payments which have been made by paymasters to non-commissioned officers of volunteer regiments from the date of their enrollment and for a time previous to their muster into the service of the United States shall, if otherwise correct, be allowed in the settlement of such paymasters' accounts.

Mr. CONNESS. What has this amendment got to do with the punishment of guerrillas? It seems to me you make very queer acts.

Mr. WILSON. The title reads, "and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer another amendment, to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to appoint a book-keeper for the national armory at Springfield, whose compensation shall be

$1,200 per annum, and the compensation of the clerks at said armory shall be $1,000 per annum.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to suspend the pending and all prior orders to take up House joint resolution No. 83.

Mr. WILSON. I think we can get through with this bill very soon now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves to suspend all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 83, authorizing the President to construct a military road from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee.

Mr. WILSON. Give us three minutes and we can get this bill through. I have no more amendments.

Mr. GRIMES. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the amendment, as I find it is objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have the amendment in regard to paymasters explained before we pass the bill.

Mr. WILSON. Paymasters have paid men in regiments who were selected as non-commissioned officers and acted as such prior to their being mustered into the service. They could not be regularly appointed until the colonel of the regiment was appointed, and he could not be commissioned until the regiment was full. Some of them acted a few weeks and have been paid as sergeants and non-commissioned officers; but when the accounts came before the Comptroller, Mr. Brodhead, they were not allowed. They ought to be adjusted. It prevents the settlement of a great many accounts, making great embarrassment. After all the examination I can give it I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment that has just been adopted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That when a soldier in any hospital shall be discharged from the military service, and shall be unable to leave or to avail himself of the discharge in consequence of sickness or wounds, and shall subsequently die in such hospital, he shall be deemed to have died in the military service.

I wish to go back and cover precisely similar cases where soldiers have already died in hospitals. Several such cases have come under my notice. I move to amend it so as to make it apply to the case of every soldier who shall have died or shall hereafter die in hospital, making it retrospective.

Mr. WILSON. There are several cases of that kind.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line two of section five after the word "hospital" to insert the words "shall have been discharged or;" so that it will read, "that when a soldier in any hospital shall have been discharged or shall be discharged," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrilla marauders, and for other purposes."

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that all other business be suspended for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 305.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 305) to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and the committee discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. The reason why the committee was discharged was because they had before them Senate bill No. 259, upon the same subject, and they made a report upon that bill with amendments. It is too late to act upon the amendments to the Senate bill at this stage of the session, but a few words by way of amendment in the House bill will make the House bill precisely the same with the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask, therefore, that that bill be now considered.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, which provides that the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or appropriation or damage to property by the Army or Navy, or any part of the Army or Navy, engaged in the suppression of the rebellion from its commencement to its close. All claims of loyal citizens for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States may be submitted to the Quartermaster General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it is to be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and, if convinced that it is just, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of the Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement. All claims of loyal citizens for subsistence actually furnished to the Army may be submitted to the Commissary General of Subsistence, accompanied with such proof as each claimant may have to offer; and it is to be the duty of the Commissary General of Subsistence to cause each claim to be examined, and, if convinced that it is just, and that the subsistence has been received or taken actually for the use of the Army, then to report each case for payment to the Third Auditor of the Treasury with a recommendation for settlement. The action of the Quartermaster General and of the Commissary General of Subsistence, as the case may be, and of the accounting officers of the Treasury is to be final and conclusive upon such claims, which may be paid either by special requisition and warrant, or by a disbursing officer of the quartermaster and subsistence departments as the case may be, or as may in each case be most proper or convenient; and the officers paying are to be released from all liability for or on account of the property so paid for; but no claim is to be examined, audited, or allowed under the provisions of this act until the claimant shall have taken, subscribed, and filed with such claim the oath prescribed by "An act to prescribe an oath of office," approved July 2, 1862, except so much of the oath as relates to the discharge of the duties of office; and every person who shall falsely take the oath under the provisions of this act is to be liable to the penalties prescribed by the act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it will not do to pass such a bill as that at this hour of the night. It is a bill that needs a great deal of consideration. It involves very important principles and a great deal of money.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will permit me to perfect the bill in the way it is proposed to be amended. The bill has been pending here for some time. It will not involve much money. It only applies to stores actually furnished.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We do not know what the amount is. It is a bill that needs careful and deliberate consideration. It makes a very large draft on the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has been before the Judiciary Committee and considered. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "citizen," in the second line of the second section, these words, "in the States not in rebellion."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask whether that is reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. This of itself is not. We have reported a Senate bill. This bill has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understood that the Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, because they reported the Senate bill which corresponds with it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state the precise condition of this matter if Senators will allow me.

There were several bills to provide for the payment of damages and claims growing out of the war which were before the Committee on the Judiciary. We took up one of the bills and struck all of it out but two sections, which we agreed to report, and we reported it to the Senate, striking out everything but two sections. In the mean time the House of Representatives passed a bill something like our two sections which we had reported; and that coming into the Senate, the Senator from Maryland now takes up the House bill and proposes, as I understand, to amend it so as to correspond with the bill which we have reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. It is for the Senate to consider what shall be done with it.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to have an opportunity to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to what I believe has been a mistake that has been made in regard to the enrollment bill which has been sent to the House of Representatives. When the bill was under consideration here, the motion made was to substitute in place of it the bill that passed the Senate and it was so voted; but if I am correctly informed that was not the amendment which was sent from the desk to the House of Representatives; so that there is a mistake in regard to the bill which has been sent there. The bill which has been sent to the House of Representatives as the amendment adopted by the Senate is a bill that did not pass this body and does not contain the sentiment of the Senate. I think it is a matter that is worthy of consideration as the House of Representatives is acting upon it and acting upon it under that mistaken impression. I submit it to those who are more familiar with the affairs in the Senate as to how it can be best remedied. I believe the House of Representatives have already acted upon the bill which they supposed we sent them.

Mr. JOHNSON. If so, I suppose that can wait until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. GRIMES. I think there is no trouble about it. I understand the House of Representatives have non-concurred in our amendment, and if that is so, if there was a mistake in the substitution of the original bill, the committee of conference can carry out the views of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know whether they have concurred or non-concurred.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the second section of the bill before the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move the same amendment, in the second line of the third section to insert, after the word "citizens," the words "in the States not in rebellion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I move to strike out all after the first section of the bill. I think the first section is a wise provision. I am inclined to think from my recollection of the law that the Court of Claims would not have jurisdiction to pronounce judgment in the case of the claims mentioned in the first section; but if they have any such authority I think it should be withheld.

With regard to the quartermaster and commissary departments we have laws governing the transaction of their business; we have an abundance of quartermasters and an abundance of commissaries; we have more I think than occasion has demanded. Persons furnishing the quartermaster's or commissary's department anything called for by either department would have vouchers, and all that would be required of them at the Third Auditor's office would be to have their vouchers in proper form. I do not believe there is a detached part of the Army that cannot put their quartermaster and commissary accounts in proper shape. If we give this wide license for a court to be established by the Commissary General and a court to be held by the Quartermaster General to undertake the settlement of disputed accounts that they may report them to the Third Auditor, it would give more business to those two departments than could be discharged if we multiplied those two offices by ten. It would give rise to an infinite amount of claims. This bill would make the Quartermaster General's office and the Commissary General's office courts where they would require about twelve judges, each sitting by himself, to determine what should be returned to the Third Auditor. I do not believe any of them should go into such a business; I therefore move that the second and third sections be stricken out of the bill.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes twelve, noes not counted.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendments be offered the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to the bill being reported to the Senate, but I must strenuously object to further action on it to-night. The Senate is very thin and this bill involves a large amount of money. It is the first time my attention has been called to it, and I wish to look into it further.

Mr. JOHNSON. There will be no objection to that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the bill will not be laid aside. It is a matter of very great importance to the border States which have been traversed by these armies. We have been trying to get something through, and this is not really half what we ought to have. It is a matter of very great importance. The House of Representatives passed this bill and sent it to us, and it is the only thing we can get, I suppose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want a chance to prepare some amendments to it if it is to be finally acted upon at this session. I cannot consent, without making a long fight on it—which I do not want to do here to-night without knowing more about it—at this late hour to see a bill of this sort passed, which involves an immense amount of money, as I see it does. I want time to look at it. I cannot sit down here now and examine it when my attention is for the first time called to it.

Mr. POWELL. I ask, then, that it be made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock or twelve o'clock. ["No," "No."]

Mr. FESSENDEN. It will not do to make special orders at this period of the session.

Mr. JOHNSON. We can call it up to-morrow on motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the bill goes over I desire to say that on comparing the bill which is under consideration with the two sections which the Committee on the Judiciary agreed to, I find there is some difference between them. The two sections agreed to limited the claims to cases where the officers of the Government had taken for commissary or quartermaster purposes the property of a loyal citizen in some of the States not in insurrection for the use of the Army. It must have been taken by an officer for the use of the Army in a loyal State and have been received and actually used by the Army. I do not see why those claims should not be paid, at any rate, it seems to me, where the proper officer took the property, where it is confined to property taken by officers. If a quartermaster or commissary goes out and takes a load of hay from a loyal citizen in a loyal State and gives him a receipt for it, is not the Government bound to pay? I think it ought to pay. These are the limitations in the bill which was agreed to by the Judiciary Committee. This House bill, however, even as it has been amended by the Senator from Maryland, is not so closely guarded; it is not confined as I can see to property actually used by the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, it is. Such is my understanding of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; the second section of the House bill states, "and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of said Army." The Senate bill goes on to say "and used by the Army." But the House bill does not put in those words. It is enough if some officer takes them, whether the Army ever got them or not.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is furnished to the Army. I suppose it to be equivalent. If the Senator will permit me I will offer a further amendment by saying "furnished to and actually used by the Army." I consider the phraseology as identical, and after that let the bill go over.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then the whole of the House bill from and after the word "and," in line ten of section three, to the end of the section, is a new provision entirely, and I am not prepared to say what the effect of that provision may be. It is in these words:

And the action of the Quartermaster General and of the Commissary General of Subsistence, as the case may be, and of the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be final and conclusive upon such claims, which may be paid either by special requisition and warrant or by a disbursing officer of the quartermaster and subsistence departments, as the case may be, or as may in each case be most proper or convenient; and the officers paying shall be released from all liability for or on account of the property so paid for.

There is no such clause as that in the provision which was agreed to by the Judiciary Committee. I should have much preferred to adopt the two sections that we agreed upon in lieu of these provisions of the House bill, though if the House bill is amended to conform to them, having agreed to the report of the committee, I should be willing to agree to the bill thus amended.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 559) to quiet the titles to lands in the Rancho Laguna de Santos Calle, in the State of California; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to settle the accounts of John S. Phelps, of Missouri, as a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 111) for the relief of Major John A. Whitall, paymaster in the United States Army, on account of lost or stolen vouchers—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 203) for the relief of Jacob Weber—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Seppien—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 569) for the relief of John Williams—to the Committee on Claims.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a bill (S. No. 341) to incorporate the National Academy of Literature and Art, and also to incorporate the National Academy of Moral and Political Sciences; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD TO EAST TENNESSEE.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to take up House joint resolution No. 83, authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee, which was reported yesterday morning by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the motion of the Senator from Kentucky will not prevail. I hardly think it is proper to take up at this stage of the night, when the Senate hardly contains a quorum, a bill of this magnitude that is to involve scores of millions of dollars for the purpose of building a railroad that cannot be constructed within the next five or ten years, and can be of no advantage, in my apprehension, in the conduct of the present war. I trust it will be permitted to go over until to-morrow, when there will be a full Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I think my honorable friend from Iowa greatly overrates the cost of this road

Mr. TRUMBULL. You had better get it up before it is discussed.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on taking up the bill. Debate to a very limited extent is allowed.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not care to say another word upon it, but I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question of taking it up.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I hope this bill may be taken up. I do not think there is a more important measure now pending undisposed of before Congress than this. If we are to hold East Tennessee at all, it is important to have a railroad communicating with our base of operations at Louisville and Cincinnati. As it seems to me, no more important measure can be proposed to the Senate than this. This proposed road will lessen the line of transportation some one hundred and fifty miles from Cincinnati to Knoxville and Chattanooga, and is a very important measure. None more so, I think, can be taken up. We are now at the very last days of the session. I shall not go into the merits of the case, though I should like very much to do it, for I have a map of the whole country showing precisely the railroad connection, &c.; but I have no right to go into it now on the motion to take up. But it does seem to me if we do anything at all within the very few last days of the session, it is time we were commencing this matter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to state barely two facts? The road is already completed from two points, from Cincinnati and Louisville to near Danville, in Kentucky. It is proposed to unite the two branches then to terminate on the Ohio, and take the road by a single line to the neighborhood of Knoxville. It is about one hundred and twenty miles. More than two years ago the War Department had made a contract to have that road executed, built, and put in running order in eight months. I have no idea that it will cost even at the present high rates $5,000,000. If that road had been constructed at the time the contract was made for its construction, it would have saved in transportation alone to the Government up to this time more than twenty million dollars.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Foot, Harris, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Willey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Foster, Grimes, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, and Trumbull—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—23.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 83) authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee.

In accordance with the recommendation in his annual message of 1861, the President of the United States was authorized by an act of Congress, approved January 31, 1862, to open and construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio river into East Tennessee, over such route and under such conditions as in his judgment seemed just and most judicious. That act was modified and partly repealed by a joint resolution, approved July 14, 1862, restraining the President from exercising the discretion confided in him by that act. In a special message, dated April 28, 1864, in accordance with the strong recommendations of all the generals successively commanding in the department of the Ohio, the President called the attention of Congress again to the importance of an early completion of that military railroad as a measure of economy in transportation of supplies and men to the valley of East Tennessee, as a means of suppressing the rebellion and as a perpetual bond of Union. The bill, therefore, authorizes the President to construct that military railroad on such route, with reference to economy, as in his judgment may be most advisable, and in such a manner as may best serve the interests of the Government and insure the most speedy completion of the road.

Mr. GRIMES. In connection with the reading of the bill, I call for the reading of the letter of the Secretary of War and of General Halleck, which were ordered to be printed by the Senate. The Secretary read the following letters:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, June 13, 1864.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of June 1, accompanying a joint resolution of the House of Representatives No. 83, authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee, and inquiring whether, in my judgment, a military necessity exists for the construction of said railroad.

At an early stage of the war, when the enemy held the chief part of Kentucky and Tennessee, a railroad from Danville to Knoxville for a line of supply to an army advancing from the valley of the Ohio into East Tennessee, and which could in a great degree be constructed by the Army as it advanced, was deemed a measure of prime military importance. In that view such a road was recommended to Congress by the President's first annual message in 1861. It was also urged by this Department, and arrangements were made for building the road; but the work was stopped by Congress repealing the statutory provision by authority of which it was undertaken. Since that time the military condition of affairs has undergone a great change. We now hold Knoxville; the enemy have been driven from Tennessee; and there is a railroad line adequate for the transport of troops and Army supplies from Chattanooga to Knoxville.

In view of this change, my judgment in respect to the military necessity of a railroad, such as indicated by your inquiry, is controlled by the following considerations:

1. There already exists an adequate line of railroad supply for the military necessities of East Tennessee.

2. Even if the contemplated line of railroad from Danville to Knoxville were now built, and in working order, a military force would be required to guard it. That could not be spared without greatly impairing the strength of the Army in the field.

3. It is not probable that the proposed road could be constructed in time for any use during this war. Its construction would require a large body of men that could be better employed in the field, and an outlay of several million dollars that are needed to pay troops and support them. The demand created for men to build the road would increase the difficulty of raising troops for the Army, and the cost of the work would increase the war debt and lessen the public credit.

From these considerations, in my judgment, a military necessity for the construction of such road does not now exist. For fuller information your inquiry was referred to General Halleck, chief of the Army staff, whose report is approved by this Department, and a copy of which is herewith submitted.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. HENRY WILSON, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
WASHINGTON, D. C. June 11, 1864.

SIR: By your direction I return herewith the "joint resolution authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee," with my opinion as to the military necessity for such a road.

As there is a railroad now in operation from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee—that is, from Louisville, Kentucky, to Knoxville, Tennessee—I presume the joint resolution refers to the construction of an additional and more direct route, say from Danville, Kentucky, to Knoxville, Tennessee.

Whatever may have been the military necessity of such a railroad when the enemy were in possession of East and Middle Tennessee, northern Alabama, and northern Georgia, that necessity no longer exists. We are now in complete military possession of these portions of territory. The railroad from Nashville to Knoxville is in full operation, and we have steamers running on the Tennessee river from the shoals to Chattanooga and East Tennessee. So long as these routes are kept open there will be no difficulty in supplying our armies in East Tennessee and Georgia, and our depot at Nashville will be replenished by the Cumberland river, and by railroads from Louisville and from the Tennessee river.

Considering the enormous expense, and the great length of time required for the construction of the proposed railroad, the number of troops which will be necessary to guard it against rebel raids when completed, and the vast amount of manual and mechanical labor which its construction will divert from other military objects of more pressing importance, I cannot advise at the present time the building of the proposed railroad as a military necessity.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. W. HALLECK,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not propose to discuss this bill. I am not in voice to do so. I will only make one remark in relation to it. There is no railroad in operation from Louisville to Knoxville any more than there is a railroad in operation from this city or New York city to Knoxville. There is the Louisville and Nashville road in operation, and then there are some lines, that diverge by a most circuitous route that makes the distance from Louisville to Knoxville four or five times as great as this road would be in length, that connect the places. They are connected by a network of railroads in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee away west and south of Knoxville. It is a perversion of language; it imparts a false impression; it is a palpable and willful misstatement of the fact by these high dignitaries to say that there is any railroad in operation from Louisville to Knoxville. There is a railroad completed from Cincinnati through Lexington on to Nicholasville, in the direction of Danville, which would constitute one section of a road with Cincinnati as the northern terminus and Knoxville as the southern. There is a railroad in operation from Louisville to Lebanon in the direction of Knoxville. These two railroads shorten the distance from Cincinnati and Louisville respectively to Knoxville something like half. From Cincinnati to Knoxville would be by railroad some one hundred and eighty miles.

Mr. CLARK. I suppose it is not desirable to consider this bill to-night; and that it may come up as the unfinished business of the Senate to-morrow, with the assent of the Senator from Kentucky I move an adjournment.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator will withdraw his motion for the present, I should like very much to pass a couple of bills for the relief of two paymasters who lost a considerable amount of greenbacks in a vessel that was destroyed by fire by the rebels. ["To-morrow."]

Mr. CLARK. I suggest they had better not be taken up to-night. I know what they are. To-morrow, perhaps, the Senate will give us a little opportunity to pass some private bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 30, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. FERREE.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Eliza Cass Woodbridge, of the State of Michigan, widow of Francis Woodbridge, on the roll of the Pension Office at the rate of twenty dollars per month during her natural life and her widowhood, said pension to date from January 1, 1860.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RACHEL MILLS.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Rachel Mills; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Rachel Mills, of Binghamton, New York, widow of Peter Mills, late major in the United States Army, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence from the 1st of April, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCES PETERSON.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Frances Peterson; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Frances Peterson, of Decatur county, Indiana, on the pension roll of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars a month, to date from the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. M. K. SMITH.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files the papers in the case of Mrs. Mary Kirby Smith, asking for special pension, for the purpose of returning them to the claimant.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. WILDER. I ask the consent of the House for the Committee on Commerce to report back Senate bill No. 242, to establish Portland, in the State of Oregon, and Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, ports of delivery.

There being no objection,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill back to the House, the question being on ordering it to be read the third time.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not see any necessity for making Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, a port of delivery.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I was very much of that opinion myself, but the committee overruled me and directed me to report the bill back to the House.

Mr. BROOKS. Very well, I suppose the object on the Republican side of the House is to make more offices, and I will not undertake to object.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 446) to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

PUBLIC LANDS EXPENSES.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Public Lands Senate joint resolution No. 38, explanatory of the act to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of public lands in the United States, approved May 30, 1862.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISPOSAL OF COAL LANDS.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate bill No. 264, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property in the public domain, the question being on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill provides that where any tracts embracing coal beds or coal fields, constituting portions of the public domain, and which, as mines, are excluded from the preemption act of 1841, and which under past legislation are not liable to ordinary private entry, it shall be lawful for the President to cause such tracts, in suitable legal subdivisions, to be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, after public notice of not less than three months, at a minimum price of twenty dollars per acre; and that any lands not thus disposed of shall thereafter be liable to private entry at said minimum. The bill makes further provision for the details of survey and sale of such lands, and also for protecting the rights of private parties relative thereto.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to inquire whether this bill includes mineral lands.

Mr. JULIAN. It does not; it simply includes coal lands.

Mr. CHANLER. I should like to amend the bill so as to make it obligatory upon the President to protect the interests of Government in respect to these coal lands or mineral lands. It is now left optional for him to act or not as he may see fit.

Mr. JULIAN. I will say to the gentleman from New York there is nothing in this bill which contemplates any disposition of mineral lands at all. It simply refers to coal lands or coal fields.

Mr. CHANLER. Well, sir, I consider coal lands as mineral lands. At any rate the rights of the Government to one require as much protection as the rights of the Government to the other. I hope the bill will be so amended as to make it obligatory upon the President to secure the rights of the Government in respect to these lands.

Mr. JULIAN. I will say that this bill simply provides for the survey of coal lands and coal fields and for the sale of the same at a minimum price of twenty dollars per acre under such regulations, I believe, as the Commissioner of Public Lands may prescribe. The bill has been examined both by the Senate and by the House committees. It was reported to the Senate and passed that body unanimously. I think it is right as it is and I hope it will be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRANT OF LANDS TO KANSAS.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 233, making an additional grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. I think we have already appropriated enough of the public land for one session.

OREGON INDIANS.

The House took up and concurred in a Senate amendment to House bill No. 442, to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians in middle Oregon for a relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty.

JACOB WEBER.

Mr. NOBLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of House bill No. 203, for the relief of Jacob Weber, and to put it on its passage. It is a meritorious private claim, and has been recommended unanimously by the Committee of Claims.

There was no objection; and the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill, which was read, provides that there be paid to private Jacob Weber, of the fourth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $913 33, to reimburse him for money advanced by him to pay Scott Allen, A. Hyatt, Henry Olden, A. W. Cook, Lewis Shindollar, and James Garland, who were employed as teamsters for the fourth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, between the 1st of August, 1861, and the 1st of July, 1862, and received the price of the employment from Jacob Weber, who advanced the same on the quartermaster's certificates to the employes, with the assurance of the quartermaster and the commander of the regiment that the amount so advanced would very soon thereafter be repaid and refunded to him by the Government through the quartermaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NOBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTER-CONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to take up Senate bill No. 302, to encourage and facilitate telegraph communication between the eastern and western continents.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up, and read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to add the following amendment:

Provided, It shall not be lawful for the owners or officers of said telegraph line to make any contract, directly or indirectly, for the transmission of dispatches for any newspaper or newspaper association upon terms different from those open to the enjoyment of all other newspapers and newspaper associations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY A. BAKER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back Senate bill No. 122, for the relief of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker, on the pension roll at the rate of fifty dollars a month from the 21st of October, 1861, to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The pension of this widow according to the law is $360, and this bill proposes to increase it to $600. The committee has uniformly refused to increase the pension of widows of officers, and the simple question is whether that decision shall now be reversed. It is for the House to decide whether an exception shall be made in this case or not.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This bill ought to pass without objection. Every member of the House is familiar with the circumstances of the death of General Baker at Ball's Bluff. The Senate passed this bill granting a pension of fifty dollars a month to his widow. The same increase of pension has been given to the widows of other general officers who have died in the service. I have no disposition to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter. It seems to me that a statement of the case is sufficient to recommend this to the approval of the House.

It is well known that General Baker was a Senator, and that he left the Senate and went into the field for the love of country. He was not a professional soldier and might have kept out of the Army. His position was as distinguished as that of any man in the United States. From purely patriotic motives he left the Senate and went into the field, and fell fighting at the battle of Ball's Bluff.

Mr. SHANNON. I know that the family of General Baker has been left in destitute circumstances, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. ROSS. I regret that the majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have agreed to report adversely on this measure. There are thirteen cases in which Congress has granted additional pensions to the widows of our general officers who have fallen upon the battle-field. It seems to me that it would be invidious and unjust to discriminate against the widow of General Baker. When he was a citizen of Illinois he fought gallantly in the Mexican war, and fell in this war at the head of his command at Ball's Bluff. I think it would be very improper for this Congress to draw a distinction against this case. It presents the extraordinary case of an individual who having for a long period held public offices in the country, as member of Congress, as United States Senator, as general, has left his family in straitened circumstances. And when a case of that kind is presented it appears to me that it commends itself to the consideration of Congress, if the individual has passed through those offices with honesty and integrity.

I deemed it but just to say thus much in favor of the application, which is made on behalf of the widow of a worthy statesman and distinguished general, who discharged every duty devolved upon him well and faithfully.

I have a statement here showing the cases in which additional pension has been granted by the Congress of the United States in cases exactly similar to this, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

Names.	Amount.	Date.	Last of Widows to whom Pensions have been granted by special acts of Congress of a greater rate than $30 per month had were not for Revolutionary Services in the Army.
Elizabeth Craig, widow of Lewis L.	$480 00 per annum.	March 3, 1853.
Elizabeth Amsted, widow of Walker R.	37 50 per month.	Jan. 20, 1853.
Margaret L. Worth, widow of William J.	50 00 "	Jan. 7, 1853.
Pamela Brown, widow of Jacob	50 00 "	Jan. 27, 1853.
Mary B. Waship, widow of Oscar F.	600 00 per annum.	Feb. 26, 1857.
Mary A. M. Jones, widow of Roger	625 00 "	Feb. 13, 1858.
Myra C. Gaines, widow of Edmund F.	600 00 "	Feb. 11, 1859.
Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas	50 00 per month.	March 1, 1860.
Harriet B. Macomb, widow of Alexander	50 00 "	April 7, 1860.
Annella Kelly, widow of Bennett	50 00 "	May 7, 1860.
Fanny M. Smith, widow of Isaac L.	50 00 "	July 12, 1862.
Margaret L. Stevens, widow of Isaac L.	50 00 "	March 3, 1863.
Frances H. Plummer, widow of Joseph B.	50 00 "	March 3, 1863.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. One word more and I will call the previous question.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHALEY. The acts of Congress which have been read by the Clerk, every member upon this floor will remember, were passed in a time of great national and private prosperity; at a time when this country was not burdened by taxation; and at a time when there was less than a million dollars annually paid for pensions. We are now informed by the Committee of Pensions that our pension list runs up to $4,000,000, while according to the best estimates only about one half of those entitled to pensions have made their applications. Consequently when the whole number shall have applied under the present law the pensions will reach $8,000,000.

No one would be more willing than I to increase the pension of Mrs. Baker under other circumstances than those which surround us. You will remember that she will receive thirty dollars a month; you will take into consideration the fact that the Senate of the United States have stricken out from our bill the amendment to increase the pension of the private from eight to eleven dollars a month; and you will take into consideration that we have thousands and hundreds of thousands who are not entitled to a pension, but who have been wounded in the service. Many of them have large families of children and are in a destitute condition. Many of our soldiers have large families, but if they are killed in battle those families cannot obtain a pension. Many of them are now fighting in our armies in the South with no mothers to kneel by their side in their last hours, no wives to wipe the clammy death-sweat from their brow, no brothers to take care of them, and these men leave families to be thrown upon the cold charities of the world or compelled to put up with eight dollars a month. The argument used before the committee was that these people are accustomed to be poor. A very poor argument, indeed.

I repeat, that no one upon this floor would be more willing than myself to increase the pension of Mrs. Baker from thirty to fifty dollars a month; but we are in a great crisis of our national existence and every effort must be devoted to raising the means of carrying on the war. Thirty dollars a month will keep one from starving, and I hope the bill will not pass, and that there will be no increase of pensions from thirty dollars to fifty dollars a month, while so many of our poor soldiers' families are compelled to live on eight dollars a month.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I think this question is perfectly understood, and I shall insist on the previous question after saying a word. The committee were of opinion that if there was to be any increase of pensions that increase should not be in special cases, but by a general law raising the standard of pensions; that we should not simply raise the pensions of those who now draw $360 a year, but of the poor privates who draw but ninety-six dollars a year. And when the period comes in the history of our country that we can afford to be generous in these respects let us pass a law increasing pensions and allowing a greater sum to the widows of all officers and privates also. It was deemed by the committee that it would be improper to single out an individual case which is no stronger than other cases and grant an increase of pension while others as meritorious remain the same. The House, however, understand the case fully, and not wishing to take up more time I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope this bill will not pass. The report of the committee is adverse to it.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay the bill on the table.

On laying the bill on the table 53 voted in the affirmative and 38 in the negative.

Mr. ROSS, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COFFROTH called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH called for tellers on the motion to lay on the table.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, and FARNSWORTH, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 38.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF GENERAL WHIPPLE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 2, granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General Amiel W. Whipple, United States Army, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. This is a case precisely similar to the one just disposed of, and I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a single remark, and to call his attention to some precedents on this subject.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I think the House understands the question thoroughly; we have acted on some fifteen or twenty similar cases.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the gentleman will at least allow me to call his attention to two cases in the last Congress.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order unless the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the motion to lay the bill on the table.

The bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF GENERAL BERRY.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY called for the regular order of business.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask my colleague to give way to me for a moment.

Mr. ALLEY. I yield to my colleague.

RANK OF WARRANT-OFFICERS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the amendment was taken from the Speaker's table, as follows:

After the word "authorized" insert the words "if in his judgment it shall be conducive to the interests of the service."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF C. A. HAUN.

The House, proceeded as the regular order of business, to the consideration of the Senate amendment to House bill No. 466, for the relief of the widow of C. A. Haun, which was to make the pension commence on the 11th of December, 1861.

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill making appropriations for the payment of sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and requested a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Rogers, Johnson, and Jacks, claimants for seats upon this floor as Representatives in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the State of Arkansas, pay and mileage from the time that their credentials were presented.

Mr. DAWES entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. ALLEY moved to take up the bill and report in reference to the construction of an air-line railroad between Washington and New York, and that they be recommitted to the select committee on the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. I hope that some day will be fixed for the consideration of this question.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey. I move that it be postponed till December next.

Mr. ALLEY. I move this day next week.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The subject is not before the House and I object.

TREASURY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the select committee to investigate the charges against the Treasury Department to submit a majority report. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fenton] has a sub-report, and there is a minority report which I ask may be received when prepared; and I now move that the reports be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that that select committee be discharged from the further consideration of that part of the resolution relating to the trade regulations on the western waters, and that it be referred to the committee on the conduct of the war.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I am anxious there should be some action on this question at this session.

The SPEAKER. It will be considered that it can be called up at any time.

T. T. GARRARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. PRUYN, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of T. T. Garrard and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN WILLIAMS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of John Williams; which was read a first and second time.

The report was read.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If there was a contract with a quartermaster, why has he not paid it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The voucher was not in proper form. There is abundant evidence of the furnishing of the wood, for which we propose to pay $68 75.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The principal objection I have to legislating on such questions is the precedent that we are setting for the future. There are thousands of such claims where the quartermasters have failed to make out proper vouchers. If Government officers are to be relieved from the necessity of making proper vouchers I want to know it, for I assure gentlemen we will then have plenty of this business. The sum here is small, but the principle is large.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow the report to be read?

The report was accordingly again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were called for and ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. FARNSWORTH were appointed. The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-three, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CARLISLE DOBLE.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a joint resolution (S. No. 40) for the relief of Carlisle Doble.

The bill directs the Postmaster General to examine and adjust the claims of Carlisle Doble for carrying the mails between Taylor's Falls, Minnesota, and Superior, Wisconsin, in the year 1857, and to pay him such sum of money as shall be found justly and equitably due him for carrying the mails aforesaid.

Mr. DONNELLY. I will say that the bill simply authorizes the Postmaster General to settle the claim upon principles of equity and justice. In this case the contract was made by the postmaster at Superior, Wisconsin, and the Department has no right to recognize it without special legislation. We ask that the claimant shall be paid what is right.

Mr. WILSON. What is the amount?

Mr. DONNELLY. About nineteen hundred dollars.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the bill fix the amount?

Mr. DONNELLY. It does not.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF WISCONSIN.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a joint resolution (S. No. 8) for the relief of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. HALE. I will say that the delegation from Wisconsin are unanimously in favor of this bill; and as it affects the interests of the State or Wisconsin alone, and of no other State, I hope it will be passed. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. WHITALL.

Mr. HALE, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, an act (H. R. No. 111) for the relief of John A. Whitall, paymaster in the United States Army, on account of stolen vouchers.

The bill authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury, in settling the accounts of Major John A. Whitall, to pass to his credit whatever amount may be shown to have been paid by him, the vouchers for which payments have been stolen from him, provided the said amount does not exceed the sum of $1,034 50.

Mr. HALE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Jethro Bonney $400 in full for damages sustained by him by reason of the destruction of his store by the Army of the United States at the invasion of Plattsburg during the war of 1812.

Mr. WILSON. I raise the point of order that this bill make an appropriation, and must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House of the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM R. PALMER.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of William R. Palmer; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution directs the Quartermaster General to investigate the claim of William R. Palmer, of Tucker county, West Virginia, for twenty head of fat cattle, two horses, and two mules, alleged to have been taken by United States soldiers in General Milroy's department, in November, 1862, and if the same were taken for the use of the United States to pay the value thereof to the said William R. Palmer.

Mr. WILSON. I raise the same question of order, that the joint resolution makes an appropriation and must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON. Does it not direct the payment of money?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but not out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated.

The bill was engrossed and read the third time.

The question being on its passage,

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. WINDOM and SWEAT.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 64.

So the joint resolution was rejected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was rejected; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COSTS IN PRIZE CASES.

Mr. GANSON, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to, reciting that the costs of proceedings in the case of the prize steamer William Bagley, condemned at New Orleans, as charged by the district attorney, marshal, register, prize commissioner, and attorneys for captors were exorbitant, and directing the Attorney General of the United States to investigate the proceedings and examine into the accounts and fees charged therein, and to report to the House the items of the various bills, whether, in his opinion, they are legal, and if not, wherein they are illegal, and whether any further legislation is requisite to guard against exorbitant charges in prize suits.

MEMBERS DRAWING PAY ILLEGALLY.

Mr. GANSON, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution reciting that Benjamin F. Loan, a member of this House, was in the military service of the United States as brigadier general until the 8th of June, 1863, had drawn regular pay as such officer from the Paymaster General of the United States to the 8th of June, 1863, and had also drawn pay as a member of this House from the 4th of March, 1863; also reciting that Green Clay Smith, a member of this House, was in the military service of the United States as brigadier general until the 1st of December, 1863, had received his regular pay from the United States as such officer up to and including the 30th of November, 1863, and had also drawn and received pay as a member of this House from the 4th of March, 1863, contrary to the laws of the United States; and directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to require said Loan and Smith respectively to refund the amount paid to each of them as members of this House for the time that they respectively received pay from the United States for their services as such military officers, and to report to the House without delay.

Mr. LOAN. I concur with the propriety of the suggestion, and have made arrangements with the Sergeant-at-Arms to have that money repaid. I have no objection to the resolution being adopted. I took my pay when I first came here without paying any attention to the matter. When my attention was called to it I left the money there to be refunded.

Mr. SMITH. I agree readily with the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri. When I came to Washington I went with my colleagues, called for my pay, and drew the amount due me up to that time without reflection for a moment. Some two months ago my attention was called to it and I stated that I would make an arrangement by which the money would be refunded. I felt myself under obligation to refund it, and so said more than two months ago.

Mr. GANSON. I have felt bound to introduce this resolution as a matter of duty. I was told yesterday that the money had not been refunded by either gentleman. I have discharged my duty, and I move that the resolution be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

INDIANA AND OHIO CLAIMS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee of Claims, reported back House bill No. 295, for the relief of citizens of Indiana and Ohio, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in favor of this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is too narrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware that the first objection will be that it is partial and will only apply to one class of cases where losses have been sustained. Gentlemen will remember, however, that the general bill for the payment of these claims has failed in the Senate, and there is no other alternative left us but to bring in this special bill and if possible obtain partial relief.

The cases covered by this bill are of a peculiar character. General Hobson, while pursuing Morgan's forces through the States of Indiana and Ohio in July, 1863, in order to make his pursuit effective was compelled to press into service every horse on either side of the road as far as his scouts could reach. They were taken without a moment's notice, and there was generally no time to prepare vouchers, and in the main none were prepared or given. The loss fell almost exclusively upon the farming interest, and was peculiarly unfortunate on account of the season of the year, in the very midst of harvesting, depriving many farmers of an opportunity to cultivate their fields and save their crops.

It will be seen that the bill appropriates no money. It proposes that testimony shall be taken

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 215.

touching the property taken and be reported at the next session of Congress, and then we may dispose of these claims as the circumstances may require and as the evidence may warrant. The bill it is true is partial; but it will facilitate the adjustment of other claims, at least, by the precedent it will establish. It is the horses taken and appropriated by General Hobson we propose shall be paid for.

Mr. WADSWORTH. General Hobson, with his forces in pursuit of Morgan, passed through Kentucky on the same occasion and helped himself to horses, &c., there. I want to know why the gentleman fails to include the citizens of the State of Kentucky in his bill. Why is there no provision to apply to Kentucky, which for the last three years has had all manner of losses inflicted upon her citizens by the Federal officers and forces? Both armies have not only taken our horses, but have subsisted upon our people. The Federal Army has taken horses, subsistence, and transportation, &c., and has not paid for them. I therefore do not see why Kentucky should not be included in this bill.

The only objection I can raise to the bill is that it is too narrow. It ought to contain provision for Kentucky as well as for Indiana and Ohio.

There is another thing. We have passed a general law on the subject which would embrace Indiana and Ohio and which has failed in the Senate, and if we pass this special bill for Indiana and Ohio we may lose the support of the members from those great States for the general measure. And I trust that the House will never pass a bill for one or two States and leave out the States who have suffered many times as much from the same cause. I am glad, not that the people of Indiana and Ohio have suffered from rebel raids, but that since they have suffered we will have their support for a general measure of relief including all the States which have suffered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggested at the outset that the argument made by the gentleman from Kentucky would be made against the passage of this bill. I say there is a difference between the claim as asserted by Ohio and Indiana, and Kentucky. I would not indulge in invidious discriminations between those States, although the gentleman charges that the act is one of partial justice. The Representatives from Indiana and Ohio have supported cordially, uninterruptedly, and pertinaciously every measure affecting the rights of Kentucky and demanded by her Representatives, and especially the general bill which passed the House for the adjustment of all claims growing out of the destruction or seizure of property by our military forces. Those States now come forward with this bill for their relief, and we are told that Kentucky stands upon the same ground; that if we pass this Kentucky will lose our support for the general law. Will the past course of those States justify this argument?

Confining our view exclusively to the rebel raid of John Morgan in July, 1863, I must insist that the States of Indiana and Kentucky do not stand upon exactly the same footing. From the moment Morgan crossed the Ohio river he found not only an army behind him, the same which had pursued him through Kentucky, but he found the citizens of that State assailing him on every side, and from every bush and every tree pouring the leaden hail upon the invaders. I am not informed that in passing through western Kentucky Morgan's army met with resistance except from the organized military force; that force, it was true, was composed largely of gallant and loyal Kentuckians. I only refer to the resistance to the invasion by the people of the country through which he passed. It is well known that in the western part of Kentucky there is a strong disloyal sentiment. I say this in no spirit of sectionalism or of State jealousy at all. I know there is not a more loyal people in this nation than the loyal men of Kentucky. The loyalty of her true men is entitled to all praise; they have suffered fearfully by their devotion to the Union; but so far as the section of country is concerned through which this raid passed I do not think in fairness that the two sections of the country stand on the same footing. And I say this without impugning in the least the loyalty of the loyal men and the loyal portions of Kentucky.

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not cut me off from a reply to this personal attack.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was going on to say that in respect at least to the resistance furnished to this raid from the beginning, those two States, Kentucky and Indiana, do not occupy exactly the same ground. Here was an invasion of Indiana which was met at the outset with resistance, while the forces passed through the State of Kentucky without opposition except by the organized force, so far as I am informed.

I say again these remarks are not made in any spirit of depreciation, so far as the loyal men of Kentucky are concerned. They have done and suffered more than men generally have done to maintain their State in its proper relations to the Federal Government. They have resisted the invasion of that State by rebel forces, and have suffered and endured far beyond what mortals are ordinarily called upon to endure in the ravages of war. But I do not desire to have it understood, desirous as I am to bear testimony to the gallantry of the loyal men of Kentucky, that I consider that Kentucky can justly complain of Indiana and Ohio in pressing this measure, even if it does not do ample justice to all parties affected. I have referred to the relation of the several States to this raid only for the purpose of repelling the idea that because this is a measure which applies to Ohio and Indiana alone, and does not embrace the State of Kentucky, therefore it should not receive the favorable consideration of the House.

This bill was introduced by my colleague, [Mr. CRAVENS,] and is reported back without amendment. I trust it will be permitted to stand upon its own merits, and not defeated because, as a result of necessity, it is not as broad and comprehensive as many of us would desire.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The ground upon which the gentleman from Indiana puts his effort to distinguish between citizens of neighboring States, so far as compensation for injuries inflicted by Federal officers in pursuit of John Morgan is concerned, is not satisfactory to me. It is this: the people of Ohio and Indiana resisted while the inhabitants of Kentucky culpably connived at John Morgan's raid, or, at all events, failed to make any resistance. If that were true in all its length and breadth it would form no ground for partial legislation or of making any discrimination between loyal citizens touching losses incurred at the hands of Federal officers while pursuing the same public enemy. But it is not true; it is a misapprehension entirely of the history of that affair, and does injustice to the neighbors and unchangeable friends of Indiana. I know something about that raid. I had the pleasure during that raid of meeting a distinguished soldier of Indiana at the head of some of the troops of the country engaged in pursuing John Morgan while he was in the State of Ohio. And I heard that gentleman say that the zeal displayed by the citizens of Kentucky in the pursuit of John Morgan would compare favorably with the conduct of citizens on the north side of the river. Yes, sir, they turned out in mass in my neighborhood of all ages to resist and pursue Morgan; and they endeavored to make that pursuit effectual as far as possible, by their means and opportunity considered. He was pursued through the State of Indiana, not only by citizens of Kentucky in the Army of the United States, but by citizens of Kentucky who were not in the Army. When you come to look at the character of the troops that pursued him you find the State of Kentucky well represented, not only in officers, but in the rank and file. General Hobson was a Kentuckian; General Shackelford was a Kentuckian; Colonel Jacobs was a Kentuckian; Colonel Wolford, patriot and soldier as he is, was a Kentuckian. They had Kentucky troops pressing Morgan; and they all performed their duty. I am here to deny that the loyal men of Kentucky ever failed to discharge their duty when the public enemy was on their soil or on the soil of a neighboring State.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say in the portions of Kentucky through which Morgan passed there was any general uprising of the people? I admit that so far as the Kentucky troops were concerned they did their duty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never known a time when the masses of the people of Kentucky within my observation failed to do all fairly in their power to hinder, defeat, and overcome the public enemy. Morgan penetrated the State of Kentucky with a large force. He came like a thief in the night, unexpectedly, among an unarmed population of farmers and workmen who were scattered over the country in their peaceful pursuits. Before they were well aware of his presence he had penetrated to the sister State of Indiana. The people of that State had more notice than we had. But what a shame it is for any man to shut his eyes to the different situations of the two States. Kentucky has been from the start paralyzed by contending armies and distracted by the faults and crimes of a portion of her own citizens. By their secession from the Commonwealth they left her weakened and divided, a prey to every enemy, Federal and Confederate. Perhaps one third of her citizens had identified themselves with the South in feeling, in sympathy. A considerable number of her young men seceded from the State, as the workmen of Rome seceded in olden time to Mount Aventine, paralyzing to that extent the Commonwealth. And out of what remained Kentucky has furnished to the Federal Army not far from sixty thousand men. The efforts and sufferings for the common cause made and endured by her patriotic citizens put to shame the efforts of the citizens of other States. For nearly four years a large part of the inhabitants of Kentucky not in the Army have borne arms for their own defense and the defense of the flag, and at their own expense. They have borne arms for weeks and months at a time. These services and sacrifices have inured to the benefit of our sister States. If the enemy triumphs over the State of Kentucky he will also invade the States of Indiana and Ohio. The citizens of Kentucky claim no peculiar credit for their action; but they ask any Legislature that proposes to pay for acts done by the Federal Government itself in the pursuit of the common enemy not to forget these facts. They protest against that narrow sectionalism out of place in the speech and the record of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] when he taunts them with permitting the public enemy to pass unobstructed through their State, and gives this as a reason why a distinction should be made between the people of adjoining States. Morgan traversed the State of Indiana, containing a million and a half of white people all united, invaded for the first time, with no cause of discord among them; and they permitted him to pass through the entire State. Why? Because the notice received was too brief to enable them to make any effectual, concentrated resistance, and not from want of zeal for the Union. The farmers and workmen of Indiana, as well as those of Kentucky, were unarmed and scattered. The enemy was on their soil almost before they knew it, and he passed through the State before they could make a concentrated and effectual effort to resist him.

Mr. HOLMAN. The taunt which the gentleman from Kentucky thinks I uttered was more than justified by the still more illiberal assault of a sectional character made by him on this bill, he opposing it simply from the fact that it did not embrace the State of Kentucky. He simply judges of the remarks that I made by the spirit which animated his own.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is as fiery as our friends in the South who seceded. If he understood the remarks that I made he would find no apology for that unnecessary attack of his on the character of the people of the State of which I have the honor to be a native citizen.

I said, sir, that I wanted the assistance of Indiana and Ohio to procure a measure of general justice to the people of all the States injured by our Government. I said that there could be no good reason why in the same raid horses taken by General Hobson in Indiana and Ohio should be paid for and horses taken by the same officer in Kentucky should not be paid for. The answer of the gentleman is, that although the general bill has failed, still if Congress will not do justice to the people of the border south of the Ohio river he hopes they will pass this bill, partial in character, for the people of Ohio and Indiana. Sir, I have learned from no man upon this floor more than from that distinguished gentleman, that we ought to set our face against all partial legislation. He has spoken a book about partial legislation.

Now, is it fair and just after Congress has refused to pass a bill to do general justice, including every loyal man for these injuries which have been inflicted upon him, that we should pass a bill sectional in its character for Ohio and Indiana? If brought to a direct vote on this bill, I for one do not say that I will refuse to do justice to Ohio and Indiana because Congress will not do justice to Kentucky, nor have my votes ever indicated that I would do so. I have been disposed to support measures of relief for citizens from all sections who have suffered during this warlike losses at the hands of the Government. I voted to pay Mr. Armes for the destruction of his property in Virginia—a New England man, I believe, who went there and established an academy—and that too at a time when the whole of my district had been desolated under the same circumstances and relief persistently denied by this House. Its court-houses and every other description of houses have been occupied by Federal forces, made forts and barracks of, and destroyed by the public enemy for that reason. They remain unpaid for and are likely to remain unpaid for while this Congress retains its hold on power. I have voted to do justice to all claimants. I voted to pay the man whose boat and hay was destroyed. I voted to indemnify Ericsson against losses inflicted by the Government. I want to know, then, what part of my course warrants the gentleman in saying that I would upon sectional grounds oppose doing justice to Indiana and Ohio. He has no good warrant for any such declaration, and I trust he will recognize in me a fast friend of his people.

What I claim is this, that to pay for horses taken by General Hobson in Indiana and Ohio and not to include pay for the horses taken in the same raid by General Hobson in Kentucky would be an invidious and unjust discrimination. Upon what ground could it be put except that Kentucky does not do her duty and should not be paid, as the gentleman has alleged?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not believe that her loyal people have not done their duty. I referred to the part of Kentucky through which this raid was made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is unfair to the loyal people of that patriotic State, who under the most adverse circumstances have done their whole duty. Kentucky has been the victim alike of the rebel power and the Federal Government. Both plunder and insult her. Her soil has been given up as a great battle-field, and we have sent our young men into the Army of the United States in numbers beyond any just demand upon us. We have seen both armies in our midst consuming and trampling out our wealth. And although gentlemen on the other side by legislation and violence are interfering with the local affairs and the peace of that State and the rights and safety of her people, yet we have remained true to the flag. We intend to remain true to it and to die true to it, but have never basely purposed to submit to these wrongs.

When we have shown this alacrity for the public service and for the defense of the country, we are surely entitled to the consideration of the House when we present our just demands. Every generous man will recognize the difficulties which have environed Kentucky, and not withhold his admiration for the courage and patriotism with which her Union Democracy have met them; and, sir, if this Congress, instead of repairing the injuries which the Government has inflicted upon us, will busy itself only with repetitions of worn-out calumnies against the people of Kentucky, the time and Congress will come when our wrongs will be redressed and our motives and conduct appreciated. We will wait. In the mean time I recognize in the gentleman from Indiana a friend to our people in his whole course upon this floor, and regret that any misapprehension of the spirit that animates me toward the patriot people of Indiana should have betrayed him into the assumption of a role that should be left exclusively to the extreme right.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, this is a question in which the people of Indiana, and especially the people of southern Indiana, whom I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor, feel a deep interest. They have suffered severely and deserve the consideration of Congress.

I think that injustice has been done to my colleague. He has not cast any reflection upon the people of Kentucky. As I understood him it was this: that when John Morgan passed through that section of country the people did not rise to arrest his progress as they did in Indiana. Of course he made every allowance for the circumstances which surrounded the people of Kentucky. He recognized the value and gallantry of the services of Generals Hobson and Shackelford, Colonel Jacobs, Colonel Wolford, and other gallant officers and soldiers of Kentucky who were in pursuit of John Morgan through our State. Their services are recognized by every Indianian, and they gave relief from that marauder by coming at the opportune time they did.

But I am not aware that the people of Kentucky, at the time Morgan passed through there, were in a condition to rise up as they did in Indiana. Morgan passed over the Ohio at Brandenburg, in my district, and no sooner had he entered the State than he met with resistance at the very threshold and from every quarter. He was fired upon in crossing the river, and he met with resistance during his entire passage through the State. The gentleman says our people were not prepared to meet and resist him. They did resist him. They met him at the landing on the Indiana shore, and even before he did land, and a few brave and determined citizens held him in check for many hours between Corydon and the river, killing many of Morgan's men and losing some on our side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said there was no general, concentrated effort on the part of that million and a half of people.

Mr. CRAVENS. There was a general rising, and wherever he found a force organized to meet and resist him he turned away upon another route.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am aware that a large number of them rose up and opposed Morgan, but how many got together in a body?

Mr. CRAVENS. At least six or seven thousand of our citizens, and not less than sixty thousand of them were under arms in less than forty-eight hours. But the condition of the people of Indiana is somewhat different in respect to this matter from that of the people of Kentucky represented in part by my friend. I know how much the people of Kentucky have suffered and sacrificed, and I know how much they have suffered in consequence of a divided public sentiment. I presume that Morgan when he came to Indiana expected to meet a divided people there. Indeed his men said they were assured before they came there they would meet a divided public sentiment and derive support from it. But instead of that these very men who they expected would assist were the first men to shoulder their guns to meet and resist him. The parties he expected would assist him were the leaders of the organization which sprang up almost in an instant to repel him.

But the point to which I wished more particularly to call the attention of the gentleman is this: that when Morgan came through Indiana, meeting with the martial legions there, he found it difficult to pass through the country. He had to throw out his skirmishers for a distance of five miles on either side of his route and to that extent he gathered up all the valuable horses, almost ruining many of our poor people who depended on their horses for maturing their crops. Wherever he took horses he left broken-down horses in their places. His entire command was mounted upon ill-conditioned, inferior, and worn-out horses, which had been long in service. He came with no fresh horses. If he had come with fresh horses the presumption would have been that he had gathered them up in Tennessee and Kentucky. But he came with an exhausted cavalry force, so far as his horses were concerned. He took what he could gather up, and Hobson, in his pursuit, was compelled to take a wider range to supply his command with fresh horses: between the rebel and the Union forces our people were stripped of all their horses.

Morgan was not captured in the State of Indiana, but passed through the State, leaving as he passed a large number of miserably used-up and broken-down horses, which the farmers took care of and recruited, expecting to keep them in the place of the good ones taken from them by Morgan. But the Government, through its agents, demanded these horses from the people, and they were given up after much care and expense was bestowed upon them, and they were sold by the Government for a sum of money in my district alone amounting to about $60,000. The horses taken from the people by Morgan where he was finally captured in Ohio were also in many cases taken and kept by the Government without remuneration to the citizens. Now I submit to this House whether or not we can in justice do less than is proposed by this bill, the Government having received the benefit of the horses taken by Hobson and Morgan both.

Mr. HARDING. I regret very much to see any warmth of feeling springing up between the Representatives of these two States. There is no necessity for it. The good citizens of Indiana and Kentucky know each other well, and respect each other. They are on terms of friendship and always have been. They are not even divided on that troublesome question which divides States far remote from each other. We all know what Indiana has done. She has acted nobly, bravely, and grandly. She has poured her troops across the Ohio river whenever they were needed. But Indiana has not been subjected to the fiery trials through which Kentucky has passed.

Mr. CRAVENS. That we are aware of. Mr. HARDING. Far from it, sir. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] seemed to think that Kentucky has proved herself less loyal than Indiana. But their relative circumstances are very different; and in that view justice has never yet been done to Kentucky. I deny that the people of Indiana, as a whole, are any more loyal than the people of Kentucky. I deny that under such a fiery ordeal any State in the Union would have turned out any stronger force for the Union than the State of Kentucky has done. It is an easy thing in Massachusetts or in other States far from the scene of conflict for men to be loyal. It is a man's interest to be loyal in those States. But not so in Kentucky. There it costs a man something to be loyal; often he has to pay very dearly for his loyalty. He has often to take shelter in the forest and seek safety there. Let Indiana or any other State be subject to the same fiery trial, let the storms of war that have beaten upon Kentucky beat over them, and then we would see whether their people are any more loyal than the people of Kentucky.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. Indiana and Ohio, all the States bordering on Kentucky are deeply interested in all that she has done. Kentucky has stood like a wall of fire between them and danger, and she is not to be taunted with want of loyalty. Some of her recreant sons have gone; but a host of her citizens have stood in the breach between those other States and danger. Had she yielded and been swept away in this southern revolution, where would Indiana and Ohio be to-day? The storms of fiery and bloody war that have fallen upon Kentucky would have desolated their soil. But Kentucky bared her bosom and confronted the storm.

In addition to all this, Mr. Speaker, I will say that for every dollar lost by Indiana through the act of Federal officers and soldiers Kentucky has lost a thousand. The horses, provisions, and grain of her citizens have been taken. In some portions of my former district the land has been made desolate. In portions of that district the rebels had entire possession and control for weeks and months. The people had everything swept away from them, and their families were reduced to beggary and want. And this sometimes by our own troops, because, in the progress of events there, our own army, rapidly pursuing or retreating, had no time to give vouchers while they quartered on the country. And now, after Kentucky suffering a thousand-fold more than Indiana, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] attempts to draw invidious distinctions.

Mr. WILSON. I must resume the floor.

Mr. HARDING. I want the gentleman to understand that I throw no aspersion upon the State of Indiana.

Mr. WILSON. This subject will come up again in the morning hour as unfinished business. I have yielded as long as I can.

Mr. CRAVENS. Just give me three minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I cannot resist that.

Mr. CRAVENS. I am sorry to see my friend from Kentucky manifest so much feeling. Indiana has recognized the loyalty of Kentucky. We have never failed to sympathize with the loyal people of Kentucky, and we have never failed to come to the relief of Kentucky when the opportunity has been afforded to us. I have voted for the relief of her citizens whenever I could. I know they are a brave and gallant people. But kindness and sympathy should be reciprocal. We have always aided and assisted them, and now let them support the just claims of Indiana. I think the bill now under consideration should be passed without further delay, and I feel that its justness should commend it to the support of the honorable members from Kentucky and the House generally. Indiana will not be found wanting when Kentucky or any other State may ask for the passage of a measure so eminently just and proper as this bill proposes.

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WILSON. I move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following business on the Speaker's table; which was disposed of as indicated below:

The amendment was concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLMENT BILL.

An act (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the amendment of the Senate, section No. 12, added by the Senate to House bill No. 549, in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement on the privileges of the House, and that the bill with the amendments be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask that the clause in the bill referred to be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

That for the purpose of paying the bounties and enforcing the draft provided for in this act, there be levied and collected, in addition to the duties imposed by law, a special duty of five per cent. on all incomes exceeding $800, which duty shall be assessed and collected in the mode provided in the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes." And this duty shall be payable on the 1st day of October next, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as to the time and mode of assessment as will secure the collection of this special tax.

Mr. STEVENS. There was nothing in that bill relating to revenue as it left the House. The Constitution provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. It is so clearly a violation of the privileges of the House that I think it ought not for a moment to be acquiesced in.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I move to amend by adding the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the rooms and halls of the first and second floors of the west wing of the Department of the Interior building shall be exclusively appropriated to the records, files, and official services of the General Land Office, with these additional, and now in the occupancy of that office.

wreck, destruction, or loss shall be deemed and taken to have occurred, and to adjust and settle accounts on principles of equity and justice. It also provides that whenever the officers, seamen, or others, borne on the books of a vessel of the Navy, shall have lost their clothing or other personal effects by the wreck, destruction, or loss of such vessel, the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized to appoint a board of three officers of the Navy, including a paymaster, to make a careful examination and scrutiny of claims for losses so incurred, and grants power, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to award to the seaman, or other person, not an officer, who may have incurred such loss, without neglect or fault on his part, the value of the property lost to an amount not exceeding two months' pay, in the case of an enlisted man, nor one month's sea pay in any other case. It also provides that the benefit of the act shall be extended to the seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of any vessel of the Navy wrecked, destroyed, or lost during the present war, whose accounts shall not have been settled, or who have not heretofore been compensated for clothing or other property lost by the wreck, destruction, or loss of such vessel.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to amend by striking from the first section, at the end of it, the words "and to adjust and settle accounts on principles of equity and justice," also providing a substitute for the second and third section.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

An act (S. No. 292) to provide for the efficiency of the Navy was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill provides for transfers from the Navy to the marine corps; for the transfer of seamen drafted into the military service to the naval service; for the crediting of enlistments for the Navy in the same manner as enlistments for the Army, and for the payment of bounty to persons so enlisting.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.

An act (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. COLE moved to refer the bill to the select committee on the Pacific railroad.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

An act (S. No. 310) for the promotion of commerce and the improvement of navigation was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HENRY W. DIMAN.

Joint resolution (S. No. 66) providing for adjustment of the accounts of Henry W. Diman was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL LAWS.

An act (S. No. 332) to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLEY. This bill has been fully considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House, and unanimously agreed to. It is a bill which should be passed; and I therefore move to put the bill on its passage, and call the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the first section.

Mr. ALLEY. This bill has been very fully and thoroughly considered and perfected in committee. I think it is right as it is, and I must insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will at least allow me to offer an amendment in the fifth line of the first section by inserting after "New York" the words "and Philadelphia;" so as to make the clause read:

That the annual compensation of postmasters shall be at a fixed salary, in lieu of commissions, to be divided into five classes, exclusive of the postmasters of the cities of New York and Philadelphia. Postmasters of the first class shall receive not more than $4,000 nor less than $3,000.

Mr. ASHLEY. I desire also to amend the amendment by adding after "Philadelphia," "Boston, Baltimore, Albany, Buffalo, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, and St. Louis." [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Very well; let that go as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw the demand for the previous question for the purpose of saying a few words in reference to the bill.

The salary of the postmaster at New York is fixed at $6,000. This is made an exception and the only exception to the classification of postmasters. Everybody knows that the post office at New York is very much larger than that of any other city, and with that exception the salary of $4,000 is all that the bill allows to the postmasters of any of the other cities. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have fully examined the subject, and they are clearly of the opinion that the bill ought to remain as it is. I will now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to hear what he has to offer.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am obliged to the gentleman for yielding to me. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think a very few words will satisfy this House that the compensation of the postmaster of Philadelphia should be at least as large as that of the postmaster at New York. There is no difference in the amount of business transacted; there is no difference in the amount of responsibility assumed. The postmaster at Philadelphia and the clerical force employed by him are occupied every moment of their time in that post office, and I do not suppose the postmaster at New York and his clerical force are occupied any more time. I see, therefore, no reason why any such distinction should be made. I desire to know if any man can tell me why the postmaster at the city of New York should receive $6,000 per annum and the postmaster at Philadelphia receive only $4,000 per annum? Why, sir, the post office at Philadelphia is almost as large as the post office in New York. I do not recognize for one moment the position that Philadelphia is a mere village or suburb. [Laughter.] And I see no reason why the postmasters at Boston and Baltimore and the other large cities should not receive an equal compensation.

Mr. WEBSTER. I ask the gentleman then to put Baltimore and the other large cities into his amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. They have already been embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] to my amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. Did the Chair understand me as giving way for the purpose of allowing amendments to be offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did.

Mr. ALLEY. I did not intend to give way for that purpose. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to desire the floor to make a few remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania expressly requested the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment, and the gentleman from Massachusetts yielded to him and resumed his seat.

Mr. ALLEY. I desire to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk again read his amendment!

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I insist upon Sioux City being included in that amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. So do I upon Winona.

Mr. BROOKS. I should like to move an additional city also. I wish to move to add the city of Buncombe. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. L. MYERS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield for a moment.

Mr. ALLEY. I do not think the House ought to spend any more time over this matter; however, I do not see how I can very well deny the opportunity to my friend from Philadelphia to make a little buncombe, and I will therefore yield to him for a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I object decidedly to the gentleman charging us with acting for buncombe.

Mr. L. MYERS. I care nothing about any imputation of my conduct upon this floor being for buncombe; my voice is seldom heard in this Hall. What I rose for was to move an amendment, to come in at the end of the sixth section of the bill. The sixth section provides—

That the Postmaster General may designate certain convenient offices, at the intersection of mail routes, as distributing offices, and certain others as separating offices; and where any such office is of the third, fourth, or fifth class of post offices, he may make a reasonable allowance to such postmaster for the necessary cost, in whole or in part, of clerical services arising from such duties.

I desire to move to add at the end of that section as follows:

That the compensation of clerks, mail-carriers, and other employees of the post offices heretofore designated by, and the same is hereby, increased twenty-five per cent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss the propriety of this amendment; that will be seen by every member of the House. I need not state that at this time the necessities of life have risen more than twenty-five per cent. in cost. I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts that this amendment has not been introduced to apply to the employees of the Philadelphia post office alone. It applies to the post offices throughout the country. My friend over the way says they will vote in my amendment. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I know that in the Philadelphia post office many of the best clerks employed receive a salary of but $800, and most of them receive a salary of but five or six hundred dollars.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not suppose that anybody would propose to raise salaries in these times when gold has gone up out of sight.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

On Mr. SPALDING's motion 58 voted in the affirmative and 41 in the negative.

Mr. ALLEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 69, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Bliss, James S. Brown, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Holman, John H. Hubbard, Hubard, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Loan, Long, Marcy, McClurg, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Robinson, Seefeld, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stiles, Strouse, Van Valkenburgh, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—52.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Boyl, Brooks, Broomall, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Digges, Eliot, Fenton, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Hale, Harding, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, McAllister, McBride, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Noble, Norton, Perham, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Smith, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upton, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, and Woodbridge—69.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Chauncy, Ambrose W. Clark, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Davies, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, Hooper, Hutchins, Kussow, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Law, Longyear, Maltby, Marvin, McDowell, Melndoe, McKimney, Samuel F. Miller, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Pommeroy, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, Stevens, Sweat, Voorhees, Elihu B. Washburne, Chilton A. White, Wilder, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yennan—61.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. CRAVENS stated that he had paired with Mr. PIKE on all political questions, and not knowing how Mr. PIKE would vote on this question, he declined to vote.

Mr. MCINDOE stated that he had paired with Mr. McDOWELL.

Mr. ALLEY. I will yield the floor still further if gentlemen desire to discuss or amend this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will now withdraw my amendment and simply move to strike out the words "exclusive of the postmaster of the city of New York" wherever it occurs. That will equalize the compensation of the postmasters of all these large cities, fixing it at $4,000.

Mr. WILSON. Unless we can have an opportunity to amend this bill generally, I object to any amendment being offered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have offered this amendment in order, I believe, and certainly in good faith, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to hear some explanation of the effect of the resolution which the gentleman has offered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is very easily explained. In the first place I offered an amendment including Philadelphia with New York at a compensation of $6,000, believing that there should be no difference in the compensation of these two offices; but I have now modified my amendment so as to strike out the words I have mentioned, and leave New York to be included with the other cities in the first class of post offices.

Mr. THAYER. What cities are embraced in this first class with New York?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, Boston, and other large cities as provided for in the bill.

Mr. THAYER. Is it proposed to give the postmasters of all these cities the same salaries as the postmaster of New York receives?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The proposition is to place the postmaster at New York upon the same footing with the postmasters of Philadelphia and these other cities in the first class.

Mr. THAYER. I thought my colleague had accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ASHLEY.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Not at all. The gentleman from Ohio offered his amendment on his own responsibility to my amendment as originally offered. I have now modified my amendment so as to strike out "New York" wherever it occurs, and give the postmaster at that city no greater amount of compensation than is to be received by the postmaster at Philadelphia or any other of the first class of postmasters.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to put a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I want to know whether the compensation of these postmasters does not depend on the amount of business done at their respective offices?

Mr. ALLEY. That is the case, with the provision that in no case shall it exceed $4,000, except for the postmaster of New York, whose salary the bill fixes at $6,000.

Mr. MORRILL. If I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he proposes to raise the postmasters in all of these States up to the rank of the postmaster of New York.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not understand my proposition. It is to give the postmasters of the first class the same compensation.

Mr. ALLEY. It seems to me that the position is exactly this; the members from Philadelphia see no good reason why Philadelphia should not be put upon the same footing as New York in reference to the salary of the postmaster. They propose that the salary of the postmaster at Philadelphia shall be $6,000, which is that of the postmaster of New York. Gentlemen representing other cities say that if Philadelphia is included then their cities ought to be included, as Philadelphia gives no more revenue to the Post Office Department than many other cities; while in New York the receipts are several times as much as those of Philadelphia.

Mr. BROOKS. I feel it to be my duty to say in reference to the Republican postmaster of New York city that $4,000 is not sufficient salary for the responsibility which is imposed upon him. He has charge of all the mails to and from Europe. A sufficiently responsible and able postmaster cannot be secured for that city at a less compensation than $6,000.

Mr. ALLEY. I think that there is a great misapprehension in regard to this bill. I know there is, and I am at a loss what course to pursue. A great many members advise me to call for the previous question, and not to debate it; while other gentlemen say that I had better explain it. I know that the House is uneasy and want to get away, but I will try in a few words to explain the effect of these several provisions.

This bill is not to render the post office business less secure, but to make it more secure and to save money to the Treasury. There are a great many clerks all over the country who are employed to perform labor that might just as well be dispensed with. That will be saved under this bill.

So far as postmasters are concerned their salaries are not increased, but on the contrary they are slightly decreased. The estimate is based upon the last two years, which I suppose will not amount to quite as much as the present year. Every year since this war commenced the post office receipts have increased very materially. There is no post office the receipts of which have not been increased by the war.

As to the objection which has been made that a vast amount of additional power is placed in the hands of the Postmaster General, I will say that that is not so. While the Postmaster General has little or no additional power placed in his hands under the bill, it saves money to the Treasury. It has been considered thoroughly by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I think that everybody ought to be in favor of it. I did not expect the least difficulty in getting it through the House. It was passed unanimously, I believe, through the Senate, and unless further explanation is desired I will demand the previous question.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Does this raise the salary of the postmaster at New York?

Mr. ALLEY. It does. It raises it $2,000.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not germane to that of his colleague, and therefore not in order.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to know whether this is not the same bill that was defeated at the last session of Congress almost unanimously?

Mr. ALLEY. This in its main features is the same bill that was passed once before, and was defeated in the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. This is the same bill out of which twelve sections were stricken on my motion at the last session of Congress.

Mr. L. MYERS. The point of order I make is this: the amendment I offered is to the sixth section, while the amendment of my colleague is to the first section.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. L. MYERS. I ask the House at this time if unanimous consent cannot be given for my amendment, and that of my colleague also, to be offered.

The SPEAKER. That is objected to. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. L. MYERS. I do.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I offer my amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the evening session be dispensed with.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not.

Mr. FENTON. I hope it will be.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask consent to make a statement.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask for an explanation of the Chair. I will not press my amendment if it cuts out the amendment of my colleague.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated three or four times that it did, and the gentleman's colleague thereupon withdrew his amendment and allowed the gentleman to offer his.

Mr. L. MYERS. I withdrew mine trusting to the House to allow me to offer it again.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Cannot my colleague have his amendment voted on if I withdraw mine?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent, as the main question has been ordered to be put.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. L. MYERS. I now ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment I withdrew.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object. The thing is entirely absurd. The gentleman has jumped over Brooklyn, the third city in the Union. [Laughter.]

Mr. L. MYERS. Will it be in order to have the amendment read for information?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. L. MYERS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 39, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baxter, Beaman, Boutwell, Brooks, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Cofroth, Creswell, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Edgerton, Eliot, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Goehs, Griswold, Herrier, Higby, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, Korman, Knapp, Lazar, Littlejohn, McAllister, McBride, Samuel P. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Andrus, Nelson, Noble, Norton, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Smith, Spathers, John B. Steele, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whalley, Wheeler, and Wilder—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Bliss, Broomall, Cobb, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Eden, Eldridge, English, Holman, Samuel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Philip Johnson, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Marcy, McClurg, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James A. Morris, Leonard Myers, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Seefeldt, Shannon, Sloan, Spaulding, Strouse, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—39.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, James S. Brown, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Clay, Cole, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Finck, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchesin, William Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knox, Law, Longyear, Mallory, Marvin, McDowell, McIndoe, McKimney, Odell, John O'Neill, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Schenck, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Sweat, Tracy, Voorhees, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—78.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. KALBFLEISCH stated that his colleague, Mr. ODELL, was absent on account of the death of a relative.

Mr. ANCONA stated that his colleague, Mr. RANDALL, was paired for to-day with Mr. LONGYEAR.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, stated that his colleague, Mr. PIKE, had been called home by sickness in his family.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENTING SESSION.

The House resumed its session at half past seven o'clock p. m.

CONSCRIPTION BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Senate has sent back the bill in relation to enrollment, having receded from the revenue measure which it had attached to it.

The SPEAKER. The message has not yet reached the House.

H. K. DEAN.

Mr. COBB asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files the papers in the claim of H. K. Dean, and to have the same referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMUTATION CLAUSE.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a memorial of citizens of Hamilton county, Ohio, protesting against the repeal of the commutation clause, and asked that it be laid on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to have the memorial printed? [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir.

The memorial was laid on the table.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The House resumed the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

RESERVATIONS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 315) in relation to the sale of reservations of the public lands.

The bill received its several readings, and was passed.

ELIPHALET BROWN, JR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 334) for the relief of Eliphalet Brown, jr., artist in the Japan expedition.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eliphalet Brown, jr., compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum during the time he was actually in such service, provided the amount already paid him as master's mate be deducted therefrom.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The claim is a little old, and I move that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 171) to further amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that this bill be passed over informally for the present, until the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FENTON,] who desires to explain it, will be in his seat.

The bill was passed over informally.

PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 233) in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill substantially has been before the Committee of Ways and Means, but it has not undergone a full consideration on the part of all the members of the committee. My colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] is anxious to give it further consideration. I therefore move to refer the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, with permission to report back at any time.

Mr. KERNAN. I submit that such an important bill as this should not be put where it can be reported back at any time without notice and put on its passage.

Mr. FENTON. The bill has been printed and is now on file.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask in what condition the bill now is, whether it is before the House for its action?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PENDLETON. Then I trust my friend from New York [Mr. KERNAN] will withdraw his objection, otherwise the bill may be put on its passage now.

Mr. KERNAN. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means with authority to report at any time.

Mr. FENTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL BILL.

Mr. ALLEY. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the postal bill was passed this morning; and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIPHALET BROWN, JR.—AGAIN.

Mr. WARD. I desire to know what disposition was made of Senate bill 334, for the relief of Eliphalet Brown, jr., artist in the Japan expedition.

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WARD. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred. The chairman of the Naval Committee was out of the House at the time the bill came up or he would have made some explanation of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill is an appropriation bill and I suppose must go to the Committee of the Whole if it is brought back to the House.

Mr. WARD. If the House will hear me for a moment, I do not think there can be any objection to this bill. The chairman of the Naval Committee has some papers in connection with it coming from the Senate, and as I see he is now in the House, I hope he will present them. In the mean time, however, I will make a short statement of the bill. Mr. Brown was engaged as an artist in the Japan expedition, and during the time he was so employed he only received the pay of an acting master in the Navy, with the understanding upon the part of Commodore Perry that his services as a photographer of the expedition should be satisfactorily adjusted and he receive his pay as artist. There have been two cases of the same kind that have been passed by Congress granting extra compensation. This bill has passed the Senate without objection, and I think there should be no objection to it in this House. A bill was passed in 1857 paying James Morrow for his services as agriculturist of the expedition at the rate of $1,500 per annum. At a later period another act was passed paying for the services of Mr. Heine as artist. Commodore Perry certified to the services of this gentleman and to the value of his services as artist to the expedition. The amount of his compensation is so trifling that it seems to me the House will permit this bill to pass without reference to the Committee of Claims or any other committee. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will make a statement of what he knows about the case, and then I am sure there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate on this bill. I am not myself acquainted with the facts in the case further than they appear in that report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of E. Brown, jr., of the city of New York, praying additional compensation for services rendered as an artist in the naval expedition to Japan under Commodore Perry, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the memorialist was employed in the Japan expedition as an artist, in the quality of daguerrotypist, delineator of natural scenery, and draughtsman; that he was induced by Commodore Perry to render his services in that capacity to the expedition by an appointment as acting master's mate on board the flag-ship, with the rate of pay thereunto pertaining, and by the assurance that, if the expedition was successful, and its results should be satisfactory to the Government and country, he (Commodore Perry) had no doubt the Government would allow a compensation for the services required, additional to the pay of master's mate, so as to make it equal to that usually allowed to artists in the naval expeditions of the United States.

Commodore Perry certifies that Mr. Brown executed his work with talent and skill, and to his entire satisfaction.

It appears that Dr. Morrow, who acted as agriculturist of the expedition, and Mr. Heine, who was employed in the same capacity as the memorialist, have received extra compensation by special act of Congress.

The committee know no reason why the memorialist is not entitled to an equal reward for his services; and therefore report the accompanying bill.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

NEW YORK AND WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

Mr. WEBSTER. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill from the select committee on an air-line railroad from Washington to New York was re-committed to the special committee; and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PRUYN. What will be the effect of that upon the condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The effect would be to prevent the bill hereafter being brought back to the House on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. PRUYN. I am not sure then that the motion to reconsider had better be laid on the table.

On laying the motion to reconsider on the table, 30 voted in the affirmative and 41 in the negative; no quorum.

Mr. WEBSTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, rather than break up a quorum I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate, on reconsideration, have again passed the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, with all the amendments previously concurred in except the section objected to by the House, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

CONSCRIPTION BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent of the House to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the conscription bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. I object.

THOMAS J. GALBRAITH.

Joint resolution (S. No. 67) for the relief of Thomas J. Galbraith was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON. I move to refer that joint resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope it will not be referred. The gentleman knows very well that the committee will not have an opportunity to report again this session. There are no material changes in this resolution from the bill which passed the House. Major Galbraith was agent of the Sioux Indians, and at the time of the Indian hostilities he lost all his property and a great portion of his vouchers; so that it is absolutely impossible to settle his accounts unless his own testimony is allowed to be received.

Mr. WILSON. If the gentleman will amend the resolution so as to make it incumbent upon the Secretary of the Interior to take corroborative testimony, I will not object to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not think that is at all necessary, for the Secretary now has power to take such testimony if he shall consider it to be necessary.

Upon the motion to refer, 43 voted in the affirmative and 41 in the negative; no quorum.

Mr. WILSON. Rather than break up a quorum I withdraw the motion to refer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew the motion to refer and demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOLMAN and WINDOM were appointed.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 45.

The SPEAKER voted in the negative.

So the bill was not referred.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WINDOM demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 31.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLMENT BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the enrollment bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to know whether that bill comes properly before the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. It does. By the 54th rule it will be seen that when the House proceeds to the business upon the Speaker's table, the Speaker is ordered to dispose of that business as follows: 1. Messages and other executive communications; and, 2. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House. The question recurs on concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question. I hope the House will non-concur in the amendment of the Senate so that the whole matter may go to a committee of conference.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to throw any embarrassments in the way of the Government in the administration of this the most important branch of its duties at this time. If I know anything about my own feelings or determination at this time, I am ready to cooperate in any measure which I can satisfy my mind will reach the end and accomplish the purpose designed. If, sir, I am constrained at this moment to differ with those who press this measure, in the shape it comes from the other branch, upon the country, it is because the more I examine it and weigh its provisions in the light of their application to the present condition of the country and of the effect to be produced upon the people, the more I am convinced that I am serving the country in opposition rather than in support of the measure in its present shape. I do not desire to relieve any portion of the country from one iota of the burden of this war, come in what manner and what way it may, whether it be of blood or of any other sacrifice.

I hold, sir, that all we have belongs to the Government, and I am now for framing such a bill as will reach that end; that will strengthen most the arm of the Government and soonest reach the end of this great contest. And, sir, if I know anything of the Government, if I know anything of the principles upon which it is framed, and where its strength lies, I know that stringency and efficiency are not here convertible terms. I know that that is not the strongest, that that is not the best measure at this time and for this purpose necessarily which is the most stringent in its provisions.

Sir, this bill must be framed, if framed for any good, with a view to its application to those upon whom it is to bear and to the means at the command of the people. It is not to be framed in any idea that any one section of the country is less disposed than another to furnish its men and money for this war. I admit the principle, and am willing to recognize it in the bill, that all of us from every State, every individual who is a loyal man, does owe his personal service to his country and must yield that service; that the Government has a right to demand it and the citizen must obey.

Now, in differing from those who urge this measure upon the country I am not to be put in the category of those who are unwilling to do all that is in their power at this time. What, sir, do we propose? We propose to combine the volunteer system with the draft; we propose to hold out inducements to every State in this Union to furnish volunteers up to the measure of the call of the Government. We propose to say to them, "Get your volunteers in just such way and in just such manner as your exigencies and your necessities require of you, provided you do not interfere with any other State in procuring their portion of this quota." And, sir, we say further to the people through the bill which we propose here, the House bill, that if in the end—and that end is sixty days—with all the inducements we are able to hold out, all the new fields presented, they are not able to procure the men that they are called upon to furnish, then no man in the country who yields to the doctrine that the Government has the right to the service of all its citizens in time of war has any occasion to complain when the law requires of him to stand the lot, and go if required, or furnish his man.

What is the objection to this? I understand the great feature of the objection is simply that though there are States in this Union who find from the character of their population and pursuits great difficulty in furnishing from within their own limits these men, they shall not be permitted to go elsewhere for them. I do not understand that it is charged that such States are unwilling to furnish the men, but that they have not the men. There are States of the Union that have been subjected to a draft these fifteen or twenty years, and their army has gone West, and furnish at this moment the staple of supply in many western States. There are States of this Union whose young men of the military age, between eighteen and forty-five, have been constantly drafted from among them and gone off into other States where there are held out other and greater inducements to make their homes; and they leave behind them the less rugged of their own age, and the older ones to be by them supported in the homes they leave.

Sir, there is scarcely an Iowa, Illinois, or Wisconsin regiment that has made a gallant charge upon the enemy during the last three years whose losses have not only carried sorrow to their homes in the West but have carried also lamentation and woe into the homes of fathers and mothers and brothers in the East. We have furnished from the East men for the West to send to the war, and we are glad that the West has had such invigorating blood sent into that new field. I say, sir, that the new regiments that have gone out and done honor to the West, of which it has a right to boast, have had in their ranks those whose glories won bring joy among the hills and valleys of New England also; and the bullets by which they fall reach also hearts and homes among those hills.

But our friends from the West seem to fail to recognize this fact. Look at the census. The census tells you that of men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five there is a very large percentage more in Illinois, in Indiana, in Wisconsin, in Iowa, in Minnesota, than there is in any single one of the New England States. We do not desire to shirk or avoid any portion of our responsibility or of our burdens upon this occasion. Not at all, sir. We will furnish all our men, so far as it is in our power, by volunteers, if you will let us procure those volunteers upon ground common to us all.

And there can be no objection upon the quality of the soldiers thus procured, because the United States themselves have been engaged in this same work. There can be no objection to our procuring them upon the reason that the soldier thus procured is not just as good as any other soldier, and that the procuring them upon this ground will deteriorate the character of the Army. What is the objection? I submit I have not heard from any quarter anything which seems to be in any respect a valid objection to granting to those States which have already been drained of their young men the right of going into the States declared to be in rebellion and there procuring such volunteers as they can induce to come into the service.

Mr. WILSON. I would ask whether the quotas for the several districts and States, made out under existing law and in accordance with the practice of the Department, are not determined by the number of enrolled men in the districts and States.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend from Iowa can tell how the quota is made up in any State he is the best mathematician I have seen yet.

Mr. WILSON. I understand the quotas are determined in accordance with the number of men upon the rolls; and that being the case, the State of Massachusetts has to furnish her proportion in accordance with the number of men upon her rolls in the same way that the State of Iowa and other States furnish their quotas.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, whether they be assigned on the enrollment or on the population I do not know. Sometimes I am informed it is on the one and sometimes I am informed it is on the other. This much I know, that no arithmetic ever invented has been able to cipher it and to determine the rule by which these quotas are assigned. I do not mean to say there has been any design—for I do not think there has been—on the part of assigning officers to assign to any State more than its share, or that any State has had in the aggregate more than its fair share assigned. But no rule such as is indicated by the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] will hold true when applied either to the State of Massachusetts or the State of Iowa.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the rule may not be a just one, but the injustice, if there be any, falls on the States who have the most men, in proportion to their population, liable to perform military duty; so that the injustice really falls on the western States.

Mr. DAWES. The fact is that no such rule as that the assignment is made on the enrollment lists has prevailed in the assignment of quotas.

Mr. SCHENCK. The original enrollment act, which has never been amended, provides that in assigning to districts the number of men to be furnished, the President shall take into consideration the number of volunteers and militia by and for the several States, and the period of service from the commencement of the present war. That is the law. In practice that assignment made by the President is on the basis of the enrolled militia of the several districts, or of the population between the ages of twenty and forty-five, not according to population, but according to the number of persons liable to draft. I speak merely of the law, and of the basis of assignment. As to the fact I do not know.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio is very properly cautious in distinguishing between what is his construction of the law as he reads it and what is the practice under the law. I am not discussing that point with the gentleman. I will yield again to the gentleman from Iowa if he will give me one good reason why I should not be permitted to obtain my volunteer wherever I please; provided, first, that I get as good a one as he is; and, next, that I do not get anybody who belongs to him.

Mr. WILSON. If there are men within the military ages in States engaged in the rebellion against the United States, I believe those men should be enlisted by the General Government; and that in addition to those so enlisted by the Government, each State should be required to furnish its just proportion of the men to fill up the deficit in the Army. That makes it equal. Then all the men enlisted by the General Government in the southern States go to the credit of the whole country. That is the object of the enrollment bill, to cause every State to furnish its proper proportion.

There is one fact in connection with the population of the eastern States which the gentleman from Massachusetts leaves out entirely. That is that in the eastern States there is a larger proportion of men over forty-five years of age than there is in the western States; so that we of the West have more men liable to military duty in proportion to the population than the eastern States have.

Mr. DAWES. Does it lessen the burden that the old men are left among us? I do not propose, nor does the bill propose, to interfere at all with the United States in any effort they may make to recruit their armies on their general call anywhere in the rebel States. No such interference is contemplated by this bill, and no such interference will result from it. The object is merely that when the United States omits to enroll men, we may gather them up and put them into the ranks. But, sir, the other branch have refused to concur in our proposition by which we simply propose to put into the ranks those who would otherwise be scattered to the four quarters. That is what I complain of. I do not ask on behalf of the eastern States that they shall be permitted to take a single man that the United States proposes to enlist.

I ask gentlemen to bear in mind that the United States has been driven into this business of enlisting men on the part of the General Government by the East; that thousands of dollars, volunteer contribution, have been sent, secured by our own agents without asking that they should be put into the quota of any State, and the United States has engaged reluctantly in the business of enlisting just so far as it has been pushed, and no further; and it is not, therefore, because they want these men themselves that they object to this clause which we propose to put into the bill. There is no reason—no mortal man has given a reason or can give a reason, it seems to me—why we should not be permitted, when we have not the men ourselves, to take these men which neither the United States nor the States which now oppose this provision take. And when it has been admitted that such men are fit to become soldiers, I ask again, is there any reason why we should not have the opportunity of bringing them in?

Now, Mr. Speaker, with such a bill, after this House has declared by a very large majority over and over again that no bill would be acceptable to them that had not a provision in it authorizing any State desiring it to go into the rebel States and recruit the wasted ranks of their regiments, and had sent this bill to the other branch of Congress, and after we had time and again, by unexampled majorities, decided that we could not force upon our people this draft without commutation, we assented to it at last because it contained the provision that we should have the privilege of going down to the rebel States and there recruiting our wasted regiments, giving us sixty days' notice. We then agreed by the bill that if we could not raise our men within that time we would take the draft without commutation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I regret to be under the necessity of saying to those who look upon the true character of this measure and who know its effect upon the country, to those who know how much force it will take to execute this law, that I am unable to understand how, consistently with their desire to keep our armies filled, they will persist in enforcing this particular measure and in excluding the privilege we have asked, when we pledge ourselves by the bill we passed that if granted we will furnish our full quota of men under this law, by draft or otherwise, without the necessity of bringing any force to us from abroad.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a very few moments. I have promised to yield a portion of my time to some gentleman upon the other side, and I must therefore resume the floor.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to ask my friend from Massachusetts one simple question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order. It seems as though this matter of debating this measure must all be on one side. I desire to know whether it is in order for a gentleman to hold the floor and yield it simply to those whom he may select?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to yield the floor for explanation of the pending measure.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate have passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of Dr. Charles M. Wetherill;

An act (H. R. No. 550) to establish Colfax street, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of the State of Ohio; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to settle and pay the accounts of John S. Phelps, of Missouri, as a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress.

Also, that the Senate have passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Naham Ward back to the Court of Claims, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate insist on their amendment to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey, agree, to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. LANE, of Kansas, the committee on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate return to the House, in compliance with its request, the bill of the Senate (No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate have passed an act (No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

An act (No. 233) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line; and

An act (No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraph communication between the eastern and western continents.

CONSCRIPTION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The gentleman states that he will withdraw the force from the Army to enforce a draft. I want him to tell the House whether the State of Massachusetts intends to resist the draft.

Mr. DAWES. It was simple for the gentleman to put such a question to me. He and this House know very well that the State of Massachusetts does not intend to resist the draft. Massachusetts has dedicated herself and all she has to the support of the laws of the land and the subjugation of those who rebel against them.

If the gentleman wants to know what Massachusetts will do, I will tell him. She will do all of her duty, and will continue to bow to the law, whatever it is, so long as there is a dollar in her treasury or she has a single drop of blood to shed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. She will fight with men from other States; she will buy men from the other States to do the fighting for her.

Mr. DAWES. She will get men everywhere that she can get them.

Mr. SCHENCK. All I desire myself is ten minutes in which to explain what the Senate has done; but I am perfectly willing to yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HARDING,] who is anxious to be heard on this question.

Mr. HARDING. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy in yielding to me. It is proper that the discussion should not be confined to the other side of the House. The whole truth ought to be told, and it ought to be told at once. The members from Massachusetts ought to be willing to acknowledge that their whole effort is to throw the burden of their share of fighting in this war upon the negroes they may procure from other States. They might as well come up and face the music at once. They do not want to go themselves, but they want to send the negroes in their place, however those negroes may be obtained. This is a part of that demoralizing and destructive policy which the real disunionists of Massachusetts have inaugurated, and which I have ever denounced.

The great promises that they made in the first days of the war have not been fulfilled. Where are the nine hundred thousand men that Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, told us would throng the highways from Massachusetts on their way to the Army? Where are they? Echo answers "where?" The fugitive slave law has been repealed and all the other things that they desire have been accomplished, and still these nine hundred thousand Massachusetts men remain at home. They have, on the contrary, sent out their slave-catchers into all the southern States to buy, to kidnap, to steal the black men, and to force them into the Army to fill up their quota. They will not go themselves, however much they have talked about giving up their last man; but they get these negroes and put them in the front and skulk behind them as we have seen for so many months. That is what they want. That is the right they are so tenacious about.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. HARDING. No, sir; I do not yield the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a white man's Government. The white man, the white race, in my judgment, ought to carry on the war for its preservation. I believe that the people of no section of the country should be allowed to skulk behind the negro and force the black man where they are unwilling to go themselves. I am opposed to one State sending its agents into other States to kidnap negroes and virtually to buy and reenslave them. There has been great feeling heretofore on the part of the men who buy these negroes against the outrages charged by them to have been perpetrated upon the slaves, but they propose now to make them undergo every hardship and peril in order that they themselves be released from the just measure of responsibility which devolves upon them.

I understand, but I am not sure about it, that Massachusetts has already raised two regiments of negroes in the State of Ohio, and even if the agents of Massachusetts are permitted to go down to South Carolina to buy two regiments of contrabands, they ought to go to pay for what has been taken from Ohio.

What the gentleman is declaiming against is, that the practice resorted to by Massachusetts is not recognized in this bill. Why, sir, the General Government ought to get all these men if they are desirable as soldiers, and if it is right to take them at all. There would then be that many more fighting men for the Government. But do not let the people of Massachusetts escape from the just burdens of this war by sending their agents upon southern soil to kidnap and reenslave these negroes by sending them into the Army. Massachusetts and all the other States ought to stand on their own bottom. If it is necessary that these men should be put into the service, let the General Government recruit down there. Let them be credited to all of the States, and not to the State of Massachusetts alone.

Let that be done and then let us see how this policy works. This is a part of that fanatical system which we have seen inaugurated by Massachusetts. If it had not been forced upon the country, the people of Massachusetts would not occupy the position they now do of hunting up negroes to fill their places in the Army.

But how is it now? You want to force the white soldiers to an equality with the negroes, force them to associate and to mess with them, and force them to fight with them. How would you like it yourselves, as much as you love the negro? Are you willing to take them into your embraces and make them your associates in this House? Would you be willing to sit by them here and vote with them? Of course you would not. And yet you want to force the white soldier in the Army into an equality with him. You have carried that policy so far that it has become odious, and all our troubles have arisen out of it. Our present condition is the fruit of your policy, and now you want to shrink from the bitter result; now the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to skulk behind the negro, and send after them the negro kidnapper. This is a beautiful commentary on the repeal of the fugitive slave law.

A few men are to be sent after them, and when you get them you send them into the Army. This Government will never be saved on any such policy as that. I say, the man who feels as he ought the just value of such a Government as this, the man who appreciates its worth, the State or community which appreciates its worth, never will want to send an inferior race before them to protect them and their rights. The best and most intelligent men you have, the men who appreciate to the highest extent the value of this Government are the men you ought to send into your armies. Will the gentleman say that his constituents are as ignorant and know as little about the value of this Government as the negro? Does he say that the negro will make as good a soldier and as intelligent a patriot as a Massachusetts man? Do you estimate the patriotism, the intelligence, the worth, and the love of country of the negro equal to those of your constituents? Do you? Sir, it is a perfectly plain case and every man with half an eye can see it. You have nothing to do but to furnish your own quota, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has already cut off one argument entirely. None of your young men have gone off from Massachusetts since this enrollment was made, unless they are deserters.

Now, sir, in Kentucky, where the war has beat upon us with all its fury and violence, where our horses have been stolen, property taken, and our people have been reduced in many cases almost to beggary and want, the voice of Kentucky has never come up here with any whining of this sort. We furnish our quota without negroes, and Kentucky would scorn at any time to call negroes to her help.

Mr. SCHENCK resumed the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the gentleman that it is due to me that I should have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I ought not to be limited to five minutes after the tirade which has been poured out upon Massachusetts and upon myself.

Massachusetts, Mr. Speaker, can take a great deal of lecturing; she has already taken a great deal in this House, but it is not very comfortable to take it from Kentucky. The bones of Massachusetts' sons are bleaching on the soil of Kentucky to save that State from rebellion and treason. And whatever may be said of the representatives of Massachusetts in this Capitol, or of her Governor, when the President of the United States called upon the Governor of Massachusetts for troops to defend the Government he never insulted the Executive of this country by refusing to send men, as the Governor of Kentucky did. Whatever may be said of her representatives here, they have never been expelled from this and the other end of the Capitol for their treasonable utterances here. Sir, we have no rebel generals at the head of divisions and corps marching on to the slaughter of the Union men of this country. We have no men from Massachusetts who, because they failed to get the highest offices in the gift of the Government, turned traitors and led the young men of Massachusetts into treason and blood. Kentucky can tell whether she has. She has today more representatives in the rebel congress than in this.

Sir, Massachusetts has not called upon the General Government to help her save herself from treason. All the forces of the Government for the last three years have been called to the assistance of Kentucky, and they have just kept her head above the water; and no Kentucky man, with the history of the last three years written in blood before him, has the right to lecture Massachusetts, which has done her full duty and furnished all her men.

Talk about Massachusetts! Sir, let abuse of Massachusetts come from some other quarter than that, reeking as it is with treason and with blood from one end to the other, and the utterances of whose treason are only a remarkable instance of the forbearance of this Government until forbearance has almost ceased to be a virtue. [Applause on the floor.]

That is all I have to say to the tirade upon Massachusetts that comes from Kentucky.

Mr. HARDING. Does the gentleman allude to my remarks when he speaks of treasonable utterances?

Mr. SCHENCK resumed the floor.

Mr. HARDING. The gentleman from Ohio will allow me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Several Members objected.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Kentucky will resume his seat. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say that this is House bill No. 549.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We ought to have satisfaction on that point, and I am not satisfied that the gentleman from Massachusetts does not desire to preclude an answer.

Mr. COX. No objection can prevail against a member yielding for a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has the floor. If he yields he must state to whom. If not the Chair will protect him in his right to the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not yielded.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire, in a very few moments, to say to the House, so that it may understand what it is on which it is called upon to vote, that the bill now before the House is not the Senate bill proper, but House bill No. 549, which was finally passed in the shape given to it by the amendment offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. SMITHERS.] It has been returned from the Senate with that substitute entirely struck out, the Senate substituting as an amendment an entirely new bill. Gentlemen will recollect that when the bill came back from the Senate first it contained as one of its sections a revenue clause providing for raising the money, by an income tax, for the payment of bounties; a very singular clause, by the way, inasmuch as the Senate had struck out everything in the bill relating to bounties. The bill having been returned to the Senate with a declaration on the part of the House that that section had been placed there improperly and contrary to the constitutional rights of the House, the bill itself having no relation to a revenue measure, that section has been abandoned by the Senate, and the bill has been returned without it, as a substitute for the House bill.

This bill now before us does not repeal the commutation clause at all. The Senate—judging from what I have heard—imagined it had done so; but there is no repeal of the commutation clause in the bill. Then, instead of allowing enlistments in rebel States for the purpose of filling up the quotas of States, the Senate has introduced a section which makes it a penal offense to enlist a man in any State to fill up the quota of another State, and makes any officer engaged in it liable to dismissal.

Then the Senate put in something about the draft, after forty days' time being allowed for volunteering; and also put in some provision in respect to the pay and rations of matrons in hospitals. It also legislates upon three or four other matters of military concern, but having no special connection with an enrollment law or with the procuring of men under a draft. Now, I propose that the House do not concur in that amendment of the Senate.

Mr. DRIGGS. What about the enlistment of minors?

Mr. SCHENCK. The Senate has struck that section out.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope my colleague will not move the previous question, but leave the Senate bill as it came to the House open, so that the House may make it as perfect as possible before the vote is finally taken upon it.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Senate bill as it has come to the House is, I presume, not in every respect as was intended by the Senate itself. For instance, they did not repeal the commutation clause at all. They have legislated upon various matters which do not belong to the bill at all, which have no pertinency to an enrollment bill. I hope the bill will now go to a committee of conference, and if the committee cannot agree the House will still have the remedy of falling back upon the original Senate bill, which is in the Committee on Military Affairs, and put that in such shape as will perhaps enable the two Houses to agree.

Mr. LE BLOND. Still, I do not see any objection before leaving this bill to perfecting it as much as possible.

Mr. SCHENCK. We have no time to spare, and I prefer to try this method, still retaining the original Senate bill as another string for our bow.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope my colleague will at least yield to permit me to offer an amendment. If he permits the Senate amendments to be perfected before non-concurring we shall have more strings to our bow still.

Mr. SCHENCK. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I move that the House adhere to its original amendments.

Mr. SCHENCK. The House has made no amendments.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senate as I understand have yielded to the House in retaining both the commutation law and the substitute law.

Mr. SCHENCK. The House passed a bill which repealed the commutation law.

Mr. KERNAN. Exactly, and the Senate struck that out, leaving the commutation law and the substitute law in accordance with the position originally taken by the House. Now I propose that we concur with the Senate in all its amendments except the one in relation to enlistments in the rebel States, and ask a conference upon that.

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot consent to that. The House it is true originally opposed the repeal of the commutation clause, but upon its sober second thought reversed its decision, and as the House has now come to that conclusion I should prefer not to agree with the Senate in what the Senate did not intend to do while leaving the commutation clause standing.

Mr. KERNAN. The sober third thought of the House, however, may be in favor of retaining the commutation clause.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. If the previous question is sustained can we vote separately upon the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate is to strike out and insert, and is indivisible.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senate strike out the House bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. They struck out certain portions of the House bill, and thought they had struck out the commutation clause. One Senator told me he thought he had voted upon the commutation and found he had not. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HARDING. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to have a few minutes to ask the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] a question in relation to the personal attack made upon me.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the gentleman will rise to a personal explanation after this business has been disposed of, I presume there will be no objection. I desire first to get this matter out of the way.

Mr. HARDING. I do not think this matter will be out of the way very soon.

Mr. GANSON. I hope I may be permitted to ask one question. I do not desire that this House shall vote under a misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GANSON. I ask permission to make an explanation.

Mr. HIGBY. I object.

The House divided on seconding the previous question; and there were—ayes 68, noes 62.

Mr. THAYER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCHENCK and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 60.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. LE BLOND obtained the floor.

Mr. HARDING. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. LE BLOND. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. HARDING. I had not the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, when up before to finish my remarks. When I was taken from the floor, I was about remarking that this was the legitimate fruit of that policy which sought long since to press negroes and slaves into the Army instead of white men. If this policy is carried on, if the gentlemen from Massachusetts are permitted to carry out this policy, and instead of giving white patriots, white men to the Army, they are allowed to go into the South and gather up a horde of negroes to fill their quota and place them in the Army, what will be the result? Why, sir, you will see the Army of the United States degenerate to a mere mob of negroes and foreigners. From the way we have been going on, I apprehend we are destined to reach that point very soon. It will be a disgrace to the nation and to our patriot ancestors.

Let this thing go on, sir; let the gentleman's policy prevail, and you will have Massachusetts dodging and skulking from her duty behind these negroes. These negroes can be obtained in various ways in the southern States, where there are swarms of starving contrabands. They can be decoyed away, and that has been done in the State of Missouri and is being done now in the State of Kentucky. They are, sir, carried off by force by recruiting agents. They are not merely carried off into slavery, but into a condition where thousands of them will meet death upon the battle-field.

In what I said in reference to foreigners, I alluded to that class which is now being imported into this country. I honor the foreigners who come here and take up their residence among us.

Now, sir, let the policy now inaugurated be permitted to go on and it will make the Army of the United States a disgrace to the nation. The object of the gentleman in the remarks which he made a little while ago is very plain. Instead of meeting the points which I brought to bear against him directly and fairly in the face he tried to raise a dust to cover his retreat by abusing Breckinridge and other men who had gone into the southern rebellion. The gentleman from Massachusetts can exhaust all the gall and venom in his composition, and ten times more, if he had it, in abusing Breckinridge, and then he would not be half abused. It is true that Breckinridge is a traitor, but it is also true that he was hand in hand with Major General Benjamin F. Butler not long since. There is not much difference between them now, that I know of. It is said, however, that Breckinridge is the dearest man of the two. [Laughter.]

The gentleman talks about Kentucky. I say that Kentucky has proved her loyalty beyond all question. She stands this day, notwithstanding the recreancy of some of her sons, occupying a position which she would not blush to compare with that of Massachusetts. I believe, sir, she would not suffer by comparison with any other State. Look where she has been placed and what she has done. Dangers and trials have surrounded her. Although some of her sons have proved traitors, although her fields have been destroyed, although her soil has been made the battle-ground for both contending armies, and her people have been ravaged in every way, still what has she done? She has done forty times more for the Union than Massachusetts ever did or ever will do. You men of the North have not been tried; your soil has not been made the battle-field. The border States have not had justice done to them. Why, sir, had Missouri and Maryland and Kentucky gone with the South instead of remaining true to the Union, you would not have been occupying seats here to-day. Exposed, tempted, and tried as they were, they still stood firm; had they gone off you would not now occupy a seat upon this floor; the capital would have been taken long since. If this Union is ever restored it will be because these border State men have breasted the storm. My State has been the battle-ground; she has stood between you and danger like a breastwork while you have skulked behind and abused her. You have been making money all the time, growing rich—your contractors and others fattening on the tears and blood that have been shed, while my constituents have become poor, and portions of my State been made a desolation. We have had the war upon us, and know all about it by experience. Our State has been the battle-field, while you were far removed from the scenes of terror.

Now, with what grace can the gentleman from Massachusetts rise up here and reproach Kentucky because there have been a few men there who have proved themselves traitors? And yet there are not more than there have been and now are in Massachusetts. Open and avowed disunionists and traitors have existed in Massachusetts for forty years. I can easily prove that there have been many of them there long before this struggle commenced; and South Carolina and Massachusetts, when the day of reckoning comes, will be found responsible for this war which has plunged my State into such distress.

Sir, I retort upon the gentleman from Massachusetts that many men in that State have proclaimed the Union our ancestors formed "an agreement with death and a covenant with hell." I do not desire to tarnish the name of Massachusetts at all, but if you want to compare men I can point to as great disunionists in Massachusetts as Breckinridge ever was. Are you willing that the Union shall be restored with the Constitution as it is and the Union as it was?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I am for the Constitution as it is and the Union to be restored as far as it can be, and—

Mr. HARDING. That is enough. The gentleman this very day offered some resolutions in regard to Arkansas which I desired to see a vote taken on, for I wanted to see who would take ground in favor of them. The second resolution offered by the gentleman declared that no State shall ever return into the Union until slavery is abolished. If that resolution expresses the sentiments of its author, then the gentleman is opposed to the Constitution as it is and the Union as it was.

I know of but one test of loyalty, and that is to be true and faithful to the Constitution; and he who is against the Constitution as it is and the Union as it was is disloyal and a disunionist in the strictest sense of the term. He must be for the Constitution or against it. Take that as a test, and I will compare Kentucky with Massachusetts.

But, sir, I intended to reply to some of the concluding remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. After skulking behind the negro, it was cowardly to kick a dust to cover his retreat by making an attack on Kentucky and her Representatives. I understood the gentleman, in substance, to say that Representatives from Kentucky had uttered treasonable sentiments until it was no longer bearable. If the gentleman referred to me I want to know it, and what remark of mine he referred to.

Mr. DAWES. If I can have the floor to answer, I will answer.

Mr. HARDING. I yield to the gentleman to answer whether he alluded to me.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will allow me to answer as I choose to answer, I will do so. Will the gentleman permit me to answer as I choose?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly, answer my question.

Mr. DAWES. I shall make no answer until I get an answer to my interrogatory, which is, shall I be permitted to answer the interrogatory as I choose?

Mr. HARDING. I do not put an answer in your mouth, and you cannot get out of it in that way. I ask you to answer the question.

Mr. DAWES. I have had experience in attempting to answer the gentleman's interrogatories, by being shut off in the midst of my answer. I will answer any interrogatory put to me if I be permitted to answer as I choose. Otherwise I will not answer any interrogatory.

Mr. HARDING. Then the gentleman may take his seat.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman does not choose that I shall answer him.

Mr. HARDING. I do not restrain the gentleman at all. That is another method of covering up his track. I did not embarrass the gentleman at all. I said I yielded for the purpose of his answering the question. And then he gets off from answering at all by the reply he has made. I hope the gentleman did not intend to apply that language to myself, though I am not certain whether he did or not. While I speak with warmth the real sentiments of my mind, I am not conscious of having uttered any sentiment now or at any time that is treasonable except in the eyes of some abolitionist of Massachusetts or the North who never was loyal, and never will be, and who does not know what loyalty is. If the gentleman intended to say that I utter treasonable and disloyal sentiments, I hurl back the assertion upon him as false. He has no ground for making such insinuations against me or any other Unionist of Kentucky, and if he intended it as applicable to me, I denounce it as a slander and a falsehood. I will not use the language of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. McCLELLAN], as that would not be parliamentary.

What is loyalty? The test of loyalty is our willingness to stand by the Constitution of Washington and the fathers. Are you willing to stand by that, as you swore to do? If I had the opportunity and time I could convict some gentlemen before any jury of not having stood by it according to the strict interpretation of their oath. I repeat, the test of loyalty is, are you for or against the Constitution of the fathers? Do you stand firmly on the rocky foundation on which Washington and the fathers stood? You say, and say truly, that the rebels of the South have ignored that foundation and have made slavery the corner-stone of the confederate government. They are therefore rebels. But many of you, too, have rejected that foundation and are seeking to build up a government on the corner-stone of abolitionism. And to that extent you are in open rebellion against the Constitution of the fathers, just as much as the rebels in the South are. Any man, whether in South Carolina or in Massachusetts, who seeks to build on another foundation than that laid by Washington and the fathers is a rebel and a disunionist.

And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts threw out insinuations about the loyalty of Kentucky—a border State which has bared her breast to the storm of war. The fury of that storm has converted many of her fruitful fields into places that present the very baldness of desolation. While, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WHALEY] said some time ago, "many of you never smelled gunpowder," the people of Kentucky have been passing through scenes of terror and blood. The border States have stood firm, and have rolled back the fiery tide of southern revolution. If it had overrun any of those border States, if it had overrun Kentucky, it would have swept over Ohio and Indiana, and, last and least of all, it might have even reached the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. LE BLOND. I offer the following as an amendment to the last section of the bill:

Provided, That no levy of troops shall be made under the provisions of this act, except by volunteering, till such time as the President of the United States shall have made a request for an armistice and shall have made such efforts as are consistent with honor to restore harmony among the States by the appointment of commissioners empowered to negotiate for peace upon terms of the restoration of the Union under the Constitution, and until such efforts shall have been rejected by the so-called confederate government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not, at this late period in the session, propose to occupy the time of the House but for a few moments, and would not do so at all did I not believe that humanity and the good of our common country demand some efforts for peace and restoration other than those resorted to by the party in power.

The necessity for a resort to peaceful means may be found in the argument of my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] when this bill was before the House last week. After the House had by a very decided vote refused to repeal the commutation clause, he then said that it was, in his judgment, a vote cast against the prosecution of the war, and that men could not be induced to go into the Army. What, sir, does this argue, if true, but that the people are sick at heart of this war, at least under present rule and for the object they openly avow, the freedom of the slave?

If the people are opposed to the further continuance of this conflict of arms, then, sir, the war must cease, for they are the power in this Government if permitted to speak, act, and vote. I believe, sir, the people are tired of prosecuting this war under the policy adopted by this Administration, and at the November election will make such a change of rulers as will redound to the good of the whole country.

The chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. SCHENCK] in his speech said that the people did not complain against a vigorous prosecution of the war, but did complain of the vacillation of the Government, and the want of energy and purpose. I am pleased to get such a confession from that side of the House, for we have been trying to impress upon the mind of the people the total want of ability in this Administration to either make war or contract peace, and that for the good of the country a change was necessary.

But my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] said that slavery was the cause of the war, and that he was now in favor of waging this war till the root of the evil was destroyed. Why did not my colleague so say to the people of his district at the time he was a candidate for election to the seat he now occupies? Sir, he knew too well the wishes of that people. They were not then and are not now in favor of war for such a purpose. Had my colleague's views been known to the people of his district, this day would the name of Vallandigham be called from the Clerk's desk on all votes instead of my colleague's.

The view advanced by that gentleman is but the settled purpose of this weak and imbecile Administration, and in it you can find one potent reason for the people's refusal to go into the service. Had that doctrine been understood by the people, you never could have raised men to strike the first blow in this fratricidal war. If you have not changed the policy and object of this war, you have at least become sufficiently bold to admit now what we charged you have intended for two years past to do, and which you denied till your acts have forced an admission.

Then it is for this purpose that over two million freemen have been taken from their homes to the battle-field; for this one half of that number lies beneath the sod; for this the nation is clothed in mourning; for this the people are taxed almost beyond endurance, and now, when in your judgment the people refuse voluntarily to enter the service, you propose to close every avenue to their escape by the repeal of the commutation clause, and force an unwilling people into a war waged confessedly for the freedom of the slave.

Sir, it is time, high time that this Congress were making some efforts other than devising ways and means to raise money to keep in motion the wheels of Government, and men to fill our decimated ranks. Let us try for once at least the peaceful means indicated in my amendment. We have evidences sufficient to justify an effort on our part, and it would for the time stop this effusion of blood without placing us in any worse condition than we are now in, but in my judgment in a better condition. Whether it will or will not be done rests with that side of the House, and they dare not try the experiment, lest the Union may be restored by compromise and slavery still live.

Mr. Speaker, for a time I had hopes that the commutation clause would be retained. I saw the Massachusetts delegation and others, numbering about twenty, arrayed against its repeal, and supposed they would be found true to the end, but to my surprise they have deserted their grounds. We are told by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that an arrangement had been made giving sixty days to recruit in, and that he thought his State would be able to fill her quota; therefore he went for the bill. Then, sir, there has been a bargain and sale made, and the bill shaped to suit the wishes of Massachusetts and enable her to go into my State and others to purchase negroes to offset against the white men from other States.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman from Ohio what he means by bargain and sale.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will tell the gentleman what I mean. Massachusetts was consulted, and sixty days to recruit in given to secure the votes of those twenty members.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I will answer for the men who first refused to vote for that bill. I will not interrupt the gentleman now.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would prefer having the gentleman answer now, and will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I will say that it is not chargeable to Massachusetts. I will not take up the time of the gentleman now, but I will get the floor when he has finished his remarks.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I suppose this bill or some other repealing the commutation clause will be passed before the adjournment of this session, and the foundation laid to enable this Administration to carry out its long-cherished idea that "this Government cannot exist one half slave and the other half free," and to accomplish this purpose there is to be no cessation of hostilities, no terms of compromise offered based upon the restoration of the Union. I shall not trespass longer upon the patience of the House, hoping that at the coming election the judgment of the people will decide in favor of trying some other means for peace than the mere use of the sword and bristling bayonet, and that the time may soon come when peace and union may again exist in our land.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we have had about talk enough for the present, and as none of us understand this bill so as to know how to vote upon it this evening, I move that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow, and that it be printed.

Mr. SCHENCK. In what condition then will this bill be?

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn now, it would come up as unfinished business immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope we shall not adjourn, as it is necessary that we should remain in session so that the President can sign the tariff bill, which is to go into effect to-morrow.

Mr. THAYER. I move the previous question upon the pending amendment, and upon it demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That will not be in order pending the motion to postpone.

Mr. STEVENS. I move the previous question upon the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. If it is postponed and the House does not adjourn now, the Chair cannot say when it will come up.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, reported that—

The committee having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its first amendment.

That the Senate agree to all the amendments of the House after the said first amendment, except the thirty-first amendment.

That the Senate agree to the thirty-first amendment of the House with the following amendments, to wit: strike out all after the word "department" in line eighteen down to and including the word "general" in line twenty-three of said amendment; also strike out all after the word "that" in line thirty six down to and including the word "department" in the thirty-eighth line of the said amendment; and the House agree to the said thirty-first amendment as amended.

HENRY WILSON,

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

L. M. POWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

ELIJAH WARD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question upon agreeing to the report of the committee.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the report was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. FINCK, leave of absence was granted him on account of sickness.

Mr. ROLLINS, of Missouri. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. SCOTT, on account of sickness.

Leave was granted.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

CONSCRIPTION BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the conscription bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask a vote on my motion that the bill and amendments be printed.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my motion to postpone.

Mr. THAYER. I insist upon my demand for the previous question upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, and call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. COX. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I moved that the House adjourn, and my motion is first in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question being on Mr. Cox's motion to lay the whole subject on the table,

Mr. DENISON called for the yeas and nays, and for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was rejected; there being, on a division—yeas 43, noes 57.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question on Mr. LE BLOND's amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

Mr. THAYER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 11, nays 89, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bliss, Edgerton, Finck, William Johnson, Long, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Ross, and Chilton A. White—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Atley, Allison, Ames, Ashley, Bailey, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, Chandler, Ambrose W. So the amendment was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, stated that his colleague, Mr. ARNOLD, was detained at his room by sickness.

Mr. HERRICK stated that he was paired off with his colleague, Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. KELLEY said, Mr. Speaker, I am paired off on general subjects with Mr. ODELL, but as he would unquestionably vote as I on this question, I do not consider the pair binding. I vote no. I would be doing him injustice if I were to assume that he would vote otherwise.

Mr. WILDER stated that Mr. KNOX was paired off with Mr. JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Mr. McBRIDE stated that Mr. McDOWELL was paired with Mr. McINDOE.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

And then, on motion of Mr. SCHENCK, (at twenty-five minutes past ten o'clock, p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 1, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

AMENDMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the House (No. 543) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, for the purpose of correcting an error in the engrossment of the said amendments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented seven petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TEN EYCK presented resolutions of the clerical and lay members of the Diocesan Convention of New Jersey in favor of exempting clergymen from liability to do military duty; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 186) to incorporate the Baltimore and Washington Depot and Potomac Ferry Railroad Company; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to present the petition of Rev. Ernst Brey, Esq., Professor R. L. Tafel, Charles P. Johnson, P. Barth, and others, citizens of St. Louis, setting forth that "it is the duty of the State to educate its children without any exception," and calling the attention of Congress to that subject as a matter of "national importance," and asking "the action of Congress upon the subject as set forth in the petition" to the end therein predicated. The petition is accompanied by an explanatory statement of the reasons which support the prayer of the petitioners. I move that the papers be laid on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 344) authorizing the corporate authorities of the city of Washington to increase the funded debt of the said city of Washington; which was read twice by its title.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

NAVAL SUPPLIES.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am instructed by the select committee on naval supplies to make a report accompanied by a bill, and at the same time to say to the Senate that as the report is not the unanimous act of the committee, individual members of the committee have deemed it their duty to present their several views on the matters discussed in the report, and I am instructed to report those papers also, so as to have the distinct views of all the committee, and to move that they all be printed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 342) to amend a "joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the equitable claims of contractors for naval supplies and regulating contracts with the Navy Department," approved March 3, 1864, was read, and passed to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE that two thousand additional copies of the papers be printed for the use of the Senate, and five thousand copies for the use of the Navy Department, it was Ordered, That the motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE. I desire to make a very brief statement on this subject. The other day after the report was presented—I was not in the Chamber at the time—my friend from Wisconsin made some remarks that were reported to me as not very pleasant. I simply wish to state in that connection that when I presented the report the other day I presented it in strict accordance with what I understood to be the agreement of the committee. It seems I was mistaken so far as the Senator from Wisconsin was concerned; but I presented it in the presence of the other members of the committee, and in strict accordance with what I understood to be the agreement of the committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from New Hampshire says that he made the report in accordance with what he understood to be the understanding of the committee. I will state what my understanding was. As the committee did not agree in a report, each member of the committee proposed to submit his views for himself, the chairman's views to be signed by himself, and the views of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] and myself to be submitted by us. The committee agreed on the bill which has been reported and that the evidence should be printed and submitted to the Senate, but did not agree on the inferences and conclusions to be drawn from the evidence, and each one was to give his opinion for himself. The Senator from New Hampshire called upon me in my seat yesterday morning and we had a conversation on the subject, and I understood from that conversation that as Mr. BUCKALEW, our colleague, had not yet had time to write out his views the whole matter should go over until this morning before the case should be presented to the Senate. I so understood it. When I came into the Senate afterwards and found that the Senator from New Hampshire had made a report claiming to be the report of the committee, I called upon the Senator from Pennsylvania in relation to it, and he informed me that the Senator from New Hampshire had informed him that I had consented to it, and understanding that I had consented he yielded his assent and would submit his views this morning. I certainly understood, however—the Senator from New Hampshire may have understood it otherwise, and as he says he understood it otherwise I shall say it is simply a misunderstanding between us—that the whole matter was to go over until this morning. When I found the report had been made I did speak of it to the Senate, and it was not so much in what I did say as, perhaps, in what I did not say that I manifested my feelings of surprise and to some extent my feelings of indignation at what I supposed was a violation of the understanding; but as the Senator from New Hampshire says expressly he understood it otherwise, I afterwards said I could make no further statement in relation to it and am bound to let the matter pass.

LAND IN WALLABOUT BAY.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 561) to authorize the United States to acquire land in Wallabout bay belonging to the city of Brooklyn, and to authorize the exchange of other lands therefor, to report it without amendment; and as it is a bill of only about six lines, involving no appropriation, but simply proposing an exchange of lands, I hope the Senate will consider it now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to negotiate with the city of Brooklyn for an exchange of lands in Wallabout bay between the United States and that city, and thereupon to make, execute, and deliver good and sufficient deeds and releases therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment:

A bill (S. No. 330) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grades of officers of the United States Navy;"

A bill (H. R. No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Alfred Jones, of Missouri, reported a bill (S. No. 343) making an appropriation for testing submarine inventions; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of masters in the Navy, not in the line of promotion and attached to navy-yards, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print four thousand copies of the internal revenue act last passed by Congress, with an index to be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the Senate, reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the tariff act last passed by Congress, with an index to be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 542) to regulate the pay of paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance, reported it without amendment.

EXPENSES OF PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

Mr. COWAN. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 117.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 117) to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses in calling out the militia of said State during the recent invasion, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. TEN EYCK to strike out the following proviso to the first section of the bill:

Provided, That the expenses of none of the militia of any State shall be paid under this act who refused to be mustered into the service of the United States.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 2; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Willey, and Wilson—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Pomeroy and Saulsbury—2.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Richardson, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That any other troops from any other State received into, and actually serving in, the Army of the United States, whether regularly mustered in or not, and who have not been otherwise provided for, shall receive the same pay and all other emoluments that they would be entitled to if they had been regularly mustered into such service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have that last amendment read. I did not hear it.

Mr. COWAN. It is a new section. Owing to the change which has been made in the first section of the bill it will require an additional appropriation in order to meet the claims upon the Treasury. The money paid by individuals and corporations of Pennsylvania for the payment of troops called into service by her will amount to about seven hundred thousand dollars. The first section appropriated that sum for their payment. But by the amendments which have been made in that section it is now proposed to pay the troops from New Jersey and New York who assisted to repel that invasion. I therefore propose to strike out the word "seven" in the tenth line of the first section, and to insert "twelve;" so as to make the appropriation $1,200,000. I suppose that will cover all the troops included. I understand that the troops from New Jersey require about forty thousand dollars to pay them. The amount disbursed by the State of New York in the payment of her troops has not been ascertained exactly, but $1,200,000 will cover all, and I hope, therefore, this amendment will be made.

Mr. GRIMES. It occurs to me that will not be near enough. I think the Senator from Kentucky told us the other day that the amount which would be due to his State from the United States would be about three hundred thousand dollars, and he has put on a section that I suppose is intended to cover that amount.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to explain?

Mr. GRIMES. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt that $20,000 will cover every dollar that Kentucky would be entitled to under this amendment; at least I should be willing to restrict it to that amount.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator tell the Senate precisely what the payment is to be for? Of course we want to know that.

Mr. DAVIS. I have explained it about twenty times in the Senate during the last session and the present. There were two regiments in Kentucky that were engaged in two battles; some of them were killed and others wounded and discharged, without being regularly mustered into the service, and I just want to meet their cases.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that the amount in his estimation would not exceed $20,000, and that he is willing to restrict it to that amount.

Mr. DAVIS. I am.

Mr. GRIMES. I therefore propose to reconsider the vote adopting that amendment in order to add the following proviso to it:

Provided, That the amount to be appropriated under this section shall not exceed the sum of $20,000.

Mr. COWAN. I hope the honorable Senator from Iowa will allow my amendment to pass first, and then his will be appropriate to the section moved by the honorable Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to reconsider—

Mr. COWAN. I have a motion pending. I moved to amend the first section in the tenth line by striking out "seven" and inserting "twelve," and that is now the pending motion, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator to have made the motion to amend. The question will be on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that amendment. Nobody seems to be paying any attention to it. The amount now fixed in the bill is $700,000. The Senator from Pennsylvania has told us that the amount that will be necessary to pay the New Jersey troops will be only $40,000; and now, in order to pay that $40,000, he proposes to raise the appropriation up to $1,200,000.

Mr. COWAN. New York has to come in, and that will take three or four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GRIMES. But the Senator from New York told us that his State did not make any claim at all.

Mr. COWAN. Very well; then the money will not be paid. If they will withdraw it, I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think it is wise for us to be making appropriations for the benefit of States that do not prefer any claims against us.

Mr. COWAN. Then I move to except New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to strike out "seven" and insert "twelve" in the tenth line of the first section.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COWAN. I hope the Senate will understand this question. I have only to say that the first section of this bill originally passed the House of Representatives and was brought here for the purpose of paying the troops from Pennsylvania, and the sum of $700,000 was appropriated for that purpose. The Senate have amended it, however, so as to provide for the payment of all the troops that assisted to repel that invasion. If all the troops are to be paid, $700,000 is not enough, because it requires about that sum to pay the troops from Pennsylvania. I have therefore moved to increase the sum from $700,000 to $1,200,000 in order to cover the troops from New Jersey and New York. I understand the amount required to pay the troops from New Jersey to be $40,000. It is intimated here that New York does not desire an appropriation to be made for the payment of her troops, and if that be the case I shall be glad to know it. If that be so, she can be excepted from this arrangement and there will be no difficulty about it. If, however, she is to be paid, the amendment I have offered raising the appropriation from $700,000 to $1,200,000 ought to be adopted, I think; and that is the question which is now before the Senate. If the honorable Senators from New York will say they are not anxious to be included within this arrangement, then we shall make other provisions which will be acceptable to ourselves and to them too if they withdraw any claim to be paid under this bill. I hope, however, without such a disclaimer on their part, that the amendment I offer will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. New York has made no claim for remuneration for these expenditures; I do not think New York would have made a claim; but Pennsylvania having made a claim for reimbursement of the sums paid to her own soldiers defending her own soil, and as New York will be called upon to pay about one fifth of the amount appropriated for Pennsylvania, if Pennsylvania is to be paid I think New York should come in too. I would have preferred, as I said yesterday, that neither State, at this crisis, should have asked the Government to pay it; but Pennsylvania having asked it I suppose New York should share with Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORGAN. I agree entirely with my colleague. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] having been adopted, which I think was correct, I suppose the only question is whether a bill is to be passed to pay these States at all. There can be no doubt that if a bill is to be passed to pay Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York should be included; but I should myself prefer now, at the present price of gold, not asking the Government for it; I should prefer that the States should wait until it was more convenient for the General Government to pay. I should be very glad if the Senator from Pennsylvania would withdraw the bill and let it go by for the session; but still, if he is to press it this amendment is proper.

Mr. COWAN. I have no objection that the State of New York shall be magnanimous in sentiment, but if she be magnanimous in sentiment she ought also to be magnanimous in practice. Her case is not our case. It is not the State of Pennsylvania that is claiming to be reimbursed for moneys expended by her. By an express engagement between the War Department and certain individuals and corporations in the State of Pennsylvania they advanced the money to pay the troops, and now they ask to be paid. It is not the State that asks to be paid. If it were the State, perhaps—

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to ask a question?

Mr. COWAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. If the two Senators from New York, instead of the State, had advanced the money to pay the volunteers that went from that State to defend Pennsylvania, would they have been willing to give up the claim?

Mr. COWAN. That is a fair statement of the case as it actually stands. If it were the State of Pennsylvania who had her own troops and was coming here asking to be reimbursed, in the present state of affairs I should not insist that it should be done, because perhaps she could wait as well as the General Government. But this is not a claim of the State; it is a claim, in the language of the Secretary of War, of patriotic individuals and corporations who came forward in this emergency and agreed to substitute themselves in the place of the United States in order to raise the means to pay men to repel this invasion.

Under these circumstances, I cannot conceive why it is that Pennsylvania is brought forward as attempting to procure for herself some advantage which has not been yielded to other States. Pennsylvania has done no such thing. At the same time I have only to say that claims of the same kind on the part of the States have heretofore been recognized by the Senate. It is not a very great while ago since the honorable Senator from Ohio procured, with very little difficulty, an appropriation to pay for troops called into the service for a special emergency in that State. I think he got an appropriation for some particular regiment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was only a regiment regularly mustered into the service of the United States; but there was some defect in the muster roll. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would embrace what are called the squirrel-hunters of Ohio, and there are about sixty thousand of them. The State of Ohio never presented and never intended to present a claim for those people. Each soldier called out in that invasion of Kentucky was presented by the State with a handsome plate, and I have no doubt the soldiers who responded to that call would rather keep that plate and have it untarnished by receiving pay for those services; but the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would embrace the cases of all the regiments called into active service at that time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How much would it amount to?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would amount to millions. I cannot say how much. They were there some time.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I give notice that when the bill shall be reported to the Senate I shall move to amend my amendment by limiting it to Kentucky alone, and by limiting it further that the amount paid under it shall not exceed $20,000.

Mr. COWAN. In answer to what has been said by the Senator from Ohio, I have only to say that the troops in this case raised to repel the invasion of Pennsylvania by General Lee were regularly mustered into the service of the United States, wore her uniform, bore her arms, carried her flag, and were liable under her Articles of War. There is no technical difficulty then on that score. They have been paid. The accounts have been audited in the proper Department here at Washington. If there be objections to the section offered by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, every gentleman is at liberty to assail that section without attempting to prevent the fair operation of the first section as now amended, of which I am unwilling to complain if the proper sum be paid in order to meet those claims.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that this bill be postponed until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. BROWN. I wish the Senator from Iowa would withdraw his motion for a moment to allow me to offer an amendment as an additional section; one that has been contemplated, and I simply desire to discharge my duty to my State in the premises. Then, if the Senate shall see fit to postpone the bill, my proposition can be considered when it again comes up.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well; put on your amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator withhold his amendment for the present in order that I may offer an additional section?

Mr. COWAN. I have no objection to the amendment being offered, but I do not want it to displace mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, if there be no objection.

Mr. BROWN. I move to add the following as an additional section to the bill:

And he it further enacted, That all sums paid out by any State and all arrearages due to any militia troops employed under the direction of any military commander in suppressing hostilities or defending the State from invasion shall be paid to said State upon rendering proper vouchers therefor to the Treasury Department, and the accounting officers are directed to audit the same and pay it out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

In offering this additional section, I desire to state that in my own State the militia have been serving for two years and doing the work that should properly belong to the United States troops and have received no pay. What pay they have got has been in the shape of State warrants. It is necessary for them to go out again. The whole amount against the Treasury, as I am informed, now exceeds the sum of $4,500,000. I know of no State more deserving to be reimbursed than the State of Missouri, and I cannot see a bill of this sort go by without making an effort to get that reimbursement to my own State. I submit the amendment, and now the Senator from Iowa can make his motion if he desires to do so.

Mr. POMEROY. I am in favor of the amendment moved by the Senator from Missouri, and have precisely such an amendment for my own State. I did not suppose, however, that it was expedient to undertake to present a claim of this kind at this session. I think the old State of Pennsylvania, the State of New York, and the State of New Jersey, whose bonds are worth more in the market to-day than the bonds of the United States, could afford to wait a little while. The people of my own State have had to wait. Notwithstanding one half of our whole voting population was in the United States service, we kept up a militia force last year on the line of the State who were not mustered into the United States service but would come in under the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. They have not been paid except what pay the State has rendered to them; but they should be paid. Their claim is just and fair and comes within the rule in the amendments moved by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Missouri. I did not suppose, however, that claims of this kind would be presented or paid at this session. If the bill should not be postponed till the next session I shall insist upon an amendment to pay them.

Mr. GRIMES. I now renew my motion to postpone this bill until the first Monday of December next. I simply desire to state that there are troops in my State situated precisely as is the case in Kentucky, in Missouri, in Pennsylvania, I take it, in New Jersey, and in all these States. Three regiments were called out in Iowa in order to put down an insurrection or to assist in suppressing the rebellion in Missouri. They have been waiting for two years for their pay. I am content that they shall continue to wait, and so are the people of my State, until some propitious time shall arrive when bills of this kind can be paid.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I shall make no resistance to this motion; but I beg leave to say in a few words that the State of New Jersey has not pressed a claim upon the General Government, and that is proved by the fact that she has filed no claim with the War Department and has asked no adjustment of that claim up to the present hour. But standing here as a representative of that State, when I saw the State of Pennsylvania presenting (as she had a perfect right to do, and as I think is perfectly just) a claim to be paid for the services rendered by her troops for the common defense of all the North, I thought the troops from my State who had been called into that same service by the urgent appeals of the Executive of Pennsylvania and the Secretary of War should be put upon the same footing, and that if a bill was to be passed at the present session of Congress to pay the Pennsylvania troops, the troops of New York and New Jersey should also be provided for in the same measure. It was for that reason that I introduced the substitute for this bill including the State of New York. I do not know that it was wise or discreet on my part to include New York. I am inclined to believe it was very unwise, because I have put a millstone about my neck which is to affect the interest of my State.

But, sir, I am perfectly willing that this whole subject shall be postponed. I am not only willing that it shall be postponed, but as a citizen of New Jersey I would advise the people of that State, in case no other claim is to be presented, to present none. It was in fact a service rendered by our troops in defense of the soil of our own State, a service which had become indispensably necessary in case Lee had overcome Meade on the banks of the Susquehanna, and the battle was trembling in the balance; and so far as I am concerned I would rejoice if this whole thing was abandoned on the part of these three States. The State that I in part represent has but a small interest in this matter and she could afford an offering of it to the General Government and will be happy to do so if other States in the Union take the same course. But if other States are to be paid for the like services and under precisely similar circumstances, I should have been derelict in my duty if I had sat quietly by and suffered a bill to pass for the payment of a certain class of these troops and not attempted to present the claim of my State for the services of her troops under precisely similar circumstances.

Mr. COWAN. It is most extraordinary to me that gentlemen will still persist in supposing that this is a claim on the part of Pennsylvania. It is a claim on the part of certain corporations and individuals of Pennsylvania for money advanced by them upon the faith of the General Government that an appropriation would be made to repay them their money upon the first opportunity. The State has not assumed to pay it. Pennsylvania as a State so far has nothing to do with it in the world; and the people who advanced the money are to-day losing the interest upon the amount advanced. The cases are not at all analogous. I have no disposition to say that New Jersey should not be paid. I have no disposition to say that New York ought not to be paid. I think all these claims should be paid. Whether this is the proper time or not I cannot say; but what I do say is this: they are not in the same category with the persons contemplated to be paid in the first section of this bill. They are individuals; they are persons, not States. It might be well enough to say to a State, "You can wait until the commencement of the next session;" but, as was well suggested by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, when you speak in that language to an individual or to a private corporation then it is another thing, because they may not be able to wait, and particularly they may not be able to wait when they are deriving no profit from the investment of their money in this affair.

But, Mr. President, there is a higher principle involved. If the people are to come forward in emergencies and assist the Government, if the corporations of the country are to do it, that Government must keep faith with them; and when the Executive and the Secretary of War enter into engagements of this kind I think it is the bounden duty of the coördinate branch of this Government to make appropriations to carry out their engagements. If they do not, there is an end of all faith among men. If men find that their Government will not pay them what they agreed to pay, upon whom can they rely? I hope, therefore, the motion to postpone will not be agreed to; but that this bill will be considered and such amendments made to it as will do equal and exact justice to all parties.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not asked compensation for Kentucky in the amendment I have offered. I have not asked a dollar of compensation for any militia of that State. I have stated in a few words at various times the nature of this claim, and I will do it now again in as few and clear words as I can use.

There were two regiments in the State of Kentucky that volunteered for three years. One of them was commanded by Colonel Metcalf. The United States authorities sent an indolent, inefficient officer to muster them in. He required them to meet at a particular point to be mustered in on two occasions. The regiments appeared there, and he was four or five days mustering in about two thirds of Metcalf's regiment. In the mean time it was ordered to Richmond in the State of Kentucky to do duty as a three years' regiment. It was then ordered seventeen miles south of Richmond, where it encountered Kirby Smith's command that invaded Kentucky some two years ago, and fought what was called the disastrous battle of Big Hill. Various men of that regiment were killed and others were wounded. There were about twelve hundred men in the regiment. It returned to the interior of Kentucky. It was enlisted mostly in my county and in Harrison and Nicholas. In a very few days after it returned to that locality Cynthiana was invaded by the rebels—a town about twelve miles from Paris in the direction of Cincinnati. Another disastrous battle occurred there, and a part of this regiment was in that second battle. Some of them were killed and some were wounded, and a good many were taken prisoners in both battles.

Before I left my home there was a man came into my office who had lost his right arm in the battle of Cynthiana, and who had been refused all pay and emolument as a soldier. I had his application and various other applications of men in that condition to have the laws remedied so as to pay them for the time they were in the service, and to allow the widows of those who were killed any bounty to which they would have been entitled, if any, had they been regularly mustered in, and to give pensions to those who were disabled by wounds.

That is the whole case; and if there is a claim of higher justice than that upon the Treasury of the United States I have never seen it presented. If the Government is not willing or not able to pay a claim of that kind it is time that the Government should abdicate and that the war should cease.

Mr. SHERMAN. The case made by the Senator from Kentucky is very similar to the case acted upon by the Senate the other day in which the Senate passed a bill paying a regiment of Ohio troops who were not mustered into service by the fault of their own officers; and I would not hesitate a moment to vote for a bill to provide for that particular case. I ask the Senator whether he ought not to introduce a bill covering that particular case. In the case of the Ohio regiment of which I have spoken, a special bill was introduced and passed and is now a law; and it is a case very similar to the one referred to by the Senator from Kentucky. In such a case as that, where the regiment was not mustered in through the fault of the mustering officer and was ordered into service without mustering and soldiers were killed and wounded, they ought certainly to be provided for.

Mr. DAVIS. With the permission of the Senator I wish to state a fact. At the last session I made repeated applications to the Senate to have this case provided for, both singly and in connection with other bills, and gentlemen, from an indisposition to hear the facts of cases that are presented to the Senate and consequently from not understanding them, steadily and uniformly voted it down. I have made four or five attempts at the present session to attach this to military bills; I have made this explanation three or four times, and invariably the claim has been inflexibly refused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only say to the Senator from Kentucky that if he will introduce a bill of that kind he shall have my vote, because I consider it just claim. That is all I can promise.

Mr. DAVIS. I did at the last session introduce a bill of that kind, and I have offered it as an amendment to various measures. It cannot prejudice the bill now under consideration. It is a claim of the highest and most imperative justice. These men have now been waiting disabled and mutilated more than two years; some were killed and their widows and orphans are not receiving the bounty to which their patriotism and their having fallen in defense of their country entitled them. I simply ask for this small amount of justice to as meritorious a class of people as have ever presented themselves to Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before this question passes off I desire to state that it has been in the contemplation of my colleague and myself during this session to provide for a claim which is certainly as just as the claim of Pennsylvania, Kentucky, or any other State in the Union. For the last two years the militia of my State have been called out by the department commander, once by General Schofield and once by General Curtis; that is, an application was made to Governor Gamble and the militia force was called out and put under the department commander in that State; and they have been used during the summer and fall months in aiding the troops of the United States in suppressing the rebellion in that State and in driving back the invasion that annually comes upon us from Arkansas. For the last two years we have had those troops in the service and we have expended $4,500,000; that is, we have issued bonds bearing interest payable by the treasurer of our State, and paid those troops. Not one dollar has been paid to them by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the condition of our State is such that we cannot very well bear a burden of this character. It is well known that we are very largely in debt, nearly $30,000,000, expended for railroad purposes heretofore, and that the interest upon our bonds has not been paid. We are unable to pay it, and have been unable since this rebellion commenced. In addition to that, from one fourth to one third of the property in my State has been destroyed. I see by a dispatch from St. Louis that in all probability the State will again be invaded. We are expecting an invasion from the southwest by the forces under General Price again. I have no question in my own mind but that the State of Missouri will be again invaded by a large force during this summer. Everything points to it. The State is now full of guerrillas who have returned from Price's army; and the dispatches tell us that General Steele will, in the course of a very short time, be almost surrounded in Little Rock and will be held there while General Price will invade my State from the southwest. I have no doubt of it at all.

What is the result of that? Our people have been called out again by General Rosecrans. He has called on the Governor to order out from one to two hundred men in each county of the State. There is no authority to pay those troops by the Federal Government, and we shall be compelled again to provide from the State treasury during this summer for the payment of these men. What effect has that on the people of Missouri? We have been compelled to pass a commutation tax, a poll tax of thirty dollars and a tax of one per cent on the entire property of the people of the State in order to pay the militia. Sir, it is an outrage on our people. We shall be compelled to do it again this year. The order has already been made and the troops called into the service; and how the people of our State are to pay those troops I cannot tell. It looks to me in our present condition as an utter impossibility.

Sir, this Congress ought not to adjourn without making some provision for the militia that will be called into the service in Missouri during this summer. We are unable to do it; and if our people are called out again we shall make no crop in the State. I saw the dispatch yesterday morning from St. Louis, in which it was stated that General Rosecrans had repeated the order made by Schofield and Curtis heretofore, and the people have again been called out, and if paid at all they will have to be paid from the State treasury. The people of the State cannot stand it. For two years they have been paying this poll tax of thirty dollars and a special tax of one per cent on land and personal property in the State over and above the taxes heretofore paid in order to raise a fund to pay off these bonds heretofore issued for the militia.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say. My colleague and myself have not heretofore been urgent about these expenditures. We knew the condition of the Federal Treasury, and we thought we would bear them; but I now give notice that if claims of this sort are to be urged we must be reimbursed for those expenditures. I intended to present a bill at the next session of Congress to reimburse the State for the amount already expended; I did not intend to urge it at this session; but if the militia force of my State is to be called out again this summer, as ordered by General Rosecrans, this Congress ought to make some arrangements to pay that force.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit to the Senate that a motion to postpone to a day certain is analogous to a motion to take up, and is restricted in debate.

Mr. GRIMES. I have only one word to say. I suppose there is not any question but that there are just claims from one half of the loyal States against the Government. Certainly the case stated by the Senator from Missouri is one of the strongest and most just that can possibly be conceived of. But what is the proposition now before us? It is to actually tax the people of Missouri, oppressed as they are with taxation, and overrun as they are with guerrillas and with hostile forces, to pay the State of Pennsylvania—

Mr. COWAN. Not the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRIMES. I will show whether it is the State of Pennsylvania or not. The people of Missouri are to be taxed to pay what the State of Pennsylvania ought to pay themselves, if it is not to Pennsylvania, and what other States have paid in place of leaving to their own citizens to pay under precisely similar circumstances. I say it is exceedingly unjust to levy a tax on the people of the State of Missouri or the property of the State of Missouri that has been overrun for three years, that has been oppressed with a special tax of one per cent on property, and a tax of thirty dollars per capita, to pay the State of Pennsylvania for her expenses in repelling a hostile invasion upon her soil made within the last twelve months.

How does this case in Pennsylvania differ from these other cases? In this only: that instead of the Governor or the State authorities going to the banks or going to the citizens and securing supplies and means, as they were necessary in order to repel this incursion, the citizens themselves came to the rescue and advanced the money. And now the Senator says that because the State did not settle these claims and present the claim as a State claim against the Federal Government, therefore this is a private claim, and stands altogether on a different basis from the claims of other States. If it be so it does not stand upon a basis as creditable to the State authorities of Pennsylvania as the claims from other States do, it seems to me. It was the business of the State authorities of Pennsylvania to settle with her citizens for the money they advanced and the property that they used in repelling that invasion, and to present their claim precisely as other States have presented their claims against the Federal Government as a State claim; and then they would have all stood upon the same basis.

What I want is that all these States shall stand upon an equal footing; that there shall be, and I trust we shall have time, and that we will do it at the commencement of the next session, a complete adjustment of all these claims, and every State receive exactly what it is entitled to. It is for that reason, in order to give the Senate time to mature this bill, that I have moved to postpone it until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am in favor myself of letting each proposition stand upon its own merits. If the State of Pennsylvania or the people of Pennsylvania should be reimbursed the expenses connected with the raid last year in the southern part of that State, I do not think it ought to be embarrassed by the claims of other States. If it be specially meritorious, it ought not to be made to carry claims that are not so clear. If it be not meritorious, it ought to fall on its own demerit. I understand from the course of the debate that the accounts have been adjusted by the proper Department, the exact amount found due, and that the money is coming rather to individuals than to the State. Where is the propriety of burdening this claim, which every Senator must acknowledge to be right and fair, with the claims of other States which have yet to be investigated? This bill, as I understand, came from the House of Representatives providing alone for the State of Pennsylvania. Am I wrong in that?

Mr. TEN EYCK. The second section of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated $15,000,000 to pay the claims of other States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I speak principally of the first section of the bill.

Mr. COWAN. You are right about that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That has been examined by the proper committee. Now, it is proposed to tack on to that claims that have not been so examined, claims that have neither been examined by the proper Department nor by the proper committee of this body. It seems to me this is not right. I will vote for the claim of the State of Pennsylvania alone and against the proposition of the Senator from Iowa; because if the claim of the State of Pennsylvania is right it ought to be paid.

Mr. HICKS. It appears to me that the circumstances of this case really make a strong point in favor of this claim. It is a claim set up by individuals, not by the State of Pennsylvania. The money has been furnished by private individuals. For what purpose? To meet an emergency where neither the State authorities nor private citizens had twenty-four hours in which to do it. The peculiarity of this claim, as very well set forth by the honorable Senator from Indiana, it seems to me, should strike the mind of every Senator. These individuals magnanimously came forward and offered their funds to enable Governor Curtin, the worthy, able, and talented Executive of Pennsylvania, and who I know was as active as the Governor of any other State in doing all in his power to repel that invasion by the southern army, to meet that emergency. As the gentleman from Indiana very properly said, I am for letting this claim stand upon its own merits entirely disconnected from any other claims. I learn from a member of the committee, and I have no doubt that it is true, this claim has been properly adjusted, the items are all shown, and therefore the committee have reported in favor of it. Let all other States, New Jersey, New York, Missouri, and the rest present their claims, and when they are properly adjusted and ascertained they ought to be paid also; but I do not think they should be attached to this bill.

Sir, if we stop to squabble over matters of this sort during the fury of this rebellion and say we will not pay individuals who have come forward and patriotically offered not only their personal services but their money to beat back the foe, who was not only pressing his way into Pennsylvania, but would have gone to New Jersey and New York, and how far we cannot tell if he had not been driven back, how can we expect persons hereafter to come forward, if a similar emergency should again unfortunately arise, with the same alacrity that they did on that occasion? I think every encouragement should be held out to each loyal State in this Union for the raising of all the troops possible at the shortest notice and give every facility that can be given to the Government to meet such contingencies.

I hope that this claim may be considered upon its own merits, and that each of the claims of the other States will be considered upon its individual merits. I think that all of these claims ought to be paid at the proper time. It so happens that Pennsylvania has presented hers before the other States. In my opinion, two or three are enough to mount a horse, but if you cover him with men from head to croup you break him down. So it is in regard to the bill presented by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. It is an honest, fair, and legitimate claim, in my judgment, and therefore it ought to be paid. Then let New Jersey bring in her claim; let New York bring in hers, and all the States that have furnished troops and advanced money and contributed all in their power to the breaking down of this unholy rebellion. I would not withhold a dollar that was properly due to any of these States, and I hope that in the end they will all be paid.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Before the question is put on the motion to postpone, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer it in compliance with the resolutions of the Legislature of my State, and I trust it will be received.

Mr. COWAN. I do not understand what the nature of it is. Is it an amendment to this bill?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which was in section one, line ten, after the word "States" to insert:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

Mr. COWAN. I object. It is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be received at the present time. The question is on the motion to postpone.

Mr. POMEROY. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COWAN. I have just a word to say before the vote is taken. We have presented here a claim on the part of the citizens of Pennsylvania and corporations of that State for money laid out and expended in defense of the Government and upon the express agreement on the part of the Executive of this nation that payment should be made. I have only to say again to the Senate that if the faith of the Government is to be kept in that way with individuals, not with States but with individuals, then the Government must take the consequences, and they will have to take the consequences in Pennsylvania at the coming election. What has this claim got to do with a thousand other claims of other gentlemen? I have not said a word against the justice of their claims; why, then, should they desire like leeches to fasten themselves upon this bill? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] had up a few days ago a bill for the purpose of paying his troops. I agreed to it and voted for it. I did not attempt to saddle it with this claim at that time. Therefore I desire this motion to postpone to be voted down and this bill to be considered here as it came into the Senate, and if there are other claims let them be provided for separately so that each may stand upon its own bottom.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall vote in favor of the postponement for a reason which has not yet been given, particularly as concerns the amount claimed by the parties in Pennsylvania. I understand this is not a claim made by the State; that these advances were made by individual citizens or corporations in the State of Pennsylvania, and were made upon the faith of an express promise on the part of the Executive Government that they should be refunded. In the first place, so far as that promise is concerned, the Executive Government should have sent a message to the Congress of the United States requiring an appropriation to meet those demands. I am not aware that any such message has been sent.

Mr. COWAN. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I will read a communication addressed by the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in the other House, which is indorsed by the President:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, January 4, 1864.

SIR: The Department has this day received returns of the amount required for the payment of the militia called out for the defense of the State of Pennsylvania on the 26th of June, 1863, against the invasion by the rebel forces under the command of General Lee. There being no appropriation out of which these payments could be made at the time they were required, patriotic citizens of Philadelphia advanced the money, and it is proper that they should be reimbursed without delay. I would respectfully recommend, therefore, that an immediate appropriation for that purpose be made. A copy of the letter of the Second Auditor of the Treasury is herewith communicated, showing the amount of claims audited by him to be $671,476 43 up to date. It is supposed that $700,000 will cover the amount of these claims.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

This letter is indorsed by the President, as follows:

I fully indorse the within statement and recommendation, and shall be glad if Congress see fit to act promptly in the case.
A. LINCOLN.

February 11, 1864.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not aware that there was any such letter. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the bill will not be postponed, but that we shall take the bill as applied to this particular case and act upon it and appropriate $700,000, which is the amount recommended in the letter of the Secretary of War to meet this equitable engagement of the Government. Although there was no law which authorized expressly the promise of the money, still it is an equitable engagement growing out of the necessities of the case which I think ought to be met by the Government. I hope we shall not postpone the bill.

Mr. McDUGALL. I trust that the sense of justice of the Senate will prevent any delay as to this particular measure. The peculiarity of the case is well understood by the Senate. In a day, at an instant, we may say, it was necessary to place means for meeting the movement of a large army of the enemy through Maryland into Pennsylvania. These moneys are really due to private citizens who are waiting now for their compensation. They came forward voluntarily to assist the Government and the State of Pennsylvania by furnishing immediate aid. The accounts have been audited. There has been no case like this in the history of the war, and I see no reason why the matter should be postponed. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been seeking the floor to bring up this bill for a long period of time, but it has been postponed for other business by the month. The Senator from Pennsylvania has yielded to other questions until we are now coming to the latter part of the session, and if the bill is to be acted upon at all it should be acted upon now. This money should be paid. It is not as if the State of Pennsylvania had taken this responsibility on the instant herself by legislative authority, but they took the responsibility from the necessity of the moment. There is no question as to the justice of the claim. What justice, then, is there in delay? I think it is due to the Senator himself representing Pennsylvania who has brought forward this measure, he having been delayed so long by the consideration of other business, to take up the matter and dispose of it now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—Yeas 6, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Grimes, Harris, Howe, Pomero, Sumner, and Trumbull—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doollittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Salisbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wiley—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Colman, Comess, Dixon, Fessenden, Harding, Hartan, Howard, Morrill, Nesmith, Riddle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson, and Wright—16.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I have an amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is another amendment under consideration upon which the yeas and nays have been called—the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$1,200,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought the understanding was that it was to be confined to the original purpose of the bill.

Mr. COWAN. Not as the bill is now amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw that amendment, and allow the question to be tested in the Senate whether anything else is to be put on this bill providing for the claims of these men in Pennsylvania before the amount shall be fixed.

Mr. COWAN. I thought the bill was in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COWAN. Then, with the consent of the Senate, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, that amendment will be withdrawn. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all sums paid out by any State and all arrears due to any militia troops employed under the direction of any military commander or department commander in suppressing hostilities or defending the State from invasion shall be paid to said State upon rendering proper vouchers therefor to the Treasury Department; and the accounting officers are directed to audit the same and pay them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now offer the amendment

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1864.

NEW SERIES.....No. 216.

that I attempted to present a few moments since, to insert after the word "States," in the tenth line, these words:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not see why the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island should not be made general. It is a provision to pay the officers and men from the State of Rhode Island for the period between the time of their enlistment and muster into the service of the United States. They are just as much entitled to pay in the State of Illinois as in the State of Rhode Island under these circumstances.

Mr. COWAN. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I think it is the intention of the Senate when this bill comes into the Senate to vote down all these amendments that have been made and stand upon the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN. That is very kind of the Senator, to cut everybody else out but himself.

Mr. COWAN. That is my notion of it at present; and then if other States have claims they will take measures to bring them forward the same as this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it will do no harm I should like to have my State inserted, because I know there are claims of that character there. I move to insert the words "and Illinois" after the words "Rhode Island" in the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. With the consent of the Senator from Illinois, I will insert "and Kansas." Kansas is in the same situation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it would be better to make it general if it is to be adopted at all. Of course I shall not object to Kansas being inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. HOWE. How will the clause read then? The Secretary read it, as follows:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island, Illinois, and Kansas volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to know if those are all the States that are to come in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it ought to be general; but the Senate having adopted it as peculiar to the State of Rhode Island I moved to include my State also. I know there are cases of that character in the State of Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to modify the amendment that was adopted on my motion, by striking out in the second line the words "other troops from any other State" and inserting "troops of the State of Kentucky heretofore received or that may hereafter be;" so that it will read:

And be it further enacted, That any troops of the State of Kentucky heretofore received, or that may hereafter be received into and actually serving in the Army of the United States, whether regularly mustered in or not, and who have not been otherwise provided for, shall receive the same pay and all other emoluments that they would be entitled to if they had been regularly mustered into such service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that can only be done in this stage of the proceeding by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. SHERMAN. When the bill shall be reported to the Senate I shall call for the reading of the amendments and have them acted upon seriatim.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be on concurring in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I desire to have those amendments read, so that we may see what has been adopted.

Mr. COWAN. And the question on concurrence taken on them seriatim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued. The question is on concurring in the amendment in section one, line ten, after the word "States" to insert:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island, Illinois, and Kansas volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

Mr. COWAN. Now, Mr. President, I wish simply to say that if the amendments which have been made to the first section are not concurred in by the Senate it will leave the first section precisely as it was reported from the Committee on Finance; it will provide alone for the claim of the State of Pennsylvania, and it will leave other propositions for the payment of troops of other States to be tested as separate sections. That I think is perfectly fair, and that I desire to be done. The bill as reported from the Committee on Finance provides simply for the payment of the institutions and individuals who advanced the money to pay the Pennsylvania soldiers. If other propositions are to be offered let them be offered as distinct and separate sections, and let the Senate vote upon them. For my own part, I believe that a great many of them should be paid; indeed, I believe I would vote for the payment of all of them so far as I have heard them. But I desire the first section to be disembarassed from the amendments which have been made to it and leave it to stand as it was originally reported. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. WILLEY. If we are to go on including State after State in this bill, I do not see why West Virginia should be overslaughed. But, sir, I do not intend to move that West Virginia shall be included. I do not understand the claimants under this bill as it came from the House of Representatives to stand on the same platform that the States do in their State capacity. I understand that here are individual citizens of the United States making application for relief for money paid out of their own pockets in the exigencies of the country to defend the nation against invasion. It is not an application upon the part of a State in its capacity as a State, but upon the part of individuals who in the exigencies of the country voluntarily came forward to the relief of the Government and afforded that justice which the Government at that time could not afford and had it not in its power to provide for. However much I may desire to have the citizens of my State who have rendered services under a similar condition provided for, I am not willing, under the sense of justice which I think ought to actuate the Senate of the United States, to burden the bill and kill it under circumstances like those under which the bill is presented.

Here is an application, as I understand it, by citizens who have paid money out of their own pockets in a crisis in the affairs of this nation. The head of the proper Department has recommended it as just and proper. It has been audited, stated, adjusted, fixed in the amount; and now, at this time, to kill a bill of this character by crushing it to death by amendments of this kind seems to me to be in the face of the plainest justice that could be addressed at least to myself as a Senator of the United States. Under this view of the case, however much I should be pleased to bring the citizens of my State within the operation of this bill, I shall vote against all these amendments and let the original bill stand on its naked merits, and I think that is where it ought to stand.

Mr. TEN EYCK. It is not for me to oppose the payment of a just claim of the State of Pennsylvania; but I simply rise for the purpose of stating what I understand to be the true state of the case in answer to the generous statement of the Senator from West Virginia.

My residence is not very remote from the city of Philadelphia, and I happen to have some little knowledge of the mode in which this claim originated. When it came to be known that General Lee with his army had left his encampment in Virginia and was moving North, passing up through the Cumberland valley, and had reached Maryland, and was about striking the borders of Pennsylvania, the citizens of Philadelphia, with all the other citizens of the State, naturally became greatly alarmed and excited, and with patriotic feelings not only raised men, but raised money, and they fitted out what was called the Corn Exchange regiment, and several others through the agency of associations in the city of Philadelphia. I have not understood that that was done in consequence of any arrangement with the General Government or any plan adopted by the Government. It was a spontaneous action on their part in aid of their own State and for the protection of their own city, its capital, its wealth, its enterprise, its industry, and everything else. I grant you there is a claim on the part of those citizens, either upon the General Government immediately or the State government immediately; but I cannot for the life of me see any distinction in equity between the claim of a State which had paid the expense of fitting out troops to send them to the protection of Pennsylvania and the claim of private citizens who fitted out regiments and sent them in pursuance of the call of the Governor of Pennsylvania, for it was done in pursuance of his most urgent call. In fact, he was in Philadelphia at the time, and I think made an address and encouraged a spontaneous enlistment there.

Those men ought to be paid; they have a meritorious claim; but I think the other States which sent troops to repel this movement, and which were engaged in the very same identical service, have the same meritorious claim, whether the money came out of the treasury of the State or whether it came out of the pockets of individuals, especially as I have not yet seen that there was any contract entered into between private individuals or associations and the General Government before they undertook these responsibilities. It was a spontaneous outburst of the people for their own protection and for the safety of their own firesides and their own business that these regiments were hastily organized and sent forward.

I cannot see why, in the performance of a duty as sacred and patriotic as this was, to repel this northern invasion, the troops of Pennsylvania or the citizens of Pennsylvania or the State of Pennsylvania, which ought to have refunded long ago to these citizens the amounts they advanced, have any equitable claim to be paid first before the citizens of other States, if the claims are to be paid at all at this time under the existing state of facts and the pressure under which the Government is laboring. So far as regards the adjustment of the claim, I see no real difference in the case between these different claimants; for although the claim of Pennsylvania has been adjusted, still, in the amendment that I offered yesterday, I proposed that these other claimants should be paid when their accounts were adjusted; and even if those words were not inserted in the amendment that would be the natural consequence, because the Government would not pay them until their claims were ascertained, settled, and adjusted.

I do not insist upon the bill passing at this time; but if it is to be passed, I want it to provide for the payment of the States, associations, or individuals who have advanced money for this one service, the repelling of the army of General Lee from the State of Pennsylvania. The States of New Jersey, New York, and the more eastern States were all interested in that service to almost as great an extent as the State of Pennsylvania, except in this, that their soil was not trampled upon by the foot of the invader; it was not seamed and scarred by the engines of war. I think they stand upon the same identical footing and ought to be paid in the same way; and I must express my regret that the Senator from Pennsylvania is disposed to insist upon the payment of his own troops under these circumstances and to ask the Senate to give other troops who rendered the same service under the same appeal the go-by, or to postpone them to another day. Let them all stand together, or let them all fall together.

Mr. COWAN. I have said repeatedly that I am in favor of the payment of all these troops in the proper way and proper manner; but I am admonished by gentlemen who are friendly to the passage of the bill which provides expressly for the claim I have in charge, that I ought not to allow it to be loaded with these amendments which will eventually end in the defeat of the whole. What right, I would ask, has the honorable Senator from New Jersey, who does not desire the passage of the bill now, to incumber my bill which I do desire to have passed now with an amendment providing for his State? There is nothing to prevent him from bringing in a bill to reimburse his State at the next session if he thinks the finances of the country are not in such a condition as will enable it to pay that State or any other State now. I am only desirous of taking care of that which is committed to my charge. God knows I do not want to prevent the payment of the claim of anybody else; but I do not want mine to be swallowed up in this vortex of numberless cases which seem to be clustering around this bill in order to attach themselves to it. I hope, therefore, that my proposition will be kept clear and distinct, and let the others stand upon their own merits as I have no doubt, if they have merit, they will stand.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offered this amendment in compliance with a resolution of the Legislature of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and I think it is more just than the claim which the Senator from Pennsylvania advocates. Rhode Island has endeavored to find out the officers and men who have these claims against the Government; but there are a large number of these officers and men now in the service who are yet unpaid and who cannot be paid by any law now upon our statute-book. There were several regiments in the early part of this contest that were organized a month or two months before they were mustered into the service of the United States; but they were constantly under the orders of the United States authorities and submitted to their regulations in every respect. Many of those men and many of those officers have not yet been paid on account of the regulations of the Department.

This is a claim in behalf of the soldiers and of the officers in part, and also in behalf of the amount which the State has advanced, which, so far as my State is concerned, is very small; but it is a just claim in which every State has an interest. If this is not deemed sufficient, the amendment should provide for the officers and men of all States that stand in the same relation. I trust the amendment will be adopted. It is a just one, it is a proper one, and appropriate to this bill. The State of Pennsylvania has no right to demand the exclusive time and attention of the Senate on a bill of this kind when other States have as good claims, and especially when they stand up here in defense of the soldiers and officers who are serving the country. I do not believe in that sort of doctrine.

Mr. HICKS. I think there is but very little difference between Senators here in regard to the principle involved in the consideration of this subject. It is the misfortune, perhaps, of the States which are equally entitled to compensation with Pennsylvania that they have not as yet prepared their claims properly. I understand some of them have been. Whether they have been brought to the notice of the Senate or not I am not prepared to say. I have no other interest in this matter than that common interest which belongs to all of us to see justice done. I believe all of these claims ought to be paid, and as each State presents its claim I shall vote cheerfully every dollar that is due, not only to a State government, but to individuals and officers and soldiers.

I am particularly anxious upon this subject for the reason that we may again, and how soon we cannot tell, be driven to the same necessity of raising men as they were in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey and New York; for I do not think there is a great deal of difference between the four States, as I have no doubt that General Lee with his forces would have gone into those States if he had not been repulsed and driven back at Gettysburg.

As I before remarked, I am exceedingly anxious that this claim should be paid. This bill has been passed by the House of Representatives; it has been submitted to a committee here for examination and favorably reported upon; and I am anxious that it should stand upon its own merits, as should the claim of each individual State. I know the hurried manner in which these troops were called forth, arising from the necessity of raising a force sufficient to repel the madmen who were coming with a hundred thousand men into Maryland and Pennsylvania to destroy property and life. Suppose a like emergency were to happen next week or next month, and you refuse to meet these fair and legitimate demands upon the Government, could you expect the people to turn out with the same alacrity that they did on that occasion? Shall we refuse to pay anything toward the raising and subsisting of those troops? Not only has the Secretary of War, who I dare say understands this whole subject, advised this payment, but it is also indorsed by the President of the United States. If Pennsylvania is to be shut down upon in this way what will become of other States in the event of a repetition of this invasion?

I think it would be better to strike out of this bill all the amendments that have been made to it and pay Pennsylvania her fair claim, as I consider it. I take it for granted that it is a fair claim, though I have never examined the papers, because it comes from a committee of this body. A fair claim has been presented by Pennsylvania. Let each State hereafter present its claim and I am sure the Senate will pass all those claims, as I think they ought now to pass this bill for Pennsylvania.

Mr. COWAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside informally to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (No. 315) in relation to the sale of reservations of the public lands; and

A joint resolution (No. 67) for the relief of Thomas J. Galbraith.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department.

The message also returned to the Senate, agreeably to its request, the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out of the national forces, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had caused the error in the engrossment of its amendments to the bill of the Senate (No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes, to be corrected, and returned the bill and amendments to the Senate.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSON. With the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I desire to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 154) to provide for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its first amendment to the bill.

That the Senate agree to all the amendments of the House after the said first amendment, except the thirty-first amendment.

That the Senate agree to the thirty-first amendment of the House with the following amendment, to wit: strike out all after the word "department" in line eighteen, down to and including the word "general" in line twenty-three of said amendment; and also strike out all after the word "that" in line thirty-six, down to and including the word "department" in line thirty-eight of the said amendment; and the House agree to the said thirty-first amendment as amended.

HENRY WILSON,

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

L. W. POWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

ELIJAH WARD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have action on the report at once.

The report was concurred in.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer a resolution which I will ask to have printed, and I will call it up when the Senator from Rhode Island calls up the bill in regard to the Congressional Globe. I ask that the resolution be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it is the intention of the Senate to dispose of the question of the Congressional Globe at this session we have but very little time to lose about it. I was aware that there was some objection to the bill as it was offered, and I have not pressed it for that reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island or any member of the Senate will object to my resolution as a substitute for the proposition before the Senate in regard to the Globe.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to have the resolution read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed that these proceedings were by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are by unanimous consent, and will not displace the order of the day.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Printing be directed to ascertain the actual cost of reporting the proceedings of Congress, and of the publication of the reports as they now appear in the Daily and Congressional Globe. Also, what would be the cost of the publication of reports of the congressional debates if published under the direction of the Superintendent of Public Printing. Also, what arrangements, if any, could be made with the heirs of the late John C. Rives for the purchase of the materials and the purchase or rent of the buildings used in the publication of the Congressional Globe. Also, what sum, if any, ought in equity to be allowed to said heirs for the publication of the Globe during the present session and until Congress shall determine whether to extend or change the publication of the Globe. Also, that the Superintendent of Public Printing communicate this information to the Senate at its next session, with any other facts on the reporting and publication of congressional debates that he can obtain.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate will perceive that this resolution, which is very proper, looks to the next session entirely, and of course it will be impossible for the information to be furnished in time to act upon the bill that is now before the Senate. I have received communications, written and verbal, from the publishers of the Globe, in which they state that unless the bill now before Congress, or something like it, passes, they will not be able to continue the publication for another session. I desire, therefore, to take the sense of the Senate upon the question whether the Senate is disposed to pass the bill that has been reported, or to amend it by providing for a smaller compensation, or whether they will pass this resolution and postpone the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the resolution is not before the Senate to be considered. It has been ordered to be printed, and was read merely for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to call up the resolution until the Senator is ready and desires to call up that bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. In order to test the sense of the Senate I will move—

Mr. COWAN. I hope the Senator will not make his motion now. I yielded merely for a moment for a message from the House and a report of a committee of conference, and I supposed that we should return at once to the regular order of the day.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I give notice that at the earliest moment I shall move to take up the bill in regard to the Congressional Globe.

EXPENSES OF PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 117) to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses in calling out the militia of said State during the recent invasion.

Mr. COWAN. I believe the pending question is on concurring in one of the several amendments which have been adopted to the first section of the bill. I hope it will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment in line ten of the first section, after the word "States" to insert:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island, Illinois, and Kansas volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

Mr. SPRAGUE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COWAN. I wish to state at this time that I understand my colleague [Mr. BUCKALEW] is detained in his room by sickness to-day. That will account for his absence.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Davis, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Richardson, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Cowan, Doolittle, Foot, Hale, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Welles—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Howard, Morrill, Ramsey, Riddle, Ten Eyck, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggested when the bill was in Committee of the Whole that a vote might be taken in the Senate on concurring in one of these amendments to test the question whether all these things were to be put on this bill and load it down or not. I look upon the vote just taken as a test vote on that question. I voted against the postponement of the bill before when we were in committee; but I cannot now vote for it with all these indefinite claims put upon it. As I understand by these amendments we will have to pay four or five million dollars in Ohio, four or five million in Missouri, and how many million in Rhode Island and elsewhere I do not know. It is so indefinite and so large in its amount that I think it would be very dangerous legislation at this time when we cannot go into an examination and consideration of the subject. I am opposed to this practice of log-rolling everything together, on principle. I must therefore say that I am now prepared to vote for the postponement of this measure until the next session of Congress, and I will make that motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. You had better move to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then will it go over to the next session?

Mr. COWAN. If it is sent to a committee, it should be to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is immaterial to me, if the effect of the motion will be to send the matter over to the next session. I will move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Finance, and then it will go over to the next session as a matter of course.

Mr. BROWN. I ask, if it is to be recommitted, that it be recommitted with the amendments which have been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Of course the amendments will go with the bill.

Mr. BROWN. But I am not in favor of recommitting it. I am for passing it now with the amendments that have been made to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I stand precisely where the Senator from Wisconsin does. I cannot vote for a bill appropriating at this time such a sum of money, although the presumption may be that many of these claims are right. We do not know that they are right, and we ought not to appropriate large sums of money without knowing that. It is impossible for the bill to pass burdened with such amendments. The fact that Pennsylvania was the seat of this invasion is not a circumstance against her, but is a circumstance in her favor. She has not only incurred expenses, but she has borne the disasters that necessarily attend such a large military movement. I appeal to some Senator who voted for the amendment that has just been concurred in to move a reconsideration in order that we may do what is right in this matter. It is not right to bury a bill in this way when everybody admits that it is proper and just.

Mr. DAVIS. I am glad the Senator has made a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot. I voted the other way.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, in order that the claim of Pennsylvania may be considered exclusively and be acted upon by itself. I am willing to forego the little amendment that I offered with a view to have the single question upon the claim of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am willing to withdraw that motion if on this motion to reconsider we can have a test vote of the Senate on the question. With the leave of the Senator from Kentucky, however, I will suggest that by unanimous consent the vote concurring in the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island be reconsidered, and then we can take the vote again directly on the question whether we will concur in the amendment with the understanding that it is to be a test vote.

Mr. BROWN. I object to that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then let us take it on the question of reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say a word upon that question if I can get the attention of the Senate, and especially of the Senator from Wisconsin.

This is a House bill. The first section provides for the payment of certain individuals and institutions of the State of Pennsylvania to pay the volunteers that were raised in that State to repel the invasion of the rebels into the State. The second section of the bill was adopted to pay similar claims of other States. That section is in these words:

That to defray the expenses incurred in raising, equipping, transporting, and paying the minute-men, militia, and volunteers called out and in actual service of the United States, whether regularly mustered in or not, in repelling rebel raids and invasions of the States of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and the other loyal States and Territories, the sum of $15,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said expenses to be settled upon proper vouchers to be filed in the proper offices in the Treasury, and passed upon by the Second Auditor.

When the bill came into the Senate the second section of the bill was stricken out on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, thus excluding every State except Pennsylvania. How is it that Pennsylvania has become so far ahead of every other State that every other State must be neglected in the Senate upon a House bill providing for other States? What especial and peculiar merit is there in these Pennsylvania claims over and above the claims from Missouri? If this was a bill to pay Pennsylvania and had originally passed the House of Representatives in that shape, and no other State had been connected with it, I would be in favor of letting it pass without adding any amendment to it; but let it be remembered that the section providing for other States has been stricken out of the bill by the Senate; and now the Senator from Pennsylvania says, "Do not put any amendment upon this bill that will prevent Pennsylvania from being paid."

Mr. COWAN. I will ask the Senator from Missouri why he did not prevent the second section from being stricken out. It is most extraordinary that gentlemen, after having voted to strike out the second section, will come in with little amendments to be hitched on to the first section.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can state to the Senator that for the last three weeks I have been on a bed of sickness, and was not here when the section was stricken out. I hope that will be a sufficient answer. I was not able to be here, or else it never would have been stricken out entirely with my consent. I would have amended it as my colleague has amended it. I think that is proper. I would make no appropriation of $15,000,000.

The Senator from Wisconsin is very much mistaken when he supposes there is a large appropriation in this bill. It does not now appropriate, with all the amendments that have been made to it, one third the amount it appropriated as it originally came to us from the House of Representatives. Why, sir, what is the amendment that has been adopted by the Senate to the first section of this bill? Let us recur to it and see what it is. I dare say one or two hundred thousand dollars will pay every dollar that is contained in the amendment adopted to the first section. If Senators will examine it they will see that this amendment has been adopted in line ten:

And for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island, Illinois, and Kansas volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the service of the United States.

Why, sir, that was but for a very short time, as I understand, in Rhode Island, and in the other two States mentioned no men were ever raised to repel the invasion of Pennsylvania. If gentlemen have inserted the amendment there in language that will exclude their troops it is none of my business, and other Senators ought not to object to it. What is the first section?

That to reimburse the institutions and individuals who advanced the money to pay the Pennsylvania soldiers who were called out by the proclamation of the President of the United States and the Governor of Pennsylvania to repel the invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania by the rebel forces under General Lee in the summer of 1863, and who were in actual service of the United States—and for the pay of officers and men of the Rhode Island, Illinois, and Kansas volunteers from the date of commission and enrollment to the date of muster into the United States service.

And then comes in the amendment—

Why, Mr. President, there were no troops called out in Kansas and Illinois to repel invasion in Pennsylvania. There were some, I understand, called out in Rhode Island; but this provision only provides for their payment from the date of their muster into the State service to their muster into the United States service. The Senator from Rhode Island can tell how long that was; I really do not know. It certainly was but a very short time, and it will only apply to the Rhode Island troops.

I think it is very unjust, indeed, to strike out this second section, and then claim that this bill was gotten up for the benefit of Pennsylvania. There is not a word of truth in it. The bill was gotten up in the lower House for the benefit of all the States that had raised troops for such emergencies. It comes into this body, and the second section is stricken out, and then it is claimed to be a bill especially for Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHERMAN. This matter is occupying a great deal of time, and as it is not probable that we can come to a conclusion upon it very soon, I will move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Finance; and in connection with it that this resolution be passed—

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume the Senator can hardly make that motion while I am on the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought you were through.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly not. I do not intend to spend the time of the Senate, but I have a little feeling about this matter, because I have seen in the last two days an order calling out the militia of my State. This bill is the proper place in which to provide for the payment of those militia. Let it go on this bill. The House appropriated $15,000,000 to defray such expenses. If the House could vote an appropriation of $15,000,000, and this bill goes back there with an amendment appropriating not exceeding three or four million dollars, why can they not pass it? What objection can they have to it? If they could vote an appropriation of $15,000,000 and send it here, can they not agree to our amendments reducing the appropriation to about five million dollars?

But my especial reason in asking for this thing is this: I am not so particular about having the expenses heretofore incurred by my State paid; but if our people are again to be called out this summer, and every man capable of bearing arms taken from his farm, as will be the case, I say this Congress ought to make some arrangement for paying those men. Sir, you have made none. General Rosecrans, the department commander, has called our people to arms again. The State is about to be invaded. I recognize the justice of this claim of Pennsylvania. The State of Pennsylvania repelled an invasion. How often has my State done it? It has repelled invasion almost every month of the year. Not only has it repelled it once, twice, thrice, four times, but it is now called upon to repel it again. You have no Federal troops scarcely in the State of Missouri. I suppose there are not three thousand of them in the whole State. If the invasion is to be repelled our people must again rise and do it. We have to repel an invasion every summer from Arkansas and Texas, and it is coming again. As I said a little while ago, it will be upon us in the course of a few days, and this Senate might as well recognize the fact that a formidable invasion will enter Missouri in the course of a short time. The whole State is now full of guerrillas from Price's army. They have come into the State breathing vengeance and swearing that they will recover the State to the confederate arms, and they are now in the brush throughout the State, organizing preparatory to the invasion, when the uprising will take place in almost every community of the State. Our people are to be called out, and our State is to be again called upon to pay them, because this Congress has made no provision whatever to do it.

Sir, our houses have been burned; almost one fourth of the buildings in the State have been burned down; our fences have been destroyed; our people are reduced to degradation and misery. Pennsylvania has been unscathed by this rebellion; and yet we are told that this bill is peculiarly for the benefit of Pennsylvania. Why, sir, the House of Representatives have sent us no bill peculiarly for the benefit of Pennsylvania. It is rather a bill for the benefit of Missouri than of Pennsylvania, and now we are to be turned off in the very last days of the session, when there is no time for a new bill to go through all the forms of legislation, to go to the committees and be passed by Congress. I am not to blame that this is the case, because the order calling out the militia in my State was only made yesterday. Let justice be done; let this bill go back to the House of Representatives with the amendment of my colleague, and let it be passed; let it provide for our people during the coming summer.

Sir, I have some feeling upon this measure. If this is not done, our people in Missouri will again be subject to be butchered. We deserve it more than Pennsylvania. The houses of Pennsylvania have not been burned down. I believe there have been no levies made upon the people by confederate troops except in one little town of the State. They have been made upon our citizens for the last three years, and will again be made this summer. Their property will be taken, their cattle driven off, their horses stolen, their houses burned, their children conscripted into the confederate service. That is the kind of work going on in the State to-day; and yet we are told, because the first section of this bill provides for a claim of Pennsylvania merchants who expended a little money for the sake of their own property, for fear Lee would enter the city of Philadelphia and burn it, that this is a bill exclusively and peculiarly for the benefit of Pennsylvania. I deny it. No such bill is before this body. A bill came here for the benefit of every State in the Union, and this body struck out that portion which applied to the other States, and now it is a bill for the benefit of Pennsylvania. Sir, I want the bill to remain as it came from the other House. Let it be for the benefit of somebody else.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the order of the day. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. CLARK. By the indulgence of the Senate I will state that it is necessary that another member should be appointed upon the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. There is only one member here, and it is necessary that some bills should be paid before the Senate adjourns. I desire that the Senate will order some person to be appointed on that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) That order will be made, if there be no objection, and the appointment will be made by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. WILLEY was subsequently appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone the present and all other orders for the purpose of taking up and considering House bill No. 244.

Mr. DAVIS. I have the floor upon the order of the day.

Mr. WADE. I suppose it is in order for me to move to postpone that.

Mr. DAVIS. But you cannot take the floor. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio was recognized by the Chair, and the motion to postpone the pending and all prior orders to consider the bill indicated is in order, and that is the question before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I appeal from that decision of the Chair. When the Senate adjourned last night, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee was under consideration; I had the floor upon that subject, and before I had concluded my remarks I gave way for a motion to adjourn, and that of course leaves me upon the floor when that subject is taken up again.

Mr. WADE. That is all true; but I move to postpone that and all other orders. There is no doubt that when that subject comes up again the Senator from Kentucky will be entitled to the floor upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time having passed, and the Senator having waived his right, in the opinion of the Chair the motion of the Senator from Ohio is in order.

Mr. COWAN. I hope prior orders will not be postponed, and I have a word to say upon that. I think—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky insist on his appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DAVIS. I want that question decided. I have not so understood the principle of parliamentary law heretofore. If that is to be the rule, I think it is a novelty, and I want to understand it that I may act upon it. I should have called for the order of the day at the regular hour if I had not been assured that by common consent, I agreeing, the measure the Senator from Pennsylvania has under charge would not displace my bill. I therefore declined to call for the order of the day. I understand it to be the practice that when a measure is continued over the time for taking up the order of the day by general consent it does not displace the order of the day when it is called for, nor does it displace the right of any Senator who was upon the floor upon the order of the day from resuming the floor when the order of the day is called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK. I think the point is here: the order of the day has been displaced by the unanimous consent of the Senate in taking up other business, and it is not in order for any one Senator to call now and insist upon the order of the day. The time elapsed an hour and a half ago by the unanimous consent of the Senate. The Senator would be clearly right if the order of the day could be called for by one Senator. It will require a motion of the Senator and the order of the Senate to take it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to know of the Senator from New Hampshire if you are to call for it at the precise moment.

Mr. CLARK. The order of the day should be called for by the Chair at the moment, but if it should not be called for at the time and afterwards by the unanimous consent of the Senate, which is equivalent to an affirmative vote or unanimous vote of the Senate, it is displaced in this way, I think it is not in order for a Senator to insist upon it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, did you call for the order of the day at the proper hour? This is the first time, so far as I know, in legislative bodies where the floor has been taken from a Senator or member and given to another.

Mr. CLARK. I do not mean to say that. I mean to say the order cannot be called for by one Senator. It is perfectly in order for the Senator to move to proceed to the order of the day and the Senate may so direct. That is the point.

Mr. DAVIS. It was the duty of the occupant of the chair, whether he was the President pro tempore of the Senate or the present incumbent of the chair, at the arrival of the hour of twelve o'clock to call up the order of the day. He did not do so; the order of the day was not called for. Now, the question is, whether the default of the Chair shall forfeit my right to the floor. That is the point.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator it is not forfeiting his right to the floor. I agree with him entirely that whenever that comes up he is entitled to the floor; and it is entirely competent for him to move to take it up.

Mr. DAVIS. That does not meet the question. That is a mere evasion. Mr. President, it was the duty of the occupant of the chair to call the order of the day at the time. The reason that I did not call for the order of the day was in courtesy to the occupant of the chair and in courtesy to the Senator from Pennsylvania who had his favorite measure before the Senate. I inquired about it at the time or shortly afterwards, and some gentleman—I do not remember who it was—informed me that by omitting to call for the order of the day I should not forfeit any right I had in relation to calling for the order of the day. But this is the point: it was the duty of the President of the Senate, when the hour for calling for the order of the day had been reached, himself to call for the order of the day. Now the question is, shall his omission to do his duty deprive me of the right that I would have had if he had performed his duty?

Mr. CLARK. It is not a matter of that kind at all. I will cheerfully vote with the Senator to take up his order of the day.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not ask that at all. I just ask for my rights.

Mr. CLARK. It is only a question as to the proper method after it has been displaced this period of time. I will cheerfully vote with him to give him the order of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WADE. The question has become a matter of some consequence to a gentleman who desires the consideration of a measure here now as to what his rights are upon the floor. I understand very little about these rules, for I care very little about them and do not take the pains to inform myself about them; but I suppose if a gentleman has the floor on a certain order when it comes up he is entitled to the floor upon that order when that hour arrives. If he does not enforce his right then, but is still entitled to the floor whenever he chooses to call up the order of the day, it seems to me it is in his power to displace another Senator to almost any extent he pleases. It is so in the present case. Here I have a measure in which I take a very great interest, and I think it is one of great importance. I am anxious to get it up. I have been here watching for an opportunity when I might make a motion to take it up. The gentleman says that about an hour and a half ago he was entitled to have the floor on another question. So he was, and if he had insisted on his right nobody could have taken it from him; I could not even have obtained the floor to make this motion and should have been precluded even from taking the sense of the Senate upon it. But like all other rights in law it may be waived by negligence, if you may say so. It may be that if a gentleman does not insist on his right, he loses it; and if he does not do it, he infringes upon the rights of another. If the Senator from Kentucky had insisted on his rights at that time he probably would have been through before this, and I could have got up my bill; but if he can waive his right without losing it, he can postpone me as long as he pleases by neglecting to assert his right. Perhaps it is reasonable that the rule should be that way, but it does not look to me to be right.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make a single suggestion to the Senator from Ohio. I called for the order of the day before the honorable Senator made his motion. The Chair will recollect that.

Mr. WADE. I recollect it.

Mr. DAVIS. But the President of the Senate is to preside over the body, to enforce its order, to enforce its rules, to call up its business in the order in which the rules of the Senate assign that business. I was not entitled to the floor until the order of the day was called up. It was not my office, nor my right, nor my duty to call up the order of the day. That was the business of the President of the Senate. So soon as the moment of time arrived when the order of the day was to be called up, according to the rules of the Senate it was his duty ex officio, of his own impulse, to call up the order of the day, and then I should have been entitled to the floor. I am not entitled to the floor when the time arrives; I am entitled to the floor when the order of the day is called up. I may suggest to the incumbent of the chair when the time does come that the time has arrived for the order of the day to be taken up. He may refuse then to call it up; he may entertain other business; but when I am left upon the floor on the order of the day, and the order of the day is to come up at the hour of twelve, and the President of the Senate in default, in dereliction of his duty to call up the order of the day—

Mr. WADE. If the Senator will permit me, as this is a disputable point, about which I find gentlemen differ very much, I will withdraw my motion for the present and let the Senator take up his measure. I do not know how that point is. However, I waive my right. But I give notice that I shall move to take up my bill as soon as it will be in order to do so.

Mr. CLARK. I will move that the Senate proceed to the order of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky withdraw his appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COWAN. I hope that bill will not be taken up—

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. DAVIS. The question of order is this: that the Senate have no right to disperse with the order of the day while I am on the floor. I am entitled to the floor, and until I take it on the order of the day and relinquish it neither the Senator from Pennsylvania nor any other Senator can deprive me of it by making any motion whatever.

Mr. COWAN. The order has not been called. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire has made the motion to call for the order of the day.

Mr. DAVIS. I called for the order of the day myself.

Mr. COWAN. That call must be made by the Chair, not by members, and the hour never comes until the call is made. Members are not to determine when the hour comes for the orders of the day. That is for the Chair to determine.

Mr. DAVIS. That is very true.

Mr. COWAN. The Chair has not determined; the contingency has not arisen under which the gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. It arose in this way, and it has come to this as I understand: the Chair declines to call for the orders of the day. I say the Senate have the right to require the Chair to call for the orders of the day at the appointed time.

Mr. McDougall. My own notion of the law of this question is that when the time comes for calling up the order of the day it is the office of the Presiding Officer to announce that to the Senate. He having neglected it, it is the right of any Senator to call for the order of the day, because that is the proper course of business. I have no doubt about it. It would seem to follow almost as a necessity that any Senator might call for the order of the day, the Chair having neglected his particular duty in that respect.

Mr. COWAN. That is just what I understand the honorable Senator from New Hampshire has done.

Mr. McDougall. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky has called for it by virtue of a right. It did not involve a motion. The Senator from New Hampshire makes a motion. It was the right of any Senator to call up the order of the day; but I think it is within the power of a Senator, the order of the day being called, to move to dispense with the order of the day for the purpose of considering the present business; and the order of the day being called for does not necessarily give the right to a Senator to insist on taking the floor upon that question. It strikes me that the order of the day being announced, (and it must be announced when called for, that being the duty of the Chair,) whoever takes the floor may ask for the postponement of the order of the day for the consideration of pending business.

Mr. COWAN. I think the error in which my learned friend from Kentucky has fallen is that he has assumed that to have been done which ought to have been done. He would have been entitled to the floor if the Chair had called for the order; but as the Chair neglected to call for the order he had a right to call for it himself, and then if the call had been made he would have been entitled to the floor; but he is not entitled until the call is actually made whether by the Chair or by a Senator, and I should think it a proper function of the Chair to call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The Chair will state that the order of the day has been postponed by the unanimous consent of the Senate. The attention of the Chair being called to it, he thinks he has a right now to say that the order of the day is before the Senate, and on that question the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McDougall. That is a point of order that I am disposed now to raise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will state his point of order.

Mr. McDougall. It is that no one can be entitled to the floor upon the call of a Senator for the order of the day until the Chair has announced the order of the day, and then whoever may take the floor has the right to move as to the conduct of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just announced that the order of the day is before the Senate, and that the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. McDougall. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to call the attention of my friend from California to a fact that I am sure he does not appreciate, that last night—

Mr. GRIMES. I rise to a point of order. I believe the rule requires that when an appeal shall be taken the appeal shall be stated from the Chair. I want to know exactly what the appeal is before the Senator from Indiana proceeds to argue it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not going to argue it, but I am going to state the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will state his point of order.

Mr. McDougall. My point of order is this: that it is the office of the Presiding Officer to announce the order of the day; and that the order of the day having been announced by the Chair, the person who obtains the floor has the first right to move as to the conduct of business. That duty having been neglected by the Presiding Officer it is the right of any Senator to rise in his place and call for the order of the day. The order of the day having been called for, then it must be announced from the Chair what is the order of the day, and the Chair having announced the order of the day, then whoever may take the floor has the right to be heard, and not that the person who has called for the order of the day necessarily has the right to the floor.

Mr. CARLILE. The Senator from Kentucky had the floor last night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to suggest—

Mr. GRIMES. I insist on the observance of the rule. When an appeal is taken from a decision of the Chair the rule is that the exact condition of the case shall be stated by the Chair. I want to know now what the Chair's comprehension is of the appeal upon which we are called to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The Chair decided upon a request of the Senator from Kentucky that the order of the day was before the Senate, and awarded the floor to the Senator from Kentucky who called for the order.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will withdraw the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

REPEAL OF GOLD BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member from Kentucky will permit me to interpose another bill, which I do not think will give rise to any debate—

Mr. DAVIS. I am afraid it would produce a case of forfeiture or something of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, there can be no forfeiture, because you go back to the order of the day with your rights untouched. The universal impression, as far as I have been able to collect it, in Congress and out of Congress, now is that what is called the gold bill is doing nothing but mischief; and I have communications, and other Senators have received them from New York especially, begging that that bill shall be repealed. I do not know any member of the Senate who formerly was willing to give that bill its sanction who is not now just as willing to repeal it. It has had its trial and has failed to produce anything but mischief. I propose, therefore, with the honorable member's consent, to lay the special order aside informally and take up that bill. It will not be debated, I am sure.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection if it does not prejudice me in my present position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to consider the bill indicated by him at this time. The Chair hears no objection; and the bill (S. No. 325) to repeal the act of the 17th of June, 1864, prohibiting the sales of gold and foreign exchange, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better be postponed for a while. There is a member of the body who takes a great interest in it, and I would rather it should lie until he is conferred with. I think the Senator from Maryland states the case stronger than he is authorized to do.

Mr. HOWE. Does that bill come from a committee?

Mr. DAVIS. I will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to get the attention of the Chair before the question is disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. I insist on my right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New York for the purpose indicated.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the bill the consideration of which was called up by the Senator from Maryland will not be postponed unless some Senator is opposed to it or there is some good reason for postponing it. I do not think there is any objection to the bill; I have not heard of a Senator opposed to its passage; and therefore I hope it will be considered at this time. It is very important that the law should be repealed at once.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not waive my right for any debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. There will be no debate.

Mr. MORGAN. Not a word of debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill No. 325 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, by unanimous consent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe my friend from Kansas [Mr. LANE] is in. I desire now to ask him if he takes the credit of the original gold bill. [Laughter.]

Several Senators. Vote, vote.

Mr. HOWE. I do not take any credit for the passage of the gold bill myself, whether the Senator from Kansas does or not, and I simply rise to say that I do not mean to be entitled to any credit for its repeal. I have not seen the necessity for its repeal, and I do not yet understand the necessity for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I will answer the Senator from Missouri by asking for the yeas and nays on this bill. I want to record my vote in the negative.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Hale, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Willey—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Harding, Harlan, Howard, Morrill, Nesmith, Riddle, and Wright—12.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House (No. 90) to refer the claim of Nahum Ward back to the Court of Claims.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (No. 228) providing for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (No. 271) relating to the law of evidence in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (No. 74) requesting the President to appoint a day for national humiliation and prayer.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate with an amendment to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho; and

A bill (No. 339) to repeal a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department," and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN F. FARNSWORTH of Illinois, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. JAMES K. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata.

MILITARY RAILROAD TO EAST TENNESSEE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) authorizing the President to construct a military railroad from the valley of the Ohio to East Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall occupy but a very few minutes on this, I think, one of the most important measures in relation to internal improvement that has ever been presented to the Senate of the United States. This measure proposes to connect the Ohio river at Cincinnati and Louisville with Knoxville in East Tennessee. There is already a line of railroad completed from Cincinnati on through Lexington to Nicholasville, and it has been surveyed and partially executed across the Kentucky river to the neighborhood of Danville. There is a road that has been in operation for a good many years from Louisville to Lebanon, and now an addition to that road under contract from Lebanon to the neighborhood of Danville, where the two prongs of the main road leading from the Ohio river, the one from Cincinnati and the other from Louisville, are proposed to be united and to be run in a common branch from that point to some point in East Tennessee that will place both lines of road in communication with Knoxville. When the subject was up last night I made a few general remarks, and I am going to make but a few to-day upon the subject. I will read the table of distances between these points:

Table of distances from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Knoxville, Tennessee, by the shortest existing railroad line; and also by the line proposed to be constructed by the President of the United States, in his special message, April 28, 1864:

	Miles.
From Cincinnati to Knoxville, via Seymour, Indiana, Louisville, Kentucky, Nashville and Chattanooga, Tennessee.....	534½
From Cincinnati to Knoxville, as proposed by the President, via Lexington, Nicholasville, and Somerset, Kentucky.....	289
Difference in favor of the latter route.....	255½
There are completed on this line.....	140
To be built, as proposed by the President, to complete the connection.....	149
	289

The construction of one hundred and forty-nine miles additional road would make the connection between Knoxville and Louisville and Nicholasville and Cincinnati complete, and would open up all of East Tennessee, all of northern Georgia, all of the southern Atlantic States, by means of this railroad communication, to the great Northwest. The cost of constructing this link of one hundred and forty-nine miles, as estimated (in 1863) by Lieutenant Colonel Simpson and Captain W. A. Gunn, (engineers,) United States Army, is $30,000 per mile, making for one hundred and forty-nine miles, $4,470,000.

A more important improvement, one that would be productive of more advantage in a commercial, military, and social point of view, and for the transportation of the mails, cannot be undertaken in the United States than this would prove to be. Yet, sir, the circuitous route, which is two hundred and ninety-five and a half miles longer than the direct route, the Secretary of War and the general-in-chief call a parallel road with the one which is projected, and they say therefore that the projected road is not necessary. Why, sir, it is an absurdity, it is an abuse of terms to call them parallel roads, and to say that the projected line of railroad is rendered unnecessary by the existence and operation of that long circuitous route running through a section of Ohio, a section of Indiana, a section of Kentucky, a section of Tennessee and to Chattanooga, and then taking a northeastern direction from Chattanooga back to Knoxville.

There are only three considerable bridges to build—over the Kentucky, Cumberland, and Clinch rivers; and of these the stone pillars are already built for the Kentucky and Clinch.

The early completion of this line connecting Cincinnati and Knoxville, as a military necessity, as well for supplying the army of the Cumberland and the troops in southeastern Kentucky and East Tennessee as for placing those troops within easy supporting distance of the whole Northwest, has been urgently recommended by the following officers of the Army, most of whom have served in that section and know its importance, namely: Major Generals Burnside, Foster, and Rosecrans, all of whom have commanded in East Tennessee; and Generals Palmer, Thomas, Sheridan, Rousseau, Schofield, Schenck, Garfield, Smith, White, Tillson, Boyle, Blair, and others.

Generals Burnside and Foster when before the Military Committee of the House stated in their opinion it was by no means certain that East Tennessee could be held without this road, by which to procure supplies, although we might retain Chattanooga; but with this line completed we could hold East Tennessee whether we retained or lost possession of Chattanooga.

One of the greatest difficulties in this war is the long line from the base of supplies to the armies in the front, and the great hazard to which these long lines of communication are exposed by being cut off and interrupted by guerrillas. The whole of this road along the new route would be through a friendly country. It would not be half the distance in length, consequently it would not be subject to half the exposure of interruption and of being broken by guerrilla parties or by military expeditions. Another essential difference is that a good portion of the circuitous route is through an unfriendly and hostile country where guerrillas are couched in almost every bush, and where there is a constant watch to make depredations on the railroad and to cut the line of communication. These hazards and difficulties would all be obviated by the construction of the new route.

The Secretary of War and the general-in-chief seem to think that this new road is unnecessary in some degree, because they consider the war as pretty well over between here and Knoxville and on to Chattanooga, I suppose. That may be so or it may not be so. I do not think this war is over yet. If it is, and the Union is to be restored, there may be wars in the future, and as a line of military communication and a bond of union between the northwestern and southern States this would be the most important and the strongest ligament that could be constructed in the form of internal improvement. If the war is about to be brought to a speedy close the southern States will long be in a state of very bad feeling toward the Union and the General Government. There will be eruptions; the earthquake will have subsided, but its heavings will still continue; it will throw out its destructive lava continually; and the best means of communication that the Government could have to reduce the rebel States to obedience, to tranquilize them, and to reinstate the reign of law and order and peace that could possibly be devised would be this railroad. I think that in every point of view in which it can be considered the road ought to be undertaken and completed.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Mr. President, having been upon the committee that reported this measure favorably, I deem it proper to say a few words to show the reasons that influenced my action upon the committee and that will influence my vote here. I shall not at this stage of the session detain the Senate by any lengthy speech, but give simply the history of our legislation on this subject heretofore, and its present position.

In the first annual message of the present President of the United States the construction of this military road was recommended to Congress. In pursuance of that recommendation a joint resolution was passed authorizing the construction of the road. Under that the Secretary of War commenced to make contracts for the construction of the road. At the end of some twelve months Congress, as I conceive by ill-advised and hasty action, repealed the joint resolution authorizing the construction of the road. Now, this joint resolution has been passed by the House of Representatives providing for the same thing that we provided for by an act of Congress some two years since. I had no doubt then that the measure should pass. I have no doubt now that it should pass. Then we had the approbation of the Secretary of War and all the military authorities. Now we have the opposition of the Secretary of War on account of what he considers the changed position of the military affairs of the country to this road. It will be seen by a map which I hold in my hand that our present line of communication with the army in northern Georgia, commencing at Cincinnati and going around to Chattanooga and thence to Knoxville, is five hundred and eighty-four and one half miles from our base of supplies. That distance will be shortened two hundred and ninety-five and one half miles by having a direct communication from Cincinnati across the States of Kentucky and Tennessee. I have no doubt of the propriety of this proposed railroad, and that Congress has a right to establish either military or post roads and to appropriate money for their construction. If there is any measure which commends itself to the support of Congress, it seems to me it is this road.

Why is it that it was necessary two years ago and is not necessary now? Because the Secretary of War says in his opinion, and General Halleck says in his opinion it cannot be constructed in time to be effective as a war measure during the present rebellion. How can we know that? The truth of these two opinions must be tested by the question how long the war will last; and no man can tell how long the war may last. The sin and curse of the prosecution of this whole war have been that we have continually been temporizing, resorting to temporary measures, and have not resorted to measures permanent in their character. If this measure had been executed two years ago, I hesitate nothing in saying that five times the whole cost of the construction of the road would have been saved in transportation. What are the two points of importance, the two strategic points controlling southeastern Kentucky and eastern Tennessee? They are the Cumberland Gap and Knoxville. Knoxville is one hundred and forty-nine miles from the termination of the Cincinnati and Lexington railroad, over a mountainous country, a comparatively poor and barren country, with small valleys, and where an army cannot be supported by any home production. You have to rely for the support of your armies either at Cumberland Gap or at Knoxville upon your bases of supplies upon the Ohio river. These bases of supplies are located at Cincinnati and at Louisville. More than one half of the whole transportation would be cut off by the construction of this road.

Now, sir, you have in opposition to this present bill the opinion of the Secretary of War, when two years ago he urged its importance. Now he opposes it because forsooth the rebellion is soon to close and there is to be no more military necessity for this military road. The first and most important objection, as I understood from the reading of the letter, was that the road cannot now be constructed in time to make it an efficient agent in the suppression of the rebellion; and misapprehensions exist in the mind of Senators in reference to the time it will take to construct this road and in reference also to the cost of the road. The estimate for the construction is less than five million dollars instead of twenty or thirty millions, and it is believed by the friends of the road and those best calculated to judge that it may be constructed within less than one year. I hope very much that the rebellion may be suppressed in one year, though I doubt whether it will be; but whether it is or not, I wish to provide means for occupying southern Kentucky and East Tennessee.

But the Secretary has some other objections. He says that the communication with the army in northern Georgia is complete without it. Now, sir, what is that communication? It is from Cincinnati to Seymour, in Indiana, to Louisville, to Nashville, to Chattanooga, and then directly doubling upon your route back to Knoxville, making five hundred and eighty-four and a half miles instead of two hundred and eighty-nine miles. That is the only route and the only communication which the Secretary speaks of except, he says, you have a water communication by means of the Cumberland and the Tennessee rivers. Every one knows that you cannot rely upon the navigation of those rivers except for three or four months of the year, and they really amount to nothing. If your railroads were cut to-day, you could not feed your troops for twenty-four hours at Chattanooga or in northern Georgia by means of water transportation. It is perfectly idle and fallacious, as every gentleman knows. Every intelligent Senator must know that any reliance of the Secretary of War on water communication by means of the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers is utterly erroneous. Then you rely simply on a long line of railroad through the enemy's country, of nearly six hundred miles, when you have the means of constructing a road of one hundred and forty-nine miles in length to make your communication perfect, and not through the enemy's country but through the most loyal portion of the United States, the mountain region of Kentucky and East Tennessee. It is there as it has always been; when freedom has been driven from the valley and the plain she has found her abiding place and last home upon the mountain tops; and so it is there. There is no more loyal people upon earth than the people inhabiting every foot of this railroad route from its present termination to Knoxville in Tennessee, one hundred and forty-nine miles.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Four million four hundred and seventy thousand dollars, and it ought to have been made; and if we had had the ordinary foresight and prudence of any ordinary business man in conducting his own affairs it would have been made more than two years ago.

These are the objections to the measure. What are its recommendations? We have the recommendation of ten major and brigadier generals who have commanded upon the spot. Every one of them tells you it is a matter of necessity, of military necessity, and that you cannot support your armies at Knoxville or Cumberland Gap unless you have this communication. Every single general officer who has ever been upon the ground makes precisely the same report, and you have nothing against it except the letter of the Secretary of War, who two years ago urged it again and again, but now opposes it because you have an existing line of five hundred and eighty-four and a half miles which he says is a parallel line with a road of one hundred and forty-nine miles running directly south, and his parallel line commences at Cincinnati, goes by way of Seymour and Louisville and Nashville and Chattanooga, and then turns up on itself and comes almost due east to Knoxville.

These are the reasons which influence me to vote for this measure. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. How soon can the road be made?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. It can be made, as the friends of the measure and the friends of the country there say, in less than twelve months. I have no doubt of it; and without being a prophet, without affecting to prophesy, I tell you that twelve months hence you will need a military railroad there precisely as you do to-day. I fear you will, although I hope the rebellion may be suppressed, but whether it is suppressed sooner or later I wish to prepare now to occupy East Tennessee and the Cumberland Gap permanently, and it never can be done without this railroad. How was it last winter when Burnside was cooped up in Knoxville upon quarter rations, when you had to wagon your provisions one hundred and forty-five miles over a mountain region, and his army was only supported for twenty days by the voluntary contributions of these poor East Tennessee people who have been driven from their homes, who have been slaughtered, whose houses have been burned over their heads, and his army would have had to retreat there without supplies if it had not been for these very loyal East Tennesseans?

Now we ask you to make a road so that you can supply your army and occupy East Tennessee permanently and the mountain region of Kentucky permanently. The report of General Burnside is that when he was upon quarter rations in a starving country—a country that had been overrun by the rebels for two years—at the end of twenty days, instead of being forced to retreat, he had from voluntary contributions more provisions than he had when the siege commenced. Now we propose to hold that country, and it can only be done by this railroad. Cut the communication with the army leading to Chattanooga and it compels a retreat. If you have this railroad you can throw provisions into Cumberland Gap and Knoxville at will, for this railroad is not subject to be cut by raiders and marauders. It runs through a loyal mountain region where they will protect the road. Why should we not give this railroad to the people of East Tennessee? Why should we not protect them? They have three hundred thousand inhabitants all told, and a voting population of thirty-five thousand; twenty-one thousand of that number are now in the Union armies. Starved and persecuted and abandoned as they have been by the Government for the last three years, they are still true to the country and true to the flag. The two important points, as I tell you, are Cumberland Gap and Knoxville. This railroad will pass within fifteen miles of the Cumberland Gap, so that if you wish to supply that point, instead of wagoning your provisions one hundred and fifty miles you have but fifteen miles of wagon road. You lessen the distance to Chattanooga more than one hundred miles even from Knoxville. You lessen the distance to Knoxville two hundred and ninety-five miles from Cincinnati. You have a direct communication south from the State of Kentucky, running almost directly south from Cincinnati two hundred and ninety-five miles, instead of going around six hundred miles by Louisville and Nashville and Chattanooga.

It seems to me the plainest possible proposition. If the Government has the right to build a military bridge to cross a stream, to establish a road, whether a dirt road or a plank road, they have an equal right to establish a railroad, and it seems to me that every consideration of public policy requires the passage of this joint resolution. The only mistake we made was that it was not passed and acted upon three years ago, and the cost of its construction would have been saved five times over, and all the terrible suffering at Knoxville and Chattanooga for want of provisions and forage would have been saved to the Government.

I forbear to trespass on the Senate further, but I tell you now this bill will pass to-day or it will pass next session. Such is the sense of the Senate and Congress that they will never suffer this measure to fail. It is an absolute necessity growing out of the condition of war, and if the war were over the benefits conferred upon the country would be returned to the country tenfold for its construction, in making a grand ligament binding together the free mountain region of Tennessee and the great Northwest, upon which two sections my hope for the supremacy of the Government and the reestablishment of the Constitution mainly rests.

Mr. WADE. I once more move to postpone the present and all prior orders and take up House bill No. 244, to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope that motion will not prevail. I suppose the discussion on this Danville and Knoxville railroad bill is now through and we are prepared to vote. I look upon it as one of the most important questions before Congress. If we construct the road now, when peace is restored Kentucky and Tennessee will take the road off the hands of Government; but I feel that as a measure to crush out rebellion and to secure East Tennessee and the mountainous portions of Kentucky this road should be made, and I hope the motion of the Senator from Ohio will not prevail.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not suppose we can build this road in five years, and I do not suppose that we can run this war five years, and we may as well let the question of building the road go by and proceed with something that we can finish.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I have this to say as my opinion as to the continuation of this war, that it is to be continued interminably without reference to years until success crowns our efforts. That this road can be built within one year, we have the judgment of the Senator from Indiana, whose judgment I would trust as fully as the judgment of my colleague. Here is a people in the mountainous regions of Kentucky and East Tennessee furnishing the most loyal of the loyal of our country, and I understand from the geography of the country that the road will be a grand thoroughfare in time of peace, and that the States of Kentucky and Tennessee would cheerfully refund to the Government its cost and take the road from the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POWELL. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Henderson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wiley—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Santsbury—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the motion of Mr. WADE was agreed to.

SEAMEN ON WRECKED VESSELS.

Mr. HALE. By the consent of the Senator from Ohio, I ask leave to take up a bill which has come back to us from the House of Representatives with an amendment. I simply wish to have the amendment non-concurred in. It is a bill about adjusting seamen's accounts.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service.

The amendment was disagreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. POWELL, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 345) to prevent the Secretary of War, and persons engaged in the military service of the United States, from interfering with the freedom of religion; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. SUMNER. I submit the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1865, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Insert in lieu of the matter stricken out, the following:

For repairs and completion of sea-wall at Buffalo, $37,500.

CHARLES SUMNER,

JOHN CONNESS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEORGE H. PENDLETON,

ALEXANDER H. RICE,

JOHN GANSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know what was done with the amendment made by the Senate in regard to the sea-walls in Boston harbor.

Mr. SUMNER. The House of Representatives insisted on that and the Senate have receded.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know who composed the committee on the part of the Senate. I see that only two have signed the report.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. TEN EYCK] was one of the committee.

The report was concurred in.

RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

Mr. WADE. Let the bill which I have called up be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown, a republican form of government, is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that in the States declared in rebellion against the United States, the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint for each a provisional governor, whose pay and emoluments shall not exceed that of a brigadier general of volunteers, who shall be charged with the civil administration of such State until a State government therein shall be recognized as hereinafter provided.

The second section declares that so soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed in any such State, and the people thereof shall have sufficiently returned to their obedience to the Constitution and the laws of the United States, the provisional governor shall direct the marshal of the United States, as speedily as may be, to name a sufficient number of deputies, and to enroll all white male citizens of the United States resident in the State in their respective counties, and to request each one to take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and in his enrollment to designate those who take and those who refuse to take that oath, which rolls are to be forthwith returned to the provisional governor; and if the persons taking that oath amount to a majority of the persons enrolled in the State, he is by proclamation to invite the loyal people of the State to elect delegates to a convention charged to declare the will of the people of the State relative to the reestablishment of a State government, subject to and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

The convention, by the third section, is to consist of as many members as both houses of the last constitutional State Legislature, apportioned by the provisional governor among the counties, parishes, or districts of the State, in proportion to the white population returned as electors; by the marshal, in compliance with the provisions of the act. The provisional governor is by proclamation to declare the number of delegates to be elected by each county, parish, or election district; to name a day of election not less than thirty days thereafter; to designate the places of voting in each county, parish, or district, conforming, as nearly as may be convenient, to the places used in the State elections next preceding the rebellion; to appoint one or more commissioners to hold the election at each place of voting, and provide an adequate force to keep the peace during the election.

The fourth section provides that the delegates shall be elected by the loyal white male citizens of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, and resident at the time in the county, parish, or district in which they shall offer to vote, and enrolled as before provided, or absent in the military service of the United States, and who shall take and subscribe the oath of allegiance to the United States in the form contained in the act of Congress of July 2, 1862; and all such citizens of the United States who are in the military service of the United States are to vote at the headquarters of their respective commands, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the provisional governor for the taking and return of their votes; but no person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military, State or confederate, under the rebel usurpation, or who has voluntarily borne arms against the United States, is to vote or be eligible to be elected as delegate at such election.

The fifth section directs the commissioners to hold the election in conformity with the act, and so far as it may be consistent therewith, to proceed in the manner used in the State prior to the rebellion. The oath of allegiance is to be taken and subscribed on the poll-books by every voter; but every person known by or proved to the commissioners to have held or exercised any office, civil or military, State or confederate, under the rebel usurpation, or to have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, is to be excluded though he offer to take the oath; and in case any person who shall have borne arms against the United States shall offer to vote he shall be deemed to have borne arms voluntarily unless he shall prove the contrary by the testimony of a qualified voter. The poll-book showing the name and oath of each voter is to be returned to the provisional governor by the commissioners of election or the one acting, and the provisional governor is to canvass the returns, and declare the person having the highest number of votes elected.

The sixth section makes it the duty of the provisional governor, by proclamation, to convene the delegates elected at the capital of the State, on a day not more than three months after the election, giving at least thirty days' notice of such day; or in case the capital shall in his judgment be unfit, he is to appoint another place. He is to preside over the deliberations of the convention, and administer to each delegate, before taking his seat in the convention, the oath of allegiance to the United States in the form prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

The seventh section provides that the convention shall declare, on behalf of the people of the State, their submission to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and shall adopt the following provisions, hereby prescribed by the United States in the execution of the constitutional duty to guaranty a republican form of government to every State, and incorporate them in the constitution of the State, namely: First. No person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military, except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel, State or confederate, under the usurping power, shall vote for or be a member of the Legislature, or Governor. Second. Involuntary servitude is forever prohibited, and the freedom of all persons is guaranteed in said State. Third. No debt, State or confederate, created by or under the sanction of the usurping power, shall be recognized or paid by the State.

According to the eighth section, when the convention shall have adopted those provisions, it shall proceed to reestablish a republican form of government and ordain a constitution containing them, which, when adopted, the convention shall by ordinance provide for submitting to the people of the State entitled to vote under this law, at an election to be held in the manner prescribed by it for the election of delegates, but at a time and place named by the convention, at which election the before prescribed electors, and none others, shall vote directly for or against such constitution and form of State government. The returns of this election are to be made to the provisional governor, who is to canvass them in the presence of the electors, and if a majority of the votes cast shall be for the constitution and form of government, he shall certify the same, with a copy thereof, to the President of the United States, who, after obtaining the assent of Congress, shall, by proclamation, recognize the government so established, and none other, as the constitutional government of the State; and from the date of such recognition, and not before, Senators and Representatives and electors for President and Vice President may be elected in such State, according to the laws of the State and of the United States.

The ninth section declares that if the convention shall refuse to reestablish the State government on the conditions named, the provisional governor shall declare it dissolved; but it shall be the duty of the President, whenever he shall have reason to believe that a sufficient number of the people of the State entitled to vote under this act, in number not less than a majority of those enrolled, are willing to reestablish a State government on the conditions named, to direct the provisional governor to order another election of delegates to a convention for the purpose and in the manner prescribed in this act, and to proceed in all respects as before provided, either to dissolve the convention or to certify the State government reestablished by it to the President.

Until the United States shall have recognized a republican form of State government the tenth section makes it the duty of the provisional governor to see that this act, and the laws of the United States, and the laws of the State in force when the State government was overthrown by the rebellion, are faithfully executed within the State; but no law or usage whereby any person was heretofore held in involuntary servitude is to be recognized or enforced by any court or officer in such State; and the laws for the trial and punishment of white persons are to extend to all persons, and jurors are to have the qualifications of voters under this law for delegates to the convention. The President is to appoint such officers provided for by the laws of the State when its government was overthrown as he may find necessary to the civil administration of the State, who are to be entitled to receive the fees and emoluments provided by the State laws for such officers.

The eleventh section provides that until the recognition of a State government as before provided for, the provisional governor shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, cause to be assessed, levied, and collected, for the year 1864, and every year thereafter, the taxes provided by the laws of such State to be levied during the fiscal year preceding the overthrow of the State government thereof, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State, as nearly as may be; and the officers provided for by the preceding section are to be vested with all powers of levying and collecting such taxes, by distress or sale, as were vested in any officers or tribunal of the former State government for those purposes. The proceeds of such taxes are to be accounted for to the provisional governor, and be by him applied to the expenses of the administration of the laws in such State, subject to the direction of the President, and the surplus to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such State, to be paid to the State upon an appropriation therefor, to be made when a republican form of government shall be recognized therein by the United States.

By section twelve, all persons held to involuntary servitude or labor in the States referred to are emancipated and discharged therefrom, and they and their posterity are declared to be forever free. And if any such persons or their posterity shall be restrained of liberty, under pretense of any claim to such service or labor, the courts of the United States shall, on habeas corpus, discharge them.

The thirteenth section provides that if any person declared free by this or any law of the United States, or any proclamation of the President, be restrained of liberty, with intent to be held in or reduced to involuntary servitude or labor, the person convicted before a court of competent jurisdiction of such act shall be punished by fine of not less than $1,500, and be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty years; and by the fourteenth section every person who shall hereafter hold or exercise any office, civil or military, except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel, in the rebel service, State or confederate, is declared not to be a citizen of the United States.

The first amendment of the Committee on Territories was in section one, line six, after the word "governor" to strike out "whose pay and emoluments shall not exceed that of a brigadier general of volunteers," and to insert "whose pay shall be $3,000 per annum."

Mr. WADE. I liked the amendment very well at the time it was got up, but it is so late in the session that I do not think it best to amend the bill in that particular. It was deemed convenient to put the pay of a brigadier general in plain terms rather than have it as it was in the original bill, "the pay and emoluments." As the bill will have to go back to the other House with the amendment, and that would jeopardize it, I would rather that the amendment should not be concurred in.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the committee was in section two, line eight, before the word "male" to strike out "white;" so as to read, "and enroll all male citizens of the United States."

Mr. WADE. In my anxiety to give these people all their rights I feel now that this bill is of great importance, and that this amendment, if adopted, will probably jeopardize the bill; and as I believe that the provisions of this bill outweigh all such considerations, and at this stage of proceedings that there is no time for discussion upon it, although I agreed to this amendment in committee I would rather it should not be adopted, because, in my judgment, it will sacrifice the bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. This amendment was agreed to in committee. I do not propose to detain the Senate by a discussion, but I want to record my vote upon the amendment. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I shall vote in accordance with the suggestion of my friend from Ohio. I entertain the same opinions about it as he does; but he thinks the bill had better go through as it is, and I shall waive my conscientious scruples and go for expediency.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 5, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, and Sumner—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Hendricks, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Wright—20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in section three, line five, before the word "population" to strike out the word "white."

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. That is the same principle.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in section four, line two, before the word "male" to strike out "white."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee have been disposed of, and the bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following amendment; I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert these words:

That when the inhabitants of any State have been declared in a state of insurrection against the United States by proclamation of the President, by force and virtue of the act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1861, they shall be, and are hereby declared to be, incapable of casting any vote for electors of President or Vice President of the United States, or of electing Senators or Representatives in Congress, until said insurrection in said State is suppressed or abandoned; and said inhabitants have returned to their obedience to the Government of the United States, nor until such return to obedience shall be declared by proclamation of the President, issued by virtue of an act of Congress, hereafter to be passed, authorizing the same.

I desire to state that in offering this amendment I have been prompted chiefly by the fact that the session is drawing so near its close that we have not time to discuss a measure of this importance as it should be discussed. I, for one, am not sufficiently familiar with the details of this bill, and there are certain features of it that do not meet my approbation which I would like to amend, to alter, and to change; but it is very apparent that as matters now stand it will be impossible to do so. The present amendment provides all the security which can be asked in regard to the exercise of electoral privileges in these districts. That is the necessity of the hour. I propose to provide for that necessity, and to leave the matter of reconstruction to a later day when events shall have perhaps altered some of the relations in which these districts now stand to us. I do not think, furthermore, that the attitude of the country to which this bill is proposed to apply is sufficiently distinct and sufficiently developed to justify us at this hour in passing upon the work of reconstruction. I therefore move the amendment, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause and make the provision there recited.

Mr. WADE. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I do not think the reasons that have been assigned are sufficient to induce us to reject a bill that has been got up with so much labor and care in the other branch, and studied considerably at all events by the committee who had it in charge in this. The Senator thinks that the bill has not been long enough before us for us to understand it, or that there are points about the bill that would lead to a more extended discussion than can now be given to it. I do not think there is any sound reasoning in all that. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives at an early period of the session. It has been upon our tables, I believe, some five months. The Committee on Territories had it under their consideration, and I have called the attention of Senators to its provisions and requested almost every Senator on this side of the Chamber, at all events, from time to time to take up the bill and look at it. I have taken more than ordinary care to admonish Senators to look into it and be prepared to vote upon it whenever it should come up; and therefore I believe that if the bill is not thoroughly understood by the Senate at this time it never will be. The next session will be a short session, and the bill cannot certainly be so long before us at the next session as it has been now. But there is nothing in the provisions of this bill at all intricate or difficult to be understood.

This great question is pending before the country; it will not lie still; the Administration will force it on our consideration frequently, and it will arise in a thousand ways before us as long as this war shall continue and afterwards. The question will be asked of every man who goes out to canvass during the coming election, "What do you propose to do with these seceded States in regard to their coming back?" Every one says that the Union must be reestablished in some form; but how? That question is in the mind of every man, woman, and child in the country. The Union is to be preserved; but upon what principle will you permit these people to come back into the Union? It is a very natural question; it arises every day to everybody that considers the subject at all, and we must be prepared to give an answer to it. Here Congress has been in session seven months; we are about to leave and go back among the people, and they will say, "You have talked very much and very long and very loud about reconstruction; some of these States have sent their agents and demanded readmission into the Union; you have voted them out; you have refused to receive them; but have you declared on what principle you will permit them to come in?" Our political opponents will say to us, "It is your deliberate purpose to subdue these people, to subjugate them, to tyrannize over them, and never to let them come back into the Union on equal terms with the other States; when they have in form made a free constitution and elected Senators according to the forms of law, and who as they believed were entitled to seats here, you have thrust them out, but you do not declare any principle on which you will admit them." That would be wrong. We ought to be able to answer authoritatively everybody that demands to know upon what principle they shall be admitted.

The amendment that is now offered to this bill will give the people no information upon that subject. It is a bare negative. It declares that they shall not come in until Congress shall provide some principle for their admission, and of course it leaves it entirely a blank how that shall be. This bill goes on to prescribe precisely on what principle we are willing to admit these people into the Union again, and that pressing question it seems to me should now be decided. I hold that there is nothing tyrannical or oppressive in this bill, but that it proceeds upon the most liberal grounds of equality. On the one hand it guards the Federal Government against the admission of dangerous persons who still adhere to the confederate notions, and it prescribes the principle on which all the loyal people of the States can come back, and it provides for them a just and equitable government during the period of their transition state while they remain outside of the Union as States. It guards their rights most sedulously; and it undertakes to deal most equitably with those that are not in a condition safely to be admitted into the Union again. It prescribes deliberately and plainly the principle of organization and when they can be permitted to come back, and the bill escapes many of those questions that have been agitated in debate both in this and the other House.

What is the relation that these seceded States hold to the General Government now? Gentlemen differ widely on that subject. It is a most important question, however, to be ascertained and declared by Congress, for the Executive ought not to be permitted to handle this great question to his own liking. It does not belong, under the Constitution, to the President to prescribe the rule, and it is a base abandonment of our own powers and our own duties to cast this great principle upon the decision of the executive branch of the Government. It belongs to us; and the House of Representatives, in the performance of their duty, have in my judgment wisely performed this great function. I know very well that the President from the best motives undertook to fix a rule upon which he would admit these States back into the Union. It was not upon any principle of republicanism; it would not have guaranteed to the States a republican form of government, because he prescribed the rule to be that when one tenth of the population would take a certain oath and agree to come back into the Union they might come in as States. When we consider that in the light of American principle, to say the least of it it was absurd. The idea that a State shall take upon itself the great privilege of self-government when there are only one tenth of the people that can stand by the principle is most anti-republican, anomalous, and entirely subversive of the great principles that underlie all our State governments and the General Government. Majorities must rule, and until majorities can be found loyal and trustworthy for State government, they must be governed by a stronger hand. It is a necessity imposed upon the General Government by the Constitution itself.

I have said that it is the duty of the Federal Government to guaranty to every State a republican form of government, and here, Senators, remember that the bill moving upon this great principle moves under the broad ægis of the Constitution of the United States. It sets up no fanciful principle of government outside of that instrument. It disposes of this grave question, what is the condition of these States and what is their relation to the General Government? It does not go outside of the Constitution of the United States itself. I say again, it leaves nothing to gentlemen's judgment or the different fancies that may spring up among different individuals.

It has been contended in the House of Representatives, it has been contended upon this floor, that the States may lose their organization, may lose their rights as States, may lose their corporate capacity by rebellion. I utterly deny that doctrine. I hold that once a State of this Union, always a State; that you cannot by wrong and violence displace the rights of anybody or disorganize the State. It would be a most hazardous principle to assert that. No, sir; the framers of your Constitution intended no such thing. They did not leave this great question untouched; and when we study that great instrument I can hardly help but stop and contemplate the all-embracing wisdom that seemed to actuate them, for you can find hardly an exigency that may arise in the complicated affairs of government that they did not anticipate and provide for. They did foresee that in the progress of the Government some of the States might go into rebellion, that they might undertake themselves to absolve their connection with the General Government and set up some hostile government of their own; and they expressly provided for just such a case; and how gentlemen with this principle of the Constitution staring them in the face can fancy that States can lose their rights because more or less of the people have gone off into rebellion is marvelous to me. The principle of law everywhere is that no honest man shall lose a right by wrong or usurpation. The act of rebellion is void. It may have physical force for the moment to displace rights; but the law never yields to any such power as that. The law never anywhere acknowledges that right can be overthrown by wrongful action. They, then, who contend that the State governments are lost, obliterated, blotted out, are contending against the face and eyes of the Constitution. Has that said any such thing? No, sir. It has said that the Federal Government shall guaranty to every State a republican form of government; and if a portion of the people undertake to overthrow their Government and set up another, it is the manifest duty of the General Government immediately to interfere, and, if necessary, to interpose the strong arm of its power to prevent such a state of things. Precisely that state of things is upon us, and this bill proceeds upon that idea and discards absolutely the notion that States may lose their rights and that they may be abrogated and may be reduced to the condition of Territories. It denies any such thing as that. No sound principle can be adopted that warrants any such thing.

Then, sir, what is the manifest duty of this Government now? I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Cowan] the other day talked about selling bear-skins before you had caught the bear, about our troubling ourselves about these questions before they arise. I agree to that; but have they not arisen? Are they not pressed on our consideration in every possible shape all the time? Will the question keep quiet and lie still? No, sir. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of loyal men pressed down by the arms of rebels, overpowered, their property destroyed, their houses burned over their heads, their lives jeopardized by rebellion, and they look to the strong arm of the Federal Government to reinstate them in their rights and protect their States in the relation they formerly held; and it is the object and purpose of the bill to say to them, "So far as the General Government can reach your case, we will do so; we are not about to leave you without any redress; we are going to take you loyal men by the hand and lead you back again to the old Government and protect you against the hell-hounds that are seeking to rob you of your rights and overthrow the Government." They have a right to ask that at our hands. It is our duty to spend our lives and our property, ay, and our honor is involved in their protection.

I am not going to argue this bill at length; I did not intend to say a word upon it at this stage of the proceedings; but I wish to say again that this bill has kept close hold, if I may say so, along the line of the Constitution. It has been regardful of the rights of loyal men everywhere. On the one hand it has extended to them aid and help and relieved them from all external restraints just so far as is consistent with their safety. On the other hand it has endeavored to discriminate in favor of the General Government, and to show so far as we can precisely how far the General Government can safely go in permitting the rebellious States to come back, for there is no loyal man North or South that would wish to come in here until his State was in such a condition that he could be the real representative of a majority of the people there. If a man were received upon this floor or that of the other House, until he was truly the representative of the people from whence he came, his condition would be entirely anomalous, his word would not go forth with power and authority; he would be like one among us representatives that had no constituents behind him, that represented nobody. No honorable man in the southern States would wish to be here our associate until he could say "I stand on this floor representing a loyal constituency that are as anxious to uphold the Government as are you," and the moment that he can say that this bill allows him to stand here my equal and the equal of anybody else on this floor or on the floor of the House of Representatives. No honorable man should want anything more. No honorable man should put up with anything less.

Mr. President, the question is so large that when one gets into it he is tempted into details that I feel there is no time now to indulge in. The bill prescribes, as I have said, that there shall be a military governor in each of these States until he can ascertain that a majority are willing to return it; and he is to ascertain just as soon as it can be done by the appointment of certain commissioners who are to go out and take a census of the people and ascertain their wishes and desires on this subject, and ascertain whether there are really a majority of the people in the State that propose to come back who are truly loyal and could maintain a government. The bill provides that the military governor shall do this, and the very moment it becomes certain that there are a majority able to do this, the military governor's power is to cease, and it is to be resigned into civil hands who are to go on and organize the State. Who will say that is not right? Of course it is right. So the bill goes on to prescribe the form of proceeding; and I do not suppose that any man here will object to all that, and therefore I leave it.

The latter part of the bill goes on to define the principles which shall be adopted in the new constitution that they shall frame, and that, I suppose, will be the portion of the bill which will receive more criticism than any other. The bill prescribes that each of these States shall have a republican form of government; and now the question is, how can you, with the light of our present experience, set up a republican form of government? I think that the great Union party of the country are altogether convinced that slavery mixed up in a Government is so unsafe, so liable to overthrow that it cannot be admitted as an element in a State government. The sad experience of this terrible revolution has, as we Union men believe, grown out of the institution of slavery alone, and this war is the legitimate and natural fruit of that state of things. Would we then, in guarantying a republican form of government, suffer it to be mixed up with anomalous elements calculated to immediately destroy what we set up? In the light of our present experience, that, to say the least of it, would be folly. Therefore this bill has taken special pains to say that the new government shall, in its constitution, proclaim emancipation as a condition upon which it shall be permitted to come into the Union.

There was a time when a precedent like this would have been deemed unconstitutional. I know it made a great controversy whether when a State was about to come into the Union we might prescribe any particular principle for its State constitution. We have done so, however, in every State that we have ever admitted, and yet perhaps it never was entirely settled. But in the light of our present experience I ask any man who is a lover of peace and who intends to make a constitution that shall live forever, saying nothing of the wrong, saying nothing of slavery in any other than a political point of view, would it be safe, would it be wise for us in admitting States back into this Union to permit them to come with the very element that had carried them out, with the very seeds of destruction which had destroyed them already? No, sir, we would not do it. The framers of this bill have sedulously shut it out, and made it a condition on which the seceded States shall come back that it shall be a fundamental principle of their constitution that slavery is excluded. If there is a Republican in the Senate who objects to that I am sorry for it.

Gentlemen admonish me that I have not time to take up this bill item by item. It is unnecessary if gentlemen have read it, for, as I have said before, there is nothing intricate about it. There is nothing but what a gentleman can understand at the first reading of the bill. There is no necessity for that long, careful, and anxious study of its principles that the Senator from Missouri seems to insinuate. It is as easily understood as it is read. It is plain, palpable, and in my judgment equitable and just and fair in all its provisions. I know it was got up with great care by a gentleman who thoroughly understood the workings of the institution of slavery, whose mind had been drawn to it, and who is exceedingly capable of framing an instrument of the kind. I believe it met the approbation of the entire Republican or Union party in the House of Representatives. I can see no objection to its provisions here. I shall make no further argument upon it unless some Senator points out something in its provisions that he deems unjust, inequitable, or wrong. If he does that, I shall attempt to answer.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as I said before, gives the whole question the go-by. It establishes nothing. It does not enlighten the people of the seceded States upon what principle they are to be admitted into this Union again. It barely postpones the settlement. It does not answer the question which as I said has been and will be asked every day and every hour; and the people will ask, if we adopt it, how it happened that at this long session when the question was before us we gave it the go-by. Your political enemies will stand by saying it was because you dared not utter the objectionable sentiments that you intend to bind upon the South; that you have dodged the entire question when it was before you, because you dared not show your hand and give them a principle of equity, justice, and right to go upon. They will have a right to say it. We have no right to blink the question. It is a great question that is most anxiously looked to in all the seceded States by every loyal man. He is told by our political enemies, "They will not let you back on any equitable terms; they intend to make you hewers of wood and drawers of water, to reduce you to servitude." That is the cry.

Now, sir, I want to show my hand. I want to show in the face of the sun that they who undertake to announce these principles do so in utter falsifying of the principle we have laid down. I want to say, "We have passed a law on this subject, we have told everybody on what principle we would permit the seceded States to come back; we have yielded to them everything that their condition can require; we have dealt equitably, generously, righteously with them, and we propose to do that throughout." I do not like to go among my constituents and have it said, "The House of Representatives got up a very equitable bill and established just principles upon which they might be admitted back into the Union, but when it came up in the Senate you gave it the go-by, and passed a skeleton that amounts to nothing; and that, too," they will say, "because it was not your intention to deal generously by these people, but you intend to reduce them to utter servitude." I say we should declare our principle, as this bill does, and legislate equitably and justly. I hope the bill will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CARLILE. If I supposed that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri could be adopted, I should not detain the Senate by a word of remark on this proposition; and now, until after a vote can be had to ascertain the sense of the Senate as to the proposed amendment, I will refrain from entering into any discussion of the bill further than to show, if I can, that all the bill proposes to do to remedy existing evils will be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment.

All that the bill proposes to do, I say, in this great work of reconstruction, to which the Senator from Ohio has referred, will be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri. If Senators will look at the second section of the bill they will find that it is expressly provided that the provisions contained in it looking to reconstruction are not to be enforced and are not to have any life until after the suppression of the rebellion. There can therefore be no pressing necessity for the action of the Senate on the bill at this period in our deliberations, when I presume the large majority of its members have calculated on being able within three or four days to leave this city for their homes. Under the circumstances, after an exhausting session of near seven months, and I venture to say the most exhausting session that has ever been held since the foundation of the Government, there can be no necessity for prolonging that session and keeping members here in this exhausted state to act upon a bill which does not propose to have effect or to go into operation, so far as the great work is concerned which it is claimed we should act upon, until after the suppression of the rebellion.

The second section of this bill expressly provides that "so soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed" the bill shall go into operation. The Senate will therefore see that there is no pressing necessity for this bill, unless it be a necessity to provide gentlemen with gubernatorial names and brigadier generals' salaries in States of the Union where they cannot exert power one rod beyond the military lines. The provisions of the bill must necessarily remain dormant until the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. WADE. I do not wish to make another argument; but if the Senator will look at the first section he will find that the bill proposes a provisional military governor and prescribes his duties throughout all stages of the rebellion, from the time we take any foothold in the State until it joins the Union again.

Mr. CARLILE. The first section of the bill is the only one now that can be effective, and that merely provides for the appointment by the Executive of a provisional governor "whose pay and emoluments shall not exceed that of a brigadier general of volunteers, who shall be charged with the civil administration of such State until a State government therein shall be recognized as hereinafter provided." When is that to be done by the bill? Not until after the rebellion has been suppressed; not until "military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed in the State" is this work of reconstruction to be commenced; and it is that, the Senate will bear in mind, which I am discussing now, for that is the reason assigned why we should act at this time on this bill. It is not that this military governor over the few acres of ground on which he may be able to exercise authority shall levy and collect taxes and pay the expenses arising within his limited sphere of action, and the surplus, if any, put into the Federal Treasury, but the argument used to the Senate why they should now act on this bill is that the great work of reconstruction may be entered upon and that the people of this country may know upon what terms the States declared to be in rebellion may return to the Union. If I misunderstood the Senator I desire to be corrected, but I so understood his argument.

A part of the Senator's argument was as able an argument as any Senator can make on this floor on this bill. He tells us that the Executive has no right to prescribe the rules upon which these States may be received back into the Union, and he tells us that we have no power to overthrow the State governments; once a State, with him always a State. I agree with him in that. He says that he does not maintain that the State governments are obliterated, and that he who does is contending against the Constitution. I agree fully with the Senator from Ohio in that, and the marvel with me is how the Senator can advocate this bill which does all this. This bill not only maintains that the State governments are overthrown, but so far as its power lies recognizes and assumes the right to overthrow the State governments if that work is not already accomplished. If there be a State where the rebel, the traitor to his country and his God, has failed in overthrowing the State government, this bill accomplishes that work which he, the traitor, began. If the President of the United States has no right to prescribe rules for the return of the rebellious States, will the Senator from Ohio, able as he is, be kind enough to enlighten one humble as myself by pointing out to me the provision of the Constitution authorizing him as a Senator to exercise any more power upon this subject than the President can exercise?

Mr. WADE. Congress.

Mr. CARLILE. Then as part of Congress or as the whole of Congress, I challenge the Senator from Ohio to show me the authority in Congress to exercise this power. The truth is that the title of this bill is an insult to the understanding of every intelligent man in the nation, and the bill itself is one of the most revolutionary that ever was proposed in a deliberative body claiming to be the representatives of a free people. Unwilling as I am to trespass on the time of the Senate, anxious as I am for an early adjournment, refraining as I have done for the last six months from occupying fifteen minutes even of the time of this body, I am unwilling to allow such a measure as this to pass without giving to it such consideration and such discussion as I may be able to do.

Mr. President, years back in our history, forty odd years ago, a question far beneath this in importance and significance was mooted in the Congress of the United States that gave such alarm to the author of the Declaration of Independence that he said it fell upon his ear like the fire-bell at midnight; and what was that question compared to this? It was insignificant; it was but a grain of sand upon the sea-shore compared to the mountain. That was a proposition on the part of the United States to impose upon the then inhabitants of the Territories seeking admission into the Union a restriction upon their right of self-government when they became a State; and after one of the most exhaustive and learned debates that is connected with our history or that ever graced the Capitol of the nation, that assumption for Congress was abandoned. It remained for the last Congress to revive it and to do what its predecessors would not do. It was permitted to rest as the settled law of the land that the Congress of the United States had no power to impose by law limitations affecting the right of the people of a State to regulate their own domestic affairs, even when sought to be applied to the inhabitants of a Territory seeking admission into the Union; and such was the settled action of Congress until reversed at its last session when Congress assumed to create a State out of a portion of the territory of the State which I represent. I say "assumed," for it was but an assumption. The debate to which I have referred established the want of power in Congress, and so plain was it made that the advocates of the power sought to be exercised abandoned the discussion and abandoned the assumption.

No State can have a republican form of government, no State has a republican government, when that government, no matter what are its provisions, is prescribed to them by another outside of their limits. A republican form of government must emanate and emanate alone from the people that are to be governed. It belongs not to the Congress of the United States; it belongs not to thirty-three States of this Union to prescribe for the smallest State within its folds a constitution or form of government. If you have a right to impose a limitation upon this power as to one subject of domestic legislation you have a right to impose it upon every subject. If you have the right to make one provision of a constitution for a people you have the right to make the entire instrument itself.

Mr. WADE. I should like to ask the Senator this question: suppose a State should undertake to set up a monarchy in defiance of the General Government, what would be its duty?

Mr. CARLILE. Its duty is as plain as the noonday sun in a clear and cloudless sky; its duty is prescribed in the instrument which we have sworn to support; and that is to guaranty to the people there a republican form of government which they had adopted for themselves, and which was in existence at the time the attempted monarchy was sought to be substituted for it. There is the answer to the Senator. The Senator would claim for the Congress of the United States sovereign powers, powers exercised alone by a despot and a tyrant, by governing through appointees of their own the sovereign States of this Union.

Mr. WILSON rose—

Mr. CARLILE. I am not done. I do not want unnecessarily to consume time; but in order to save gentlemen trouble I will let them know that I intend to discuss this thing for an hour or two.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me the floor for a moment?

Mr. CARLILE. Certainly.

PAY OF ARMY MUSICIANS.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution and put it on its passage to correct an act already passed. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to present it.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 77) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864.

Mr. WILSON. The resolution is absolutely necessary to prevent a mistaken construction of the act referred to, and I hope it will be put on its passage at once.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read three times, and passed. It provides that the word "musician," in the first section of the "Act to increase the pay of soldiers of the United States Army, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864, is not to be construed to include musicians (other than leaders) employed as members of brigade and regimental bands; but such members of bands are to be paid as heretofore, one fourth of the members of each band thirty-four dollars a month, one fourth of them twenty dollars a month, and the remaining half seventeen dollars a month.

RECESS.

Mr. CLARK. (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) By the indulgence of the Senator from Virginia I move that at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock; and I do it with a view of asking the Senate to allow me perhaps half an hour or three quarters of an hour when the Senate reassembles after the recess to dispose of a few private bills that are on the Calendar, which should be disposed of before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was really in hopes that this hot night we should not have a night session; it is so very uncomfortable. The Senator will have abundance of time in the morning to act upon these private bills which he takes to heart. We are sitting here as it seems to me now, rather waiting for business than anything else. There is an appropriation bill that a committee of conference have been unable to consider yet, and if we have no session to-night, it will give the members of that committee an opportunity perhaps to come to a conclusion upon it, and we can pass these bills in the morning. Now, we have had a discussion to-day, and it is apparent to every member of the Senate that we make very little progress by taking up these controverted questions and discussing them for hours.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The bill now before the Senate will be still further discussed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Indiana gives notice now that the bill under consideration will lead to protracted debate, as I understand, or rather it will take a good deal of time to consider. It is a very important matter. The one we had up this morning about the railroad is of the same character, so that really we accomplish nothing. If there was other business I, for one, would vote to proceed at once to it and let that be transacted, and then if we remain here we can dispose of these other bills.

Mr. CLARK. If this bill is to be discussed, if we are to adjourn in any decent season, the more necessity of meeting this evening. But I desire to say to the Senate that there are one or two little bills for the relief of some Army officers that ought to be passed so that they may go to the other House if there is any prospect of finishing them this session; and if it is delayed I fear they will be entirely defeated. They are meritorious and should be attended to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senator from Virginia would just as lief finish his speech to-morrow, and if this bill is to be pressed of course it has got to be discussed. It is the greatest question of the session, and I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to let the Senator from Virginia yield the floor, and devote the half hour between now and half past four o'clock to private bills. They ought to be passed, without question.

Mr. WADE. I would ask why it is that where there is a great measure or a small one pending that really ought to be determined, it cannot be determined? Have we fixed a time of adjournment?

Mr. CLARK. I do not desire to drive this debate over to to-morrow; I think the debate should be proceeded with, because we may want to-morrow for some other necessary measure. I only ask for twenty minutes or half an hour when the Senate first comes together this evening, when it is known that business is generally delayed for some half hour, to take up some two or three little bills that should be proceeded with. But I think we should not interrupt this debate; I wish it to go along, and it should go along to-day and this evening, and the sooner we get the debate out of the way and other measures out of the way, the sooner we can adjourn, and I am anxious we should do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I trust that course may be pursued. We have got a great deal of business to do, and Senators desire to express their views upon some of these questions, particularly on the question now before the Senate. There is a great deal of business besides that to be transacted. We do transact a good deal of business in the evening session as well as hear a great deal of discourse; but the first preliminary hour of the evening session is generally valuable for the business of the Senate, and later in the evening gentlemen advance their opinions and arguments in regard to questions pending. I think we should continue our evening sessions until we close. I am willing to sit here continuously, if necessary, until we can get to a conclusion; but I prefer the recess, as it gives us an opportunity properly to supply our animal system with the necessary condiments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire for a recess.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 297) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending 30th June, 1865.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following joint resolutions of the Senate, with an amendment to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard of the United States volunteers; and

A joint resolution (No. 58) in relation to the professors of the Military Academy at West Point.

RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Brown.]

Mr. CARLILE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio regards these States as States still, States in the Union. He regards an attempt at the overthrow of their governments, I take it from his argument, to be treason. He regards it his constitutional duty to prevent by all the means within the power of the Government that attempted overthrow. Now, I put this question to the Senator, and I hope he will answer it: where does he as a member of the Congress of the United States derive the constitutional power to govern a State by a Federal appointee? Where does the Senator derive the power to appoint a governor for a State, a State which he acknowledges to be in existence, a State government that he acknowledges to be in existence, a State government that he acknowledges it to be his duty to protect and maintain? By what provision of the Constitution does the Senator derive the authority to appoint for such a State an executive head?

Mr. WADE. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. CARLILE. Certainly.

Mr. WADE. As I have frequently said, the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government. When any State undertakes to set up a government in defiance of the Government of the United States, to establish an aristocracy or a monarchy, or anything but a republican government, the Constitution gives the power to the General Government to guaranty a republican government, and when it has given the power to it, it has given the means necessary to perform it. Is not that good law?

Mr. CARLILE. No, sir. Now, Mr. President, I will satisfy the Senator himself, I think; and really it is not necessary for me to attempt to satisfy him, for he is too good a lawyer not to know the meaning of the word "guaranty." What is it? Does the authority to "guaranty to each State in this Union a republican form of government" authorize this Union to set up a government, to create a government, or to make a government? Is the maker of a note the man who guaranties its payment? There is no man in the Senate who knows better the definition and legal significance of the word "guaranty" than the Senator from Ohio, and none, I am sure, is more familiar, too, with the power that was intended to be conferred by this provision of the Constitution.

Mr. WADE. I want an argument square. I do not like this dodging.

Mr. CARLILE. There is no dodging with me. I am going to meet it squarely.

Mr. WADE. Suppose a State of this Union undertakes to set up a monarchy, suppose it has elected its monarch, suppose he is on the throne, and sets up a government hostile to the United States, how shall the United States guaranty a republican government to the people of that State? They have got to do it. The Constitution says it shall be done. How? By keeping out of the boundary of the State? By this letting-alone principle that we hear of? Is that it?

Mr. CARLILE. The Senator is wandering entirely from the question. I answered the Senator a while ago how he was to get rid of the monarchy. I told him it was his duty, made so by this provision of the Constitution, to bring to bear the power of this Government to relieve the people of the State from that monarchy and maintain them in the possession and enjoyment of their State government organized by themselves and which existed before the attempted monarchy was forced upon them.

Mr. WADE. Let us stop right there. Suppose now that we have conquered them and the people are still bent on their monarchy; shall we not guaranty a republican government to them by putting one over them?

Mr. CARLILE. No, sir. If the Senator be right, Mr. Madison, the author of the Constitution, was wrong. I supposed that the Senator was familiar with the Federalist, and the Senator ought to be familiar with the discussions of this very same provision when the Constitution came before the people of the several States to be ratified or rejected. The Federalist is looked upon as a correct exposition of these very powers, and one of the objections by the many objectors at that day was not that the provision conferred power to do what is proposed to be done by this bill, but that an unscrupulous Congress, unmindful of their constitutional obligations, unmindful of their duty as representatives, regardless of the rights and liberties of the people and of the rights of their States that they were created for the purpose of protecting, might use as a pretext this provision to assert the very power the Senator proposes in this bill, and what is the reply? I read from the forty-third number of the Federalist:

"6. 'To guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government; to protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.'

"In a confederacy founded on republican principles and composed of republican members, the superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovations."

The very case put by the Senator; and how it is to be done is stated:

"The more intimate, the nature of such a Union may be, the greater interest have the members in the political institutions of each other; and the greater right to insist that the forms of government under which the compact was entered into should be substantially maintained."

"It may possibly be asked what need there could be of such a precaution, and whether it may not become a pretext for alterations in the State governments without the concurrence of the States themselves. These questions admit of ready answers. If the interposition of the General Government should not be needed, the provision for such an event will be a harmless superfluity only in the Constitution. But who can say what experiments may be produced by the caprice of particular States, by the ambition of enterprising leaders, or by the intrigues and influence of foreign Powers? To the second question it may be answered that if the General Government should interpose by virtue of this constitutional authority, it will be of course bound to pursue the authority. But the authority extends no further than to a guarantee of a republican form of government, which supposes a pre-existing government of the form which is to be guaranteed."

Now, sir, is the Senator answered? The people of the State, whether there is an attempt to overthrow the State government, or whether it has been a successful attempt as against the State itself, are to be relieved by the action of this Government in pursuance of the authority therein granted. It is not claimed or pretended, I suppose, by the Senator from Ohio or by any advocate of this bill, that under any other provision of the Constitution can a pretext be afforded for the assertion of such a power as this bill proposes to assert.

Mr. WILKINSON. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARLILE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILKINSON. Suppose the people of a State, four fifths of them, are opposed to a republican form of government, what then would the Senator from Virginia do?

Mr. CARLILE. Take the case the Senator supposes, how is he going to give them a republican form of government if four fifths of the people are opposed to it? What right has this Congress to make a government for the people of a State?

Mr. WILKINSON. I object to the Senator's answering one question by asking another.

Mr. CARLILE. I understood the Senator originated in Yankee land, and I wanted to follow the fashion of the Yankees, and I think he is successfully answered.

Mr. WILKINSON. Suppose the people of the State of South Carolina have determined that they will not have a republican form of government in that State, what would the Senator have the Government of the United States do under such circumstances?

Mr. CARLILE. I would have the Government of the United States do nothing that it has not the power under the Constitution to do, because I believe that the Government of the United States is a Government of limited powers. I believe it to be its duty under the grant of power in the Constitution to guaranty the existence of a preëxisting republican government. That government existed in South Carolina; the people have not determined, at least before this war they had not determined, to have any other than a republican form of government. We had recognized that government as a republican form of government by the recognition of the State in all its departments and the admission of all its national representatives. It is made the duty of the Government of the United States, not of Congress; and I desire to call the attention of the Senator to that, because it bears upon his assumption for Congress of power which does not belong to the Executive. It is not alone the duty of Congress to guaranty a republican form of government to the people of the several States; the extent of that guarantee is not limited alone to the means which Congress may employ; but the words of the Constitution are "the United States shall guaranty." Hence every department of the Government is equally bound; and Congress being the legislative branch of course participates to a greater extent in the discharge of that duty.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator to ask any question not entirely agreeable to him, but I desire to ask of him whether if the Government be overthrown in any one State by the people of that State, it is not the duty of the Government of the United States to restore that to its republican form even if a majority of the people in that State are opposed to the republican form.

Mr. CARLILE. The fact of my being here I think should be an answer to the Senator's question. The people of each State of this Union have by becoming parties to the Constitution bound themselves by that compact; and they have not the right to overthrow the State government which recognizes that obligation by any power short of that which results in success; but if they are able to prevent the United States through its power from enforcing this provision of the Constitution, then I suppose they can do it, but otherwise not.

Mr. CLARK. That does not quite meet the question. They have not the right to overthrow; that is very clear; but suppose they actually have done it, have overthrown, then the question I desire to put is whether it is not the duty of this Government to restore it.

Mr. CARLILE. How, though? By pursuing the authority conferred upon the United States, not by creating a new government, not by restricting them in the exercise of any one prerogative that belongs to them, not by separating one of their local limbs of sovereignty that belonged to them and bringing them into the Union amputated, with the badge of inequality and degradation placed upon them, as you placed upon the so-called State of West Virginia.

Mr. CLARK. Then will the Senator allow me to inquire, if it becomes necessary, in order to restore that government, to set up within that State a provisional government, is not the power clearly given to Congress or the United States Government to set it up? Does he not recognize the decision of the Supreme Court that when a power is given all the requisites to its exercise are given, if not absolutely prohibited by the Constitution?

Mr. CARLILE. It is not essential to this argument for me to answer the Senator from New Hampshire, not that I am not disposed to do it—

Mr. CLARK. I do not desire an answer particularly.

Mr. CARLILE. Or that I cannot do so; but the Senator from New Hampshire will bear in mind that what I called his attention to in the opening of this argument was the second section of this bill which does not propose a provisional government as a war measure and to last only while the rebellion remains; but it does not propose to exercise any governmental power except what is exercised through its appointee as governor until after military resistance shall have been suppressed.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that entirely. I understand that the people are to be held by this provisional governor until the rebellion is subdued, and this is to be the provisional means of bringing back the old form of government.

Mr. CARLILE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to tell me how one Federal appointee, called a governor, is to hold a State which your armies have as yet been unable to hold.

Mr. CLARK. He is to hold it by means of the Army until the rebellion is entirely done; the same as we have held Tennessee.

Mr. CARLILE. You have no authority to appoint a governor or any civil officer in that State, unless you are compelled to resort to military power to carry out your constitutional obligations and to remove the obstacles which are in the way of exercise of civil authority through the agents of the people themselves, which they have established by virtue of their existing government. No such power is given under any provision of the Constitution; none could have been given without your entirely changing the whole character of this Government, which is based upon the fundamental principle that the military power shall always be subordinate to the civil. One of the brightest spots in the character of the Father of his Country is the fact that during our revolutionary struggle he ever maintained the supremacy of the civil power; and so highly was that estimated by the Congress that received from him his resignation as Commander-in-Chief of the armies that the President, Thomas Jefferson, who was instructed to make the address, alluded to it in the most flattering and complimentary terms:

"Called upon by your country to defend its invaded rights, you accepted the sacred charge before it had formed alliances, and while it was without funds or a Government to support you. You have conducted the great military contest with wisdom and fortitude, invariably regarding the rights of the civil power through all disasters and changes."

I regret, sir, that truth compels me to say that such a speech could not be made now to those who have conducted the military power of this country in this war. But, sir, the Senator from Ohio says the Union is to be preserved. So say I. Upon what principle are these States to come back into the Union? The people, says the Senator from Ohio, will meet you with that inquiry. Sir, when was ever such an inquiry suggested to the brain of any loyal man in this Union? When was such an inquiry ever put? Never until after a policy different from that which characterized the commencement of this struggle was entered upon by the party in power. All said the Union was to be restored; all accepted the struggle as the use of the military power of the Government in the restoration of the Union. What Union? The Union of the Constitution. The Union into which new States are to be admitted. It is not into "a Union," but into "this Union" that the States are admitted. What Union? The Union of the Constitution, none other; and he who seeks to preserve the Union can only do it by an observance of the Constitution and the use of the constitutional means to restore it, not reconstruct it.

Where do you derive the power to reconstruct this Union? What Union are you the representatives of? What is the Union which has given to you your seats? It is the Union as it has existed from 1789; it is the Union of which the Constitution of the United States is the only bond; it is a Union of limited and delegated powers, bounded, as Mr. Adams said, on one hand by the right of the States to internal legislation, and on the other by the laws and usages of nations. In this Union, created by this Constitution, of limited and delegated powers, all prescribed and written in the instrument, you propose to exercise your legislative power by usurping the rights and liberties of the people, a power which all the people you represent could not use or could not exert without the destruction of the Union which the Constitution formed. There is no power in this Government, there is no power in the parties to this Government, there is no power in all the States of this Union to prescribe a constitution for the little State of Rhode Island. If every other State in the Union, the adhering as well as the rebellious States, if every man, woman, and child in them were to meet and prescribe a constitution for the people of Rhode Island, they would have no power or authority to do so under the Union; and tell me where the people's representatives derive the power to do that which all the people in their collective capacity, save the small minority that constitutes that State, cannot do?

When I heard the learned Senator from Wisconsin, now occupying the chair, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] a few days ago on this floor say that after this war we were to have a better Union than we have ever had, the expression of the sentiment not only astonished me but it sunk into my heart and impressed itself upon my memory never to be effaced. Where do you derive the power or the authority to give us any other Union than that which the Constitution created? Who is willing to intrust even to Senators of this day the right of forming a Union which it is to be supposed will be superior and above the Union that the patriots of the Revolution formed?

It is that mischievous sentiment, it is that mischievous exercise of power that has prolonged for more than three years the struggle in which we are engaged, and may prolong it for years to come. It is because gentlemen in their hatred it may be of rebellion, in their desire to punish those engaged in it, forget the obligations that they are under to the Constitution of their country, and forget the rights that the people they represent have secured to them under and by virtue of this Union which they would set aside and in the place of which they would put what they would call a better Union. Sir, I never expect to see a better Union than that formed by the authors of our present Constitution. I look upon it and have been taught to reverence it as the most beautiful, the most valuable system of government that was ever devised by man; and that Union is a Union to the extent of the powers conferred in the Constitution of the United States, and no further. Tell me the boundary of your power: if you attempt to embark beyond that Constitution, what protection is there left to the people of the several States, the State even which the Senator from Ohio represents as well as every other State; that it may be able to preserve its right of State sovereignty as secured to it by this very Union which is to be superseded, and for the preservation of which the Union itself was formed?

The Senator from Ohio, in the remarks which he has submitted upon this bill, has said that he did not wish to subjugate these people, and he denied our right to subjugate them. He was not for subjugating them, and not for letting them into the Union upon equal terms with the other States. I put it to the Senator from Ohio if this bill itself is not a subjugation of the people upon whom it is proposed to operate. You provide that after the suppression of this rebellion this provisional governor may summon a convention to form a constitution, not to amend the existing constitution but to form a constitution and to prescribe—

Mr. WADE. I presume they can take the one they have if they like it better in that shape.

Mr. CARLILE. Let the Senator wait a bit and I will get his attention to this section of the bill. That convention is to meet, a convention composed of delegates alone who have sworn allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, who have taken upon themselves the solemn obligation which the last Congress provided should be taken by all holding office under the Government of the United States in the act of July 2, 1862, I believe, that convention to be selected alone by electors who have taken the oath of allegiance to the United States; and yet if that convention does not impose the restrictions which this bill seeks to impose upon these States, it is to be dissolved. That convention is not to be allowed under this bill to adopt if it chooses a constitution republican in form, but it must adopt certain provisions prescribed in this bill; and if they in the exercise of the rights that belong to an unsubjugated people refuse to adopt these provisions they are to be dissolved and dispersed, and the privilege of erecting a government for themselves denied to them, and they are to go out into the country, after military resistance has ceased, after there is no obstruction to the execution of the laws, after all the various machinery of this Government is working smoothly and quietly, and remain until the President shall become satisfied that another convention composed of subjugated delegates will do what this bill declares they shall do before they can ever resume the right of self-government and have the benefit of the civil administration of the laws under that government which they have formed for themselves. If I understand the word "subjugate," no exertion of power that can be conceived of by the autocrat of Russia or by any tyrant that ever sat upon a throne more completely subjugates a free people than this provision of this bill.

There is another feature in connection with this subject which the gentleman from Ohio and the advocates of this bill seem to me to have entirely overlooked. The existence of the institution of slavery in a State or any other domestic institution does not make the government republican or anti-republican in form. It is not a governmental power that recognizes the existence of any particular institution in a State. It is derived from the legislative power, from the law-making power; and will the Senator contend that the State of Massachusetts—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause. The Senate will now take a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m., and Mr. ANTHONY took the chair and called the Senate to order.

JOHN HASTINGS.

Mr. CLARK. I desire the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 274, for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburg.

There being no objection, the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of John Hastings, as collector of the customs at the port of Pittsburg, to give him credit for the sum of $9,956 62, the amount of the public money of which he was robbed on the 10th of March, 1854, while acting in that capacity.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WADE. I think we had better take up the measure we were upon before the recess and go on with it.

Mr. CLARK. Give us half an hour for my bills.

Mr. WADE. Very well; I will give you half an hour.

Mr. GRIMES. I withdraw the call for the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR N. S. BRENTON.

Mr. ANTHONY, (the President pro tempore having resumed the chair.) I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 328.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Major N. S. Brenton, a paymaster in the United States Army, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow Major N. S. Brenton, on the settlement of his accounts, a credit of $2,600,000 for money in his hands as paymaster in the Army, on board the steamer Ruth, and destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th of August, 1863.

Mr. GRIMES. Let the report be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can state the circumstances, though the report is very brief. This large amount of money was on board the steamer Ruth in charge of Paymaster Brenton. The steamer was fired by rebel incendiaries at the time they determined to prevent the navigation of the Mississippi, and the money, which was in greenbacks, was destroyed. A military commission and a commission from the Treasury Department proceeded to the spot, examined the whole affair, and have reported that the destruction was complete. The report of the Treasury commission is with the report of the committee. It is pretty long; but it was so large an amount that the committee examined it with great care. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] was kind enough to examine it after me, and we thought that the proof was complete that every box containing the money had been destroyed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The report is quite lengthy.

Mr. ANTHONY. The report proper is quite short, but it embodies the report of the commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the satisfactory portion of the evidence. The commission was appointed by the Treasury Department for the purpose of examining it, and there cannot be any doubt. No court would hesitate a moment to say the property was destroyed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has sent for the report. It is not on file.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not insist on the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. JAMESON.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, the bill (S. No. 299) for the relief of William H. Jameson, a paymaster in the United States Army, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow Major William H. Jameson, on settlement of his accounts, a credit of $959 14 for money in his hands as paymaster in the Army, on board the steamer Ruth, and destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th of August, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. ROBINSON.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask leave to make a report. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 460) for the relief of Sarah Robinson, widow of Hon. John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana, have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration. It will create no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to the account of Hon. John L. Robinson, late United States marshal, with the Department, the sum $675 for services rendered by him in making preparations for the taking of the census of 1860; and in the legal adjudication of his accounts as marshal, judgment thereon is to be rendered only for the balance found to be due, without any interest or penalties whatever.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us have the report read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will explain.

Mr. GRIMES. I would rather hear the report.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is no written report. The person for the relief of whose estate this bill is reported was marshal of Indiana. In that capacity he was required to commence the preliminary proceedings for taking the census. He did so; and it was in evidence that he performed about one half the work of taking the census. He then died. His successor was appointed and completed the census. The money for taking the census is paid in proportion to the amount of population and statistics, and the whole amount was paid to the successor of Mr. Robinson, he receiving nothing whatever. This bill is to allow his estate to be credited in the settlement of his accounts. His estate is a debtor to the Government, and this is to credit on his account the compensation due to him for the portion of work which he performed in taking the census.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out the last line of the bill in these words, "without any interest or penalties whatever."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope that amendment will not be made. It will not be just and right to make the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems, from the report of the Comptroller, that this man was indebted before his death to the United States Government in the sum of $15,000 and over. It is now claimed that he is entitled to a credit of $600, as I understand, or thereabouts, and this bill is to allow the Comptroller to credit him with that amount. The last clause says that he shall be entitled to that and judgment shall be rendered for the balance due; and then it goes on and says that it shall be rendered also without any interest or any penalties, applying, as I understand the phraseology, to the whole judgment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; it applies to the $600.

Mr. GRIMES. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. GRIMES. Striking out the words "without any interest or penalties whatever" would allow the court to render judgment for the balance due. The words are manifestly improper there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY the title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of the estate of John L. Robinson."

CHARLES A. PITCHER.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Charles A. Pitcher was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Charles A. Pitcher the sum of $5,000 for damages sustained by reason of the infringement of a patent on a machine for making brooms, and the use of the same in the penitentiary of the United States, from November 1, 1859, to September 20, 1862.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to have the report read. It is a very short one.

Several SENATORS. No, no; it is all right.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the memorial and papers in relation to the claim of Charles A. Pitcher, respectfully submit the following report and the accompanying bill for the relief of the memorialist.

The claim in this case is for damages for the use of several patent machines for making brooms in the penitentiary of the United States from the 1st of November, 1859, to the 20th of September, 1862.

The facts in the case are substantially set forth in the report of the inspectors of the penitentiary, which is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 5, 1862.

GENTLEMEN: In obedience to a resolution passed at your last meeting, referring to me the letter of Charles A. Pitcher, I respectfully report that the following appear to be the facts in the case: On the 1st of November, 1857, letters patent were granted to Spencer Rowe, of Baltimore, Maryland, for an "improvement in machines for making brooms." On the 4th day of the same month he regularly assigned and transferred all his right and title in the patent to John Fox, and on the 2d day of April, 1861, Fox sold and transferred to Charles A. Pitcher all right and title to the patent under the assignment made by Rowe, together with any right or claim he (Fox) might have for any infringement of the said patent right. Both these assignments were duly recorded in the Patent Office, as required by law. They are in proper form and prima facie of legal force and effect. Notwithstanding the sale which Rowe had already made of his whole patent right, he entered into an agreement with Warden Thornley, on the 16th day of February, 1858, to set up and run his machines in the penitentiary, hiring of Thornley the necessary workmen from among the convicts, and agreeing to pay for their labor forty cents a day each. Rowe failed to fulfill his agreement, and, under the provisions of his contract, the apparatus was sold and bid in by the then warden, and has ever since been used in manufacturing brooms in the penitentiary. Some two or three new machines have also been added. Warden Thornley committed an evident error in failing to examine the records before he made any agreement with Rowe for the use of his patent in the penitentiary. If he had exercised proper precaution in this respect, no difficulty could have occurred, and no claim for an infringement could have arisen. Since the surrender of Rowe's contract of February 16, 1858, the machines have been in use under successive wardens, and broom-making constitutes an important part of the labor of the convicts. I am not prepared to say what saving is effected by the use of Rowe's patent over the manufacture by hand or by free machinery, but, as the case now stands, it seems clear that the use of the machinery on hand is an infringement on the legal rights of Mr. Pitcher. No claim for damages, however, can be settled either by the warden or by the inspectors, for it was long since decided, and especially by Chief Justice Taney, when Attorney General of the United States, that no disbursing or accounting officer has any right to assess and pay damages, as by so doing appropriations of money might be diverted from their legitimate objects, and a door opened for collusion and fraud when an individual has been damaged by the action of the Government or of its agents. Congress alone can redress the injury, and in this case Mr. Pitcher is unquestionably entitled to compensation to be determined and appropriated for by that body.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

J. M. BRODHEAD,

Committee of the Board of Inspectors.

THE BOARD OF INSPECTORS UNITED STATES PENITENTIARY, Washington, District of Columbia.

Adopted by the board of inspectors, February 5, 1862.

C. ROSMER, Clerk.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, May 19, 1862.

I concur in the statement of facts made by the inspectors of the penitentiary, and also in the opinion expressed by them, that Mr. Pitcher is entitled to compensation for the use of his patent in the penitentiary. The subject is respectfully referred to Congress for such action as may be deemed expedient.

CALEB B. SMITH,

Secretary.

After a lengthy and careful examination of all the papers in this case, the committee concur with the opinion expressed by the board of inspectors and the Secretary, that the memorialist is entitled to compensation for the use of the invention.

The great difficulty has been to ascertain the proper amount of damages which should be allowed. The Government, as appears from the testimony of the wardens, officers of the penitentiary, and others, has received a benefit from the use of this machine in the penitentiary, for the time mentioned, of over twenty thousand dollars over what it could have realized from manual labor and machinery not patented. Your committee are of opinion that justice would demand that the memorialist should receive at least one fourth of this profit.

We are aware a much larger amount could be recovered by law against an individual for such infringement of a patent as the Government has made in this case, but they think the Government cannot be held to such liability under all the circumstances.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN WILLIAMS.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 569) for the relief of John Williams, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. It appropriates $68 75 to pay for twenty-five cords of wood used by the Government two years ago, and I ask the Senate to put it on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Quartermaster General to audit and pay the account of John Williams, for twenty-five cords of wood, at $2 75 per cord, delivered by him to the United States, at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, under a contract made with the quartermaster of the twenty-first regiment Wisconsin volunteers, the account amounting to $68 75.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of R. G. Murphy, late Indian agent for the Sioux Indians, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 346) for the relief of Richard G. Murphy. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Ramsey, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 468) to amend an act for the relief of Valentine Wehrheim, approved June 12, 1860, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 390) for the relief of Emily A. Lyon, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 478) for the relief of Charles M. Pott, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca S. Harrison, widow of Lieutenant Horace N. Harrison, United States Navy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 347) for the relief of Rebecca S. Harrison. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

PASSENGERS IN STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 510.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 510) further to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels.

It provides that the term "contiguous territory," in the first section of the act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, approved March 3, 1855, shall not be held to extend to any port or place connecting with any interoceanic route through Mexico; and that the provisions of the eleventh section of that act shall extend to all vessels whose passengers, or any part of them, are or shall be bound from or to any of the ports or places therein mentioned, by way of any overland route or routes through Mexico or Central America.

Hereafter there are to be delivered to masters or owners of vessels three copies of the inspectors' certificates directed to be given them by collectors or other chief officers of the customs, by the twenty-fifth section of the act of August 30, 1852, one of which copies shall be placed, and at all times kept, in some conspicuous place in the vessel, where it will be most likely to be discovered by steerage passengers, and the others as now provided by law; and the penalty for neglecting or refusing to place and keep up such additional copy shall be the same as is provided by the twenty-fifth section of that act in the other cases therein mentioned. The list of passengers required to be kept by section thirty-five of the act of August 30, 1852, is also to be open to the inspection of any passenger during all reasonable hours; and after any clearance is granted, but before the vessel shall be allowed to depart, the master or other person in charge of such vessel carrying passengers is to file with the collector, or other officer of the customs granting the clearance, a list, verified by the oath of the master, or other agent, or owner of the vessel, of all passengers received or to be received on the vessel so cleared, for conveyance during the proposed voyage, designating cabin and steerage passengers distinctly; and on the receipt by such customs officer of the full list so verified, a departure permit shall be given, without which no vessel conveying passengers shall go to sea; and such departure permit shall be shown to the pilot of each vessel before he shall have authority to take the vessel to sea; and any pilot who shall without such authority being shown to him pilot a vessel to sea shall be subject to a fine of $100, and a revocation of his license.

The master or commander of any vessel carrying passengers from any port or ports in the United States to any port or place in Mexico or Central America is, immediately on arriving at such last-mentioned port or place, to deliver to the United States consul, vice consul, or commercial agent at such port two copies of the list of passengers required to be kept on such vessel by section thirty-five of the act of August 30, 1852, embracing all the passengers on board the vessel at any time during its voyage up to its arrival, and duly verified by the oath of such master or commander, and by the inspection of the consul, vice consul, or commercial agent previous to or at the landing of the passengers; one of which copies the consul, vice consul, or commercial agent shall file in his office, and the other of which he shall transmit, without delay, to the collector of the port in the United States from which the vessel last cleared. The bill also declares that the provisions of section twelve of the "act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam," approved July 7, 1838, shall be extended to the owner or owners of any steamboat or other vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam, and to all public officers, by or in consequence of whose fraud, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law, the life or lives of any person or persons on board such steamboat or vessel may be destroyed. If the owner or owners, master, commander, or other person in charge of any steamboat or other vessel, shall willfully present or cause to be presented any false or fraudulent list or lists of its passengers, or copies thereof, to any consul, vice consul, commercial agent, collector, or other custom-house officer, or of the departure permit to any pilot, he or they shall be held guilty of misdemeanor, and on conviction be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years, and the vessel be liable to seizure and forfeiture.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared a synopsis of such of the laws relating to the carriage of passengers, and their safety on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, as he shall think expedient, and have the same printed in convenient form to be framed under glass, and give to any such vessel two copies, on application of its owners or master, who shall, without unnecessary delay, have the same framed under glass, and place and keep them in conspicuous places in such vessel, in the same manner as is provided by law in regard to certificates of inspectors; and no clearance is to be issued to such vessel until the collector or other chief officer of the customs shall be satisfied that these provisions have been complied with by such owners or master; and in case such owners or master shall neglect or refuse to comply, he or they shall furthermore forfeit and pay for each offense $100, and such fine shall be a lien upon the vessel until paid. Informers are to be entitled to one half of any penalty or fine collected under this act or the act of March 3, 1855, upon their information. It is also provided that all steamers and other vessels belonging to a citizen or to citizens of the United States, and bound from any port in the United States to any other port therein, or to any foreign port, or from any foreign port to any port in the United States, shall, before clearance, receive on board all such bullion, coin, United States notes and bonds and other securities as the Government of the United States or any department thereof, or any minister, consul, vice consul, or commercial or other agent of the United States abroad shall offer, and shall securely convey and promptly deliver the same to the proper authorities or consignees on arriving at the port of destination, and shall receive for such service such reasonable compensation as may be allowed to other carriers in the ordinary transactions of business.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I feel myself called upon in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to state that it was not expected that this bill could pass at this session without considerable discussion and debate. It involves very important questions, and the attention of the Senate ought to be called to it. It is to regulate, and it is asserted on one side that it will destroy the business of transporting passengers on the Pacific coast entirely, as now constituted, and will raise the price. It is contended on the other side that it will not have such an effect. I did not myself, although I am a member of the committee, anticipate that the bill would be taken up and pressed during the present session; and that, I think, was rather the understanding and expectation of the whole committee. They agreed to report the bill to call public attention to it, and expected, as it involved matters of the greatest importance, that it would not be passed through the Senate without any notice being taken of it and in an informal way in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. As the time has arrived for the other bill, I should myself prefer, without meaning to prejudice this bill at all, that we should proceed with the regular order.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am a little surprised at any objection being made to this bill. I was informed—perhaps I may have been misinformed—that there was no objection to this bill on the part of the Committee on Commerce, and that it was reported with their full assent. It has been passed by the House of Representatives, and passed without controversy. We make no change with regard to the right of vessels to carry passengers between this side of the continent and the side which I have the honor in part to represent. It is giving force to a police regulation of some fourteen years ago, and applying it as well to Mexico as to Central America, changing none of the rules except making such provision or particular provisions as will secure the enforcement of the law. Some measure like this has been one of great importance to the people of the coast of the Pacific, and I think of equal importance to the people of the Atlantic coast; for it is from the East to the West and again from the West to the East that we maintain our intercommunication.

I myself have suffered great wrong. Hardly any person who has been compelled to make transits between the East and the West has not suffered great wrongs. I have traveled on a ship where, by the law of Congress, they were not entitled to carry more than four or five hundred passengers, and have seen the ship crowded with fifteen hundred; when, instead of having berths to rest in, the decks were crowded, the passengers piled about all parts of the ship, and standing up, so that in the day-time they could hardly find room on the deck. The laws have not been sufficient to restrain this imposition of steamship companies upon the people traveling between California, Oregon, and Washington Territory and the States on this side.

There have been several attempts to remedy this. It belongs particularly to the people of my coast to see that there is proper legislation on this subject, for we are most deeply concerned in it; and no one lives on the shores of the Pacific that does not look at the transit route sometimes as a thing of hope, but more frequently as a thing of dread—not only because of the perils of the malarious influences of the isthmus and the southern climate, but the fraudulent conduct of the proprietors of steamships who crowd upon a ship of the capacity of five hundred passengers fifteen hundred or two thousand.

I say this bill, so well considered in the House of Representatives, went through a committee there, passed through that House, has come here, and has gone through a committee here. It is proper legislation that has been too long delayed.

I will content myself on this statement with asking the vote of the Senate. There is not a word, sentence, or term in this bill that is not simply in the form of police regulation, beyond the provision that the regulation shall include Mexico as not a country contiguous. In the old legislation of 1855 the term "contiguous" was used, and Mexico bordering upon our territories it was supposed that Mexico was not included. Otherwise the provisions of the bill are only more careful police regulations to enforce preëxisting laws. I trust the bill may be passed without controversy.

Mr. CONNESS. I will consent to this bill going over to-night, for the reason that it is by the kindness of the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] that I was enabled to call it up. That Senator will excuse me when I say that I express with my colleague the greatest surprise at the few words spoken by the Senator from New Jersey on this subject. That any Senator or any person who loved humanity better than money should hesitate to apply a remedy and cure to the present evils concerning the transportation of passenger from New York toward California, where thousands of lives are constantly suspended by a thread over eternity that a great miser may be enriched, is very surprising to me. I move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADE. I move now to proceed with the consideration of the reconstruction bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to allow me just one minute. I have in charge a bill involving only fifty-two dollars, and I wish to put it on its passage.

Mr. WADE. It can be passed after this bill is disposed of just as well as before.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think that bill will get through short of three days.

Mr. WADE. I have myself half a dozen bills like yours.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. WADE. I think I must go on with this bill or lose it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to present a report from the committee of conference on the civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 537) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered thirteen and thirty-seven.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered one, two, three, twelve, twenty and a half, twenty-one, twenty-four, twenty-five, thirty, and thirty-five, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the twenty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eleventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of said Senate amendment the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That a marble floor similar to that of the Congressional Library or the Senate vestibule shall be constructed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, using such marble as may be now on hand and not otherwise required, and that suitable structures and railings shall be therein erected for the reception and protection of statuary, and the same shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; and so much of the moneys now or heretofore appropriated for the Capitol extension as may be necessary, not exceeding the sum of $15,000, is hereby set apart and shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned. And the President is hereby authorized to invite each and all the States to provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civic or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, in the Capitol of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national statutory hall, for the purposes herein indicated.

That the House recede from their disagreement to so much of the eighteenth amendment of the Senate as proposes to insert words in lieu of the words stricken out, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words proposed to be inserted, and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of said Senate amendment the following:

For continuing the work for the accommodation of the students and inmates in said institution, in addition to the appropriations heretofore made, namely, for the purchase of a tract of improved land, containing about thirteen acres, bordering on Boundary street of the city of Washington, and adjoining the lot now belonging to the institution, to enable it to instruct the male pupils in horticulture and agriculture, and to furnish sites for mechanic shops and other necessary buildings, $26,000: Provided, That before the purchase of the said thirteen acres is consummated, the owner shall complete the title in fee to the premises now held and occupied by said institution, by executing a release or conveyance of the remainder and reversions now outstanding in him to the said institution.

JOHN SHERMAN,
EDGAR COWAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THADDEUS STEVENS,
GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
W. P. NOBLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator will explain the amendments. The reading of the report affords no information.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate recede from their thirteenth amendment, which related to draughtsmen in one of the Departments, and also from the thirty-seventh amendment, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL] providing for the publication of the Opinions of the Attorneys General. We found the House conferees indisposed to adopt that amendment, and the Senate recede. The House recede from their disagreement to several amendments of the Senate, and among them the one providing for a certain light-house on Lake Michigan.

In regard to the Washington aqueduct we found a decided difference of opinion. In order to reconcile it at all, both the House and Senate recede from the appropriation for the Washington aqueduct, so that the bill contains no appropriation for that work. The House insisted that it should be expended in a certain way, and the Senate amendment provided for its general expenditure on the old plan. The result is that we drop the appropriation.

The appropriation for the deaf and dumb asylum was adjusted by appropriating a sum sufficient to buy the grounds, thirteen acres, and abandoning the appropriation for building the house.

The appropriation for the Portland custom-house is retained.

I believe these are the most important amendments disposed of by the action of the conference, and the only ones probably in which Senators take any interest. In the main the amendments of the Senate have been agreed to.

The report was concurred in.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. WADE. I now move to go on with the regular order, upon which the Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the assent of the Senator from Virginia, I wish to state that I have in charge a bill for continuing the publication of the Congressional Globe. I have been trying for a fortnight to get it under the consideration of the Senate, and I should like very much to go on with it this evening. If that cannot be done, I should like to take it up and make it the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. Make it the special order for any time you please. We are not to adjourn until these things are all through. Why these motions?

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to proceed to the consideration of that bill with a view to make it the special order.

Mr. WADE. Very well.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 421) to pay in part for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that it be made the special order for to-morrow at twelve o'clock. Senators around me say, "Make it the special order for twelve o'clock to-night." If it is the intention of the Senate to sit I should prefer that decidedly. ["Oh, no!"] I move to make it the special order for to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I think it is too late in the session to be making special orders for a bill of this sort at this time. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would rather withdraw the motion than have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw the motion if the yeas and nays are called.

NEW SERIES....No. 217.

the Senator from Rhode Island moves to postpone it until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had insisted upon its amendment to the bill of the Senate (No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALEXANDER H. RICE of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM D. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN A. GRISWOLD of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. NATHANIEL B. SMITHERS of Delaware, and Mr. FRANCIS KERNAN of New York, managers at the same on its part.

RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WADE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government, the pending question being upon the amendment of Mr. BROWN.

Mr. CARLILE. Mr. President, the Senate will bear in mind that the bill now under consideration, in those provisions to which I have already invited the attention of the body, is not and cannot be claimed to be a war measure. I think it important that this fact shall be kept in view in order to confine the discussion, if we can, to those propositions and considerations that naturally arise upon these particular provisions of the bill. Indeed, its title would indicate that its authors did not predicate any claims for support upon any such ground. It is not claimed that the bill is to aid the Government of the United States in the existing struggle. It is not pretended that it will contribute in the slightest degree to the success of our arms and the assertion of Federal authority within the States named; but it is, as I have before remarked, purely a revolutionary measure, and just as much as our power is greater than the power of the rebellion, to that extent does it more successfully accomplish the same end which the rebellion was inaugurated to accomplish, to wit, the overthrow of the State governments.

Now, sir, it is a fact familiar to every one at all acquainted with our history, that this Government, the Government of the United States, in the name of which it is sought to perpetrate this injustice upon the States, emanated itself from the States. The States existed prior to the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States is the creature of the States, emanating directly from them, and the greatest good expected to be accomplished by the States in the formation of this Government was to protect them in the enjoyment and possession of their own rights of self-government within their respective limits. That was the chief object for the formation of the Government. Then how can it be supposed that this government, emanating, as I have said before, from the States, can send down to the States a governor for them and prescribe for them their form of government? This assumption of power alone, if there were no other considerations involved in the measure, is sufficient, it seems to me, to stamp the absurdity of the proposition.

But, sir, it goes further. It is a declaration to these States that they are never to be received into the Union, that all the benefits of the Union which they aided in creating and forming are to be denied them, their State governments are permitted to be overthrown, the only question being whether they shall be overthrown by traitors in arms or whether they shall be overthrown by a Government of their own creation which they formed for the purpose of protecting them in the enjoyment of their own State governments and the right of self-government. Thus, sir, it declares to the people of these States, that are admitted to be States by the chairman of the committee that reported the bill and who advocated it to-day; it says to them in the form of law and to the extent that this Congress has the power to commit the loyal people of the adhering States, commits the loyal people of the United States to the declaration that the States now in the power of those who inaugurated this rebellion are never to enjoy Federal rights without a surrender of their local sovereignty.

It does more, Mr. President; it is a declaration as plain as you can make it to the people of this country and to the civilized world that, so far as the powers of the Government of the United States can be wielded by those to whom its administration is at the present time intrusted, the Union that the Constitution formed shall never again be enjoyed by the people. It is a declaration that the effort for the restoration of the Union is to be abandoned, that the time has now arrived when it becomes us to give up the "old Union," as some gentlemen have styled it, and to enter upon the new work of reconstruction. If that be so, how can you attempt to maintain your consistency, by the military power of this Government to compel a minority of the States of the Union containing a minority of the population of the Union to submit to the reconstruction of the Union? To do this we must discard all the obligations of the Constitution. It cannot be disguised that such will be the effect of this bill.

I wish to say here to Senators before I go further, that in discussing this bill as it presents itself to me, I impute to no Senator improper motives. It is not my business. I merely speak of what will be the result of the propositions which they advocate. I concede all the patriotism to every Senator on this floor that I would claim for myself; but experience has taught us that men often forget that they have a country to serve as well as a party to obey, and I think it is a justifiable opinion to hold, that in times of high party excitement gentlemen will do what in their calmer moments they might not do. Partisan feeling sometimes drives from the bosom patriotism and love of country. And, sir, in that same spirit to which I have referred, I can and must, with the views which I entertain, find the solution of the advocacy of this proposition in partisan feeling and partisan feeling alone. I am sure but for the influence which it exercises over Senators no such power in the Government of the United States would ever be claimed or attempted to be asserted. A measure, then, that is not to have effect until after the rebellion shall be suppressed, that deprives the people of the States of the Union of the right of self-government which the Union was formed to maintain and to preserve, surely would not be advocated by any Senator as within the powers confided to the Congress of the United States by the Constitution, if there were not something that blinded his judgment.

That I am warranted in saying that it is the determination of the party in power that the Union shall not be restored I think will be readily admitted by every Senator when I call to his attention a letter which is familiar to all, written by the gentleman who recently was the head of your Treasury Department during the peace conference in this city. When men were anxiously and earnestly engaged in endeavoring to bring about a peaceful solution of the difficulties which then threatened the country he quietly and deliberately sits down in this city and writes to a friend in Portsmouth, Ohio, expressing his fears that a peaceful solution of the difficulty would be had, expressing his sympathy with gentlemen whom he named of the border States, who had just left his room, and expressing also his opposition to any settlement because he could not see why the party with whom he acted should be called upon to surrender permanently a large power for the temporary possession of a little power. There is and has been for more than a quarter of a century a party in this country organized for the purpose of destroying the Union of the Constitution, who hated the Union because that Union protected each State in the right of self-government, the right to regulate for itself its own domestic institutions, the right to all governmental power save and except what each State in common with the others had delegated to this Government. Because of the fact that the Constitution so provided, they organized themselves together as a party for the purpose of destroying the Union of the Constitution; and I desire in support of this view to call the attention of the Senate to a letter written in February, 1861, by one who occupied a seat on this floor and who is now acknowledged by all to have been as sincere a patriot and as loyal to his country as any man now living. I allude to the late Senator Douglas. In a letter to a friend in Tennessee, dated February 2, 1861, he said:

"You must remember that there are disunionists among the party leaders at the North as well as at the South—men whose hostility to slavery is stronger than their fidelity to the Constitution, and who believe that the disruption of the Union would draw after it, as an inevitable consequence, civil war, servile insurrection, and, finally, the utter extermination of slavery in all the southern States. They are bold, daring, determined men; and believing, as they do, that the Constitution of the United States is the great bulwark of slavery on this continent, and that the disruption of the American Union involves the inevitable destruction of slavery, and is an indispensable necessity to the attainment of that end, they are determined to accomplish their paramount object by any means within their power. For these reasons the northern disunionists, like the disunionists of the South, are violently opposed to all compromises or constitutional amendments or efforts at conciliation whereby peace should be restored and the Union preserved. They are striving to break up the Union under the pretense of unbounded devotion to it; they are struggling to overthrow the Constitution, while professing undying attachment to it and a willingness to make any sacrifice to maintain it; they are trying to plunge the country into civil war, as the surest means of destroying the Union, upon the plea of 'enforcing the laws and protecting the public property.' If they can defeat every kind of adjustment or compromise by which the points at issue may be satisfactorily settled, and keep up the irritation, so as to induce the border States to follow the cotton States, they will feel certain of the accomplishment of their ultimate designs. Nothing will gratify them so much, or contribute so effectually to their success, as the secession of Tennessee and the border States. Every State that withdraws from the Union increases the relative power of northern abolitionists to defeat a satisfactory adjustment, and to bring on a war, which sooner or later must end in final separation and recognition of the independence of the two contending sections."

But, Mr. President, we have later proof that such is the determination of those to whom for the time being the destinies of this country are intrusted. Not many days ago the party in power held a convention in Baltimore. That convention was called to order by a Senator upon this floor, the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] and in calling that body to order he made to them this speech:

"Members of the convention, it is a little more than eight years since it was resolved to form a national party to be conducted upon the principles and policy which had been established and maintained by those illustrious statesmen George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. A convention was held in Philadelphia, under the shade of the trees that surround the Hall of Independence; and candidates—Fremont and Dayton—were chosen to uphold our cause. But the State of Pennsylvania gave its electoral vote to James Buchanan, and the election of 1856 was lost.

"Nothing daunted by defeat, it was immediately determined 'to fight on this line,' not only 'all summer,' but four summers and four winters; and in 1860 the party banner was again unfurled with the names of Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin inscribed thereon. This time it was successful, but with success came rebellion, and with rebellion of course came war; and war, terrible civil war has continued with varying success up to nearly the period when it is necessary under our Constitution to prepare for another presidential election. It is for this highly responsible purpose that you are to-day assembled. It is not my duty nor my purpose to indicate any general course of action for this convention; but I trust I may be permitted to say that, in view of the dread realities of the past and of what is passing at this moment, and of the fact that the bones of our soldiers lie bleaching in every State of this Union, and with the knowledge of the further fact that this has all been caused by slavery, the party of which you, gentlemen, are the delegated and honored representatives, will fall short of accomplishing its great mission unless among its other resolves it shall declare for such an amendment of the Constitution as will positively prohibit African slavery in the United States."

Eight years ago a party was to be formed to conduct this Government on the principles of Washington and Jefferson! Oh, Mr. President, if the spirits of the departed dead were permitted to hear the utterances of the Senator they would be prepared to exclaim, "O liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" Sir, can you conduct a Government upon the principles established by Washington, who warned you in his dying legacy against the formation of sectional parties? The objects of your party that you were seeking then to establish were such that you could not get a candidate on your ticket from any one State in one entire section of this Union. You were then engaged in the organization and formation of a party which Washington told you would destroy the Union that he formed; and the object for which the Senator and those who acted with him were to fight not only all summer but as long, I presume, as the slanking process could be carried on, was to destroy the Constitution in that particular which left to the States the right and which enjoined upon this Government the duty of protecting them in the exercise of that right of regulating for themselves their own institutions. Until that convention sat I never did feel a fear about the ultimate result of this struggle. I still believed and hoped that the Union would be restored, and that such would be the result of the efforts that had been made. But, sir, the party in power has committed itself to limiting the jurisdiction of the United States to the States which prohibit African slavery. They have committed themselves against the Union. They have declared that no State shall be a member of the Union unless it surrenders the right of self-government, which the Union in whose name this battle is being fought secured to the people of each and every State.

Thus we have a party, a powerful party, a party wielding all the powers of this Government, pledged against the Union as the Constitution made it; and if this bill passes and becomes a law, it will be a declaration on the part of the Congress of the United States in favor of that same line of policy which this party eight years old was formed to secure and fasten upon this country. Now, I beg gentlemen, whose patriotism I believe is not to be absorbed by their party feeling to the destruction of all the higher interests of the country, to remember that they are now in power, but they are there by a minority of the votes of the people of this country. Their success is owing to a division among the people who were opposed to them, and in the non-slaveholding States alone they had but a bare majority. There was a powerful minority behind them in 1860. There is today a powerful minority behind them, if not a majority. That minority is entitled to consultation, and its opinions are entitled to respect by those who wield the powers of this Government now. History tells us that no civil war was ever successful where it was carried on by a divided and distracted people. No party war, therefore, can be successful in this struggle. Unless all history is a lie, that fact commits you to an interminable war or an abandonment of the contest. This bill commits you to an interminable war, and not only to a change of government for the people of the States over which you propose to exercise this arbitrary authority, but it deprives your own people and your own States of the liberties the Government was intended to secure to them. Where, sir, is the liberty of the citizens of your States to-day? Even in Rhode Island, not one of the citizens of your State [Mr. ANTHONY in the chair] can claim to enjoy to-day his right to personal liberty by virtue of the Constitution and the laws of the land. He enjoys it only by the sufferance of the party in power. He is liable at any moment to be tapped on the shoulder by a provost marshal or a gentleman with regimentals upon him and carried off to one of the prisons of the land which no key known to the law can unlock. Such a war for such a purpose involves to the people waging it the destruction of their own liberties, the exhaustion of their own resources, and the impoverishment of the nation.

I have said that the provisions of this bill assume to Congress the power to prescribe a State government for the people of the rebellious States. Nay, more; it assumes the power not only to deprive the people of their own State government and reduce them to the character of subjugated provinces and a subjugated people, but it goes further and prohibits that people from ever enjoying the right of self-government unless they adopt for their organic law the particular provisions contained in this bill. This bill not only assumes to declare these people without the protection of the Constitution after the suppression of the rebellion, to deprive them of their rights under the Constitution in time of peace, but to continue them in a condition of territorial vassalage until they grant to you the right to form for them a State constitution. It assumes to provide the qualifications of electors. It prescribes who shall be elected, and by whom. It gives to the governor which it assumes to appoint the right to disperse a convention assembled for the formation of a State government. It makes him the presiding officer of that convention, and arrogates to this Government the right to create governments within the States. All these provisions, I again repeat, are to be exercised in a time of profound peace, when all military opposition is removed, when there is nothing to prevent the peaceful enforcement of the Constitution and your laws made in pursuance of it, when the State government which existed prior to the rebellion springs at once into life and full force to spread its protection over its people.

But it is contended that under the power to guaranty to each State a republican form of government you may assume the right to govern them through whom you send there and claim to call a governor. The very provision under which you claim this power makes it your duty to protect each State in a republican form of government, to guaranty to each State its existing government; and you make this power an excuse, a pretext, to establish an anti-republican government, a government of one man who is to be subject to your will and not the will of the people whom he governs—a single mind not selected by the people to be governed, but selected by you; and to him are the interests and the destinies of this people confided. To him you propose to give the power to abrogate the laws of the States. To him you give the power to fine in a sum not less than $1,500 nor more than $2,000, and to imprison for not less than five years nor more than twenty years any citizen of the State over which he presides who attempts to avail himself of the rights secured to him by the laws of his State. Sir, a more monstrous proposition than this never has been presented to any deliberative body claiming to represent the people since the foundation of the world. Look at one of the sections of this bill which authorizes this governor to abrogate the constitution of the State, and to try, convict, and condemn as a criminal one who attempts to assert his rights under the laws of his State. And yet this is done in the name of a Constitution which it has been said and which did for nearly three quarters of a century protect the people of the States in the enjoyment of all the rights and liberties consistent with our nature.

But, Mr. President, this bill is but a fair sequel to a bill which was passed some two years ago. Then this power was claimed to be derived from that clause of the Constitution which gave to Congress the right to admit new States into the Union. Western Virginia, a portion of the State of my nativity, resisted herself, and not as has been stated repeatedly here and elsewhere was enabled to resist by the power of the armies of this Government, but she resisted herself the act of her State declaring it no longer a member of the Union. She maintained the constitution of the State. She maintained her position within the Union. She never was conquered by the arms of this Government, and she was never maintained in the Union by military force. She took her position and maintained it for months, claiming her right to call upon this Government to protect her from those who were attempting to overthrow the State government which her people had adopted. She came to Congress two years ago with a constitution asking admission into this Union. What was her reception? She was turned from your doors; her people were told that admission into this Union could not be obtained unless they surrendered their right of self-government in two particulars. They were required to strike from their constitution one of its provisions, and they were required to insert another and a different provision, Congress thus assuming under the clause of the Constitution which authorizes the admission of new States the right to create a State. Nowhere is that power given to this Government.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask the Senator from Virginia to give way to allow me to make a conference report.

Mr. CARLILE. Certainly.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 438) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; but was interrupted by

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is a very important report. The Senate, I apprehend, is not understanding it from the reading, and I think we should understand it better if the chairman of the committee of conference would explain to us what the bill is. It is very lengthy, and I have been trying to understand something about it and find it very difficult to do it. I wish the chairman would explain to us what the report is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) The Chair hears no objection to that course, and the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

Mr. HARLAN. The chief point of difference between the Senate and the House of Representatives was in relation to the character of the bonds to be used by the companies respectively in constructing their roads. The Senate proposed that the companies should issue their own bonds to the amount of $24,000 a mile on parts of the roads, $48,000 a mile on other parts of the roads, and $96,000 a mile on the more difficult portions of the mountain districts, the first year's interest to be paid absolutely by the Government, and the interest for nineteen succeeding years to be guarantied by the Government. The House bill proposed that the Government bonds should be issued, as heretofore provided in the law of 1862, to the amount of $16,000 a mile on the more easy portion of the roads, and above this amount on other portions, reaching to $48,000 on the more difficult portions, and that the corporations should be permitted to issue their corporate first mortgage bonds for an equal amount. On this point of difference the committee propose that the Senate recede from their proposition and agree to the House proposition with some modifications, the more important of which is that the companies shall be permitted to issue their corporate bonds only as the road progresses from section to section; that as such section is completed they may issue their corporate bonds, but that if the road should be sold on a foreclosure of those bonds it shall not deprive the Government of the use of the railroads and telegraph lines in the transmission of messages and the transportation of troops and munitions of war.

The House bill also contained a provision granting bonds and land to a branch road extending from Leavenworth to Lawrence. The report of the conference committee proposes that this road shall be built by the main Kansas Railroad Company, and that no bonds shall be issued to it to aid in the construction.

The House bill contained a provision ratifying an assignment of the interests of the California Central Railroad Company to some other railroad company in California mentioned, the name of which I cannot at this moment repeat. The Senate bill contained a provision authorizing the incorporation of a new company to build the same portion of the California road intended to be covered by this assignment. The committee of conference propose that both propositions be stricken out, the House proposition and the Senate proposition, and that the provisions for the construction of the California part of the Pacific railroad shall remain as was provided in the law of 1862.

There is no other material point of difference between the Senate bill and the House bill. In the details the committee have adopted in many respects the Senate bill and propose them as amendments to the House bill, striking out portions of the House bill and inserting in lieu thereof portions of the Senate bill.

These, I believe, are all the important points of difference between the two bills.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the conference committee report in favor of the construction of a road from Leavenworth to Lawrence, in Kansas?

Mr. HARLAN. The House bill proposed the construction of a road from Leavenworth to Lawrence, and the report of the conference committee requires the construction of that road, but does not authorize the use of Government bonds for that specific purpose. It was supposed by the conference committee that the subsidy granted on the main Kansas line was sufficient to enable the company to construct this short branch also without an additional grant of bonds.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire what Congress has to do with permitting that road to be built. It is all in a State. If we give the company no bonus, why should Congress grant permission to build the road?

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose the chief advantage to the company will be that they will thereby secure connections with the other branch. They have no other advantage, as it occurs to me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill was framed originally, I think, on the idea that we were not to authorize a company to build a road in any State. I do not like that feature of this report.

Mr. HARLAN. This road is to be built by a company incorporated by the laws of the State of Kansas, and the same provision now proposed in the report of the committee of conference is contained in the law of 1862, with this difference only: the law of 1862 permitted the construction, the committee's report requires it to be done; so that in point of fact there is no essential difference between the committee's report and the law as it now stands in that respect.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I want to make a statement.

Mr. WADE. I hope this will be laid over. It is evident you cannot take it up inside of another bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I want to say just one sentence.

Mr. WADE. And everybody else another.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Well, I will not utter mine.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think it my right and due to utter one sentence; and I will in doing so beg the courtesy of the Senate that I may be heard, whether I shall be exactly in or out of order. It has been my office—

Mr. WADE. I ask that this be laid aside and that the Senate take up the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. WADE. I do not think this is a fair way of doing business, when I permit a measure to come up, supposing that it is to be decided without debate, to get up a controverted question and go on with it while the main question that I have charge of is pending. I think it is a fraud on the rules, and I shall object of course to anything of this kind being done hereafter. It is not a fair way of doing business. It is evident now it will take all the evening to settle this question.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Not at all. I do not rise here to oppose the report of the committee of conference, but I rise in my own place, and as a matter of personal justice to myself, to make one or two remarks, for which I ask the courteous consideration and attention of the Senate.

It happens that the city of San Francisco, the metropolitan city of the Pacific, belonging to the United States of America, has been my home, and I have had the honor most immediately to represent that city both in the other House and in the Senate Chamber. I have always believed in regard to this great enterprise, on which I have bestowed my thought, on which I have bestowed some of the best years of my life and many of my most earnest endeavors, that the proper terminus of the road was at the city of San Francisco—a city with a population of one hundred and twenty thousand souls, the place where the commerce of the Pacific is centralized. This is the implied design of this bill; but for my own sake allow me to say that it is not exactly and distinctly expressed. I have not been willing to engage in controversies such as those in which Senators from this side of the continent have engaged, and which employed the zeal, labor, and effort of the Senators from Kansas and Missouri; and for this reason I have surrendered many things, not because I did not wish to see this great work carried into the great city of the West, but that I was willing to make sacrifices of myself for the accomplishment of the great result. I have allowed myself to be obnoxious to censure in the noble city where I belong. I did it in the past Congress. I did it then willingly, standing then as chairman of the committee on the Pacific railroad of this body. Without any authority or power, I now submit to it here. Great injustice was done by the exact form and terms of legislation to the city of San Francisco in the bill of the last Congress; great injustice is done to the city of San Francisco in the bill of this Congress; but yet I believe the bill will build the road, and if injustice is done to San Francisco, San Francisco will right herself. I am for the report of the committee.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I feel that great injustice has been done to Kansas by striking out the bonds and land upon the Leavenworth and Lawrence branch; but the importance of the work and the desire to see the bill passed will influence me to vote for the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. WADE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. With the courtesy of the Senator from Virginia, who is entitled to the floor on the regular order, I will make a statement in relation to this matter. It is a matter about which there will be no discussion. It is a long bill, and must be enrolled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the presentation of the report?

Mr. WADE. If there is no question about it, there is no necessity for its being brought up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It must go to the other House. The papers are left with the body because the conference was asked by the other House. They are in session, and it must be disposed of to-night. Through courtesy to the honorable chairman of the other committee of conference [Mr. HARLAN] I delayed pressing this until he had presented his that they might go to the House of Representatives together. There is no objection whatever to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be received.

Mr. WADE. I have no assurance but that it will lead to a debate of an hour.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it will not. There will be no difference of opinion expressed here.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not suppose it will lead to any discussion whatever.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 483) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the following amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23.

That the Senate recede from their amendment numbered twenty-four.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the thirteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert, in lieu of said Senate amendment: "Provided further, That all mineral lands be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act, and in lieu thereof a like quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated agricultural lands, in odd numbered sections, nearest to the line of said road, and within fifty miles thereof, may be selected as above provided."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out the words "the summit of the Rocky mountains," in the seventh and eighth lines of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof "the western boundary of Minnesota."

J. R. DOOLITTLE,

IRA HARRIS,

J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THADDEUS STEVENS,

L. D. M. SWEAT,

I. DONNELLY,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill for the punishment of guerrillas, with a view of concurring with the House of Representatives in the appointment of a committee of conference.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. LANE of Indiana, and Mr. VAN WINKLE.

SEAMEN OF WRECKED VESSELS.

On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted on by the House; and

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. RAMSEY.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAW.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference.

By unanimous consent the report was received and read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 138) entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in cases of landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia," recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreeing votes to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

LOT M. MORRILL,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,

EZRA WHEELER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Brown.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARLILE. It has been intimated to me that possibly the Senate would prefer at this time to take a vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, and if that be so I am willing to yield the floor for the purpose of having that vote taken. I have yielded it so repeatedly since I attempted to make some remarks on this bill, and it is now growing late, and sitting in this furnace beneath this heat I would prefer concluding what I intended to say upon this bill tomorrow or some other day, provided it becomes necessary in my opinion to say anything more upon it. If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri shall be adopted, I of course shall have nothing further to say on the bill, and if agreeable to the Senator who has the bill in charge, I am willing to give way to have that question decided now.

Mr. WADE. You had better finish your speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADE. I am only anxious that the question shall be fairly understood. This substitute is a mere negation. It settles no principle. It does not profess to settle anything more than this, that the question shall depend on the legislation of Congress, that these States are to await the action of Congress, without declaring any principle on which their reorganization shall take place. The amendment is offered as a substitute for the bill of the House of Representatives, and every vote for this amendment is a vote against the original proposition of the House bill, and those who are opposed to the bill of the House of course will vote for the amendment. Those in favor of that bill will vote against the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I do not intend to make any speech on this subject or to consume any more of the time of the Senate. I desire to say in vindication of myself in offering this amendment that I am not willing to sustain a bill for the reconstruction of the States now in rebellion which leaves out of that reconstruction nearly all the loyal element in those States by disfranchising and leaving them out of account. I therefore move this amendment that we may take such temporary measure as is necessary to prevent the voting of these States in the presidential election, and leave to another and better occasion the assertion of the rights that are necessary in these revolted territories.

Mr. WADE. This bill does not omit the rights or supersede the rights of the loyal people of those States in any manner whatever, but it provides in the first place for the appointment by the President of a military governor, as he appoints such officers now; and it makes it the duty of that military governor, as soon as he believes a majority of the people of the State have become loyal so that they can maintain a government of their own, to appoint commissioners whose duty it shall be to take the census of the State, and to ascertain, by administering the oath to the voters of the State, who are loyal and who are not loyal; and whenever it shall be thus ascertained that there is a majority of loyal people in the State, then they are to elect their delegates to a convention to form a State constitution and so on to mature a State government of their own. If that is in contravention of the rights of the loyal people of a State, that fact is ascertained by a process that I cannot find in the bill. There is no loyal citizen in the State who will not have the full right to participate in a State government as soon as it can be ascertained that he has a majority of his fellows there who agree with him. Then they will be invested with all the powers and privileges of the government of the State and be upon the same footing as any other State.

I say again if the gentleman is opposed to this bill in principle let him not vote for it, but let him not vote for this miserable dodge, this negation, this amendment that asserts no principle, as a substitute for the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer an additional section by way of amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the proclamation of emancipation issued by the President of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1863, so far as the same declares that the slaves in certain designated States and portions of States thenceforward should be free, is hereby adopted and enacted as a statute of the United States, and as a rule and article for the government of the military and naval forces thereof.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. However much I might be in favor of such a proposition as this, I think it is incongruous and out of place here. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri who proposed the amendment just adopted, while at the same time I was in favor of the proposition as an independent measure. I think it is substantially one that I introduced myself, and I think that the proposition of the Senator from Missouri which has been adopted in lieu of the bill of the Senator from Ohio is one that ought to be adopted, and if it is not adopted I fear we shall be in great danger of scenes of violence and civil war. If we do not fix by law in some way what votes shall be counted in the next presidential election, we leave ourselves in a situation that will probably lead to convulsions and violence. Let us suppose that we go into this presidential election without some such declaratory resolution as that proposed by the Senator from Missouri and adopted by the body, and the result of the election should be such that it would be determined one way or the other by the votes of some of the States situated as Arkansas and Louisiana are situated. Do you suppose that either party in this country defeated in that way would submit? Let me suppose that the Democratic party carried the election without counting the votes of Arkansas or Louisiana, and that by counting these votes Mr. Lincoln should be elected over the Democratic candidate, do you believe, does anybody imagine that that party would consent to give up the advantage which they would have by a majority of the votes that were confessedly in the Union, by the admission of votes of States situated as they are? Some gentlemen have said we can fix that next session, but we cannot do it next session. We must do it now or never, because next session we shall have to legislate in view of the votes that will have been thrown before we come together. Now we can make the resolution without knowing whom it is to affect. Though I voted against the proposition of the Senator from Missouri as an amendment to this bill I am for it decidedly, and I think that the Senate will be derelict in its duty if it fails to make some such provision as that for our government in the next election, and it is therefore that I hope it will stand by itself and will not be embarrassed with any other question; and for that reason I shall vote against this amendment and for that alone, hoping that the proposition as it now stands amended on the motion of the Senator from Missouri will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from New Hampshire is entirely mistaken when he says that the proposition which I now offer is incongruous. The Senator says to me that he did not say so. I beg his pardon; he began by saying it was incongruous. It is entirely germane—nothing could be more germane. The section already adopted concerned the rebel States. The section I now offer concerns the rebel States. The Senator cannot vote against the sections which I now offer; it is neither more nor less than this: to recognize as a statute the proclamation of emancipation, to put it under the guarantee and the safeguard of an act of Congress. That is all. It is as simple as day. It is as plain as truth. It is impossible for any person who recognizes the proclamation of emancipation or who is disposed to stand by it to vote against the section which I now offer. I wish to see emancipation in the rebel States placed under the guarantee of an act of Congress. I do not wish to see it left to float on a presidential proclamation. We have been assured that that proclamation will not be changed; but who knows what may be hereafter the vicissitudes of elections? I do not pretend to look far enough into the future to determine or to see what proclamation hereafter may be issued. I wish to make the present sure, and to fix it forevermore and immortal in an act of Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I did not suppose when the President of the United States, assuming the possession of absolute power under this Government, issued his proclamation of emancipation, that so soon thereafter his friends should come into the Senate of the United States and make open confession that his acts were illegal, that his assumption was without authority, and that in issuing that proclamation to the American people under the pretense that it had validity he was guilty of nothing but an unwarranted exercise of power. We differing from the Administration, said at the time that he had no power to issue such a proclamation, that it was of no more worth than the paper upon which it was written. We contended that under our Federal system such vast power was not given to the Executive of the United States. But what was our answer? How were we answered on this floor? How were we answered in the other branch of Congress? How were we answered by the public press of the country which supported the Administration? To question the validity of his act was evidence clear that a man was not only a copperhead but a traitor, disloyal, and the attempt was, when that proclamation was issued to the American people, to make it the test of a man's fidelity to the Constitution and Government of his country; and there was scarcely a paper in the support of this Administration that did not hold it up before the American people as the true and the genuine test of fidelity to the country. Upon this floor the supporters of the Administration held that it was valid; in the other branch of Congress the supporters of the Administration held that it was valid; but now, sir, the proposition is gravely made in the Senate of the United States to legalize it, to give to it power and efficiency which inherently it did not possess.

But, sir, the amendment comports very well with the whole character of this bill. Never has there been a measure since my brief connection with this body so revolutionary in its character, a measure so antagonistic to our whole Federal system, so unauthorized by the Constitution of the country as this whole bill. What is it? Professedly a bill to guaranty to certain States in the Union a republican form of government; and yet in fact it is a bill to destroy existing States, not to make new States out of territory which had never been States before, but to destroy existing States, to reduce them to a territorial condition and to deny to them the right to regulate their own domestic affairs. But, sir, the substitute offered by the honorable Senator from Missouri has done away to a great extent with this character of the bill.

Look, however, at the proposition now immediately before the Senate, and what is it? An attempt by Federal legislation to legislate for the States themselves, to regulate their domestic institutions, to control property, in other words. Why, sir, property in a State is not the creature of Federal law; it exists independently of it. The Federal authority has no legitimate control over it. Can you go into a State and undertake to interrupt the relation of master and servant? If you can, you can go into a State and attempt to control the relation of parent and child and of husband and wife. If you have the authority to do this act, there is no subject of local legislation which Congress may not divest the States of and assume to themselves. Then our whole system of Government, instead of being of that Federal character which we have heretofore supposed it was, amounts to nothing but an absolute, consolidated Government, with no power whatever in the States and all power centered in this Federal Government. A bare statement of the consequences to which such a species of legislation will lead is sufficient to show how unsound it is.

But, sir, let me say in conclusion by way of response to my honorable friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, that all these matters give me not much trouble. The skies begin to look bright. The night is far spent and the day is at hand. My honorable friend need give himself no trouble as to what will be done. An Administration soon, thank God, will be in power which will wipe out all this species of legislation, and will do it without blood-shedding, too.

Mr. BROWN. In regard to the amendment which has been offered to this bill as it stands by the Senator from Massachusetts, I presume I need not say to the Senate that as an independent proposition it meets my hearty concurrence; but there are some things which are now practical and some which are not; there are some things which are possible and some which are not. Among those things which are not possible is the getting of this bill with the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts through the House of Representatives at the present session. That is as utterly impossible as anything which can be named. We know that under the technical rules of that House any serious opposition to any measure can now defeat it. If the Senate concur in the necessity of this bill as it stands, if they concur in the necessity of a provision in regard to the States that are in insurrection which shall preclude them from voting and preclude them from precipitating us perhaps upon new civil complications and new war, then let us pass this measure which seems to be a measure meeting the general assent of all sides of the Chamber in itself, and which I am sure will meet with general assent of all sides in the other House. Let us pass that, I say, and avert the evils without doubt.

I do not desire to discuss the merits of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I concur heartily and fully with him in his reasoning as to the propriety of its adoption, as to the propriety of putting in the shape of a statute that proclamation of the President; but what I do ask of the Senate is that they will now, as a single, distinct proposition, do that thing which is so necessary in the disturbed times upon which we have fallen, and do it in such wise as will make its passage sure. I do not desire to protract the debate. I am willing to come to a vote and rest on the sense of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I adopt precisely the language of my friend from Missouri. He regards his proposition as necessary. I regard his proposition or some equivalent measure as necessary. But not less necessary do I regard the proposition which I have now had the honor to offer. His proposition is to meet a question in the reconstruction of the rebel States. My proposition is also to meet a question in the reconstruction of the rebel States.

Mr. BROWN. Mine is not a proposition for reconstruction at all. It is simply providing that they shall not exercise the elective franchise until Congress authorizes it by act.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand it, and the obvious effect of it is to postpone all those activities tending toward reconstruction and to bring them all under the rule of Congress. That is the object of the proposition of the Senator, and the object of my proposition is to bring emancipation under the rule of Congress. Sir, as it now stands it depends on the proclamation of the President. I am unwilling that emancipation shall depend upon the will of any one man, be he President or Senator. I wish to place it under the highest sanctions which our country knows. If I could I would place it at once under the sanctions of the Constitution; but those failing, let me place it under the sanctions of an act of Congress. I am sure the Senator cannot differ from me in that. But the Senator, whose experience here certainly does not compare with that of some other Senators, assures us that this measure cannot pass the other House. Sir, by what intuition has he arrived at that knowledge? I have no means of knowing that. On the contrary, if I am left to draw my conclusion from what has already occurred during the present session, I say unhesitatingly it can pass the other House. The Senator forgets that when it reaches the other House it will not be as a bill by itself to go through the different stages; it goes there as part of the substitute to the House bill. It will be acted upon, therefore, as an amendment, subject only to one stage of proceeding. I tell the Senator it can pass the other House. It only requires that the Senate should send it there. Let us will to do it and it can be done; and I do entreat the Senator from Missouri, who I know is pledged so strenuously to the cause of emancipation, not to fail it at this hour.

Mr. BROWN. I presume no one knows better than the Senator from Massachusetts that it is perfectly possible to unite two measures, each of which commands a majority in itself, and yet which combined cannot by any possibility get a majority; and that is just the proposition which he makes here. I, of course, in charge of the amendment which has been adopted on my motion, must protest against its being put in that attitude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Salsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Willey, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Salsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Conness, Hale, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Willey, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. I want to have a distinct vote on the proposition itself, not antagonized with anything else, and see what the sense of the Senate is on the proposition.

Mr. BROWN. We have just had it on the same proposition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it was antagonized to the original bill as an amendment. I want it by itself to see what the sense of the Senate is in reference to the measure, and not as a substitute for anything else. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Powell, and Salsbury—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Willey, and Wright—20.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the title of the bill so as to read, "A bill concerning States in insurrection against the United States."

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 549, with the view of having a committee of conference appointed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out of the national forces, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not in favor of agreeing to that proposition. I understand that there are but very few points upon which the two Houses do agree, and this proposition is substantially to take this bill from Congress in the two bodies and refer it to a committee of conference. Where there are disagreements it is very proper to adjust them in this mode; but where the two bodies disagree as to the whole measure, I do not believe in that system of legislation which refers the whole question to a committee of conference, and I do not believe that the Senate will finally secure such a bill as it has agreed to by a committee of conference. This is a very important measure, and it is not that sort of measure which ought to be adjusted throughout by a committee of conference.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if there is any other way of getting at it now. The House of Representatives have disagreed and asked for a committee. What can we do? If we refuse it, it defeats the whole measure. What else are we to do if we are to have any measure? We may not accept the report of the committee of conference. We may reject it and have a second committee. But what can we do now but accept the House proposition?

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the measure can be considered after it comes back to the Senate I shall not very much object; but the difficulty is that when a report of a committee of conference is made the Senate pass it almost without investigation. I recollect the other day on a very important bill a committee of conference reported, not agreeing with either House—I refer to the tax bill, the item of the tax upon whisky. The House of Representatives had agreed to $1 a gallon and the Senate had agreed to $1 25, but the committee of conference made it $1 50 and $2, not reflecting the sentiment of either body, but the bill with that very heavy tax on a very large interest passed through this body with very few Senators knowing what was the report of the committee of conference in that regard. When the proposition is to lay hold of the citizen and force him into the military service, I think we ought to know exactly what we do pass.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I entirely concur with the Senator from Indiana as to the impropriety of legislation by committees of conference. I have fought it here for six years and have always been defeated in it. I think it is a miserable way of legislating. But when one House asks for a conference I do not see how you can do otherwise than lose the measure unless you accept the proposition, and when the report comes in it is our fault if we do not understand it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps I have accomplished all that I desire. I wished to call attention to the bill, and when the report comes in I hope it will be considered by the body, and I wish it understood that our hands are not tied.

The motion of Mr. WILSON was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the Chair was authorized to appoint the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRIMES, and Mr. MORGAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES declined serving on the committee, and Mr. BROWN was appointed in his stead.

Mr. BROWN declined serving, and Mr. LANE of Indiana was appointed in his place.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 23) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the southern or eastern boundary of said State;

A bill (No. 73) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the trustees of the Blue Mont College to preëempt a certain quarter section of land," approved March 2, 1861; and

A bill (No. 325) to repeal the act of the 17th of June, 1864, prohibiting the sales of gold and foreign exchange.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending the 30th June, 1865; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Nahum Ward back to the Court of Claims.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. No. 307) to regulate commerce among the several States.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that motion will not be agreed to. That bill will give rise to discussion. I should feel it my duty, as weak as I am physically, and weak perhaps in every other way, to discuss it at some length before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very anxious to listen to the Senator from Maryland. I know he will enlighten the Senate. I do not desire to discuss it myself.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not in a condition to discuss it now. I am not the only one who desires to do so. There are three or four other speeches to be made. We have hardly time now to get through with the business which must be transacted before we adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall make no speech upon this bill. I am simply anxious for a vote. I will consent to take the vote without one single word being said by either side. I do not believe that any speech that can be made will affect a vote one way or the other. The friends of the bill will occupy no time. It is a House bill; it is a very short bill; and I see no reason on earth why we should not pass it in ten minutes. If the Senator from Maryland desires to enlighten the Senate I shall be most happy to listen to him from now until daylight to-morrow morning if he requires so much time. I certainly will not limit the debate; but I assure him there will be no response from me or from the friends of the measure. I hope he will let us have a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know the courtesy of the honorable member from Michigan will listen to any speech any Senator might wish to make, and if the Senator desires to speak he will make a speech on any subject he desires to speak about. This, to be sure, is a House bill; but it does not follow from that that it is to be adopted. The bill we have just disposed of is a House bill; but it goes back to the House a very different bill from what it was when it came to the Senate; it is altogether changed. The bill to which the honorable member adverts is a bill that contains principles infinitely more extensive than the mere operation of the bill itself, and I am satisfied that it cannot be disposed of without a long discussion. There are constitutional questions presented by it which deserve the very grave consideration of the Senate. It is now late; we are very much exhausted; at least I think all the Senate are exhausted in a great measure; and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not. I should like at any rate to get this bill up, so that it may be the first business in order to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland insist on his motion?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDUGALL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILSON. I would be very glad to have an executive session for a few moments in order to make some reports.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to debate.

Mr. WILSON. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call will proceed.

Mr. HOWE. I hope the Senate will indulge me in saying that there is a bill coming from the House of Representatives in a few minutes, which it is very desirable should be taken to the President to-night, and if you can wait fifteen minutes it will be here.

Mr. GRIMES. It is too hot to stay here.

Mr. HOWE. It will only take fifteen minutes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Maryland to withdraw the motion for a short time.

Mr. POWELL. I believe there has been an answer to the roll-call.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Nobody has answered. Mr. ANTHONY's name was called, but he did not answer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to the withdrawal.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to any argument.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is no argument, but a statement.

Mr. HALE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the call will proceed.

The Secretary continued and concluded the call of the roll on the motion to adjourn.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before announcing the result on the motion to adjourn, the Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives with a view to have it referred to a committee.

The joint resolution (No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass that bill now. It is a bill to pay a colored man in Nassau for piloting our vessels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered at the present time. It will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

CAPTAIN DANIEL HEBARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will also lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard of the United States volunteers.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution, but was interrupted by Mr. SHERMAN. I object to any legislative business. There is not a quorum here, and that is evidently a matter of some importance.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced—yeas 23, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cardie, Conness, Davis, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Pomerooy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilkinson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Nesmith, Wilson, and Wright—14.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 1, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. FERREE.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BUSINESS ON SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that by unanimous consent the House resume the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Pacific telegraph bill was referred to the select committee on that subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that the House having given unanimous consent to proceed to other business, the question of privilege cannot override that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, its Chief Clerk, requested the House to return to the Senate House bill No. 549, further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, to correct an error in the engrossment of said amendment.

The message was submitted to the House, and it was ordered that the request of the Senate be complied with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this subject privileged to come up at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is; the rule prescribes that in taking up business on the Speaker's table bills from the House with Senate amendments shall take precedence.

The House thereupon proceeded to a consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Nahum Ward back to the Court of Claims; which was taken from the Speaker's table, the question being on concurring with the amendment to add to the joint resolution as follows:

Provided, That said court shall allow no larger amount than the sum heretofore allowed by said court.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will concur in that amendment. It is manifestly a proper amendment. The bill itself was referred to the Committee of Claims and reported on by that committee. The bill is right, and I hope the amendment will be concurred in. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

CONSCRIPTION BILL.

Mr. LE BLOND. I supposed last night after offering my amendment that the House was about to adjourn, and not being well I left for my home. Since that time I have learned that a vote was taken upon my proposition, and I now ask permission to record my vote.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I will say that had I been here I should have voted in the affirmative; and I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his courtesy. [Laughter.]

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask permission to record my vote upon the same proposition.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

House bill (No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, the question being on concurring in the amendments of the Senate. The Senate amended the bill first by making the words "guerrilla and" read "guerrilla marauders." They also added a section at the end of the bill providing that when a soldier sick in hospital shall have been discharged from military service and shall die in consequence of such sickness or wounds, he shall be deemed to have died in the military service. Also, an additional section providing that payments which have been made by paymasters to non-commissioned officers in volunteer regiments from the date of enlistment but previous to their being mustered into the service of the United States shall be authorized, and that such paymasters shall be credited with such payments in the settlement of their accounts; also providing that the term "guerrilla marauder" mentioned in the act shall not be construed as applying to persons belonging to the regularly organized forces of the enemy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the House to this amendment of the Senate in relation to soldiers who have died in hospitals after being discharged. I think the same provision has been made upon another bill which is before the House; and I trust that gentlemen will avoid the duplication of this section by striking it out in one bill or the other.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two or three amendments to this bill which the Military Committee desire to have arranged differently, and I hope, therefore, the House will non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this section may be concurred in first.

Mr. GARFIELD. The section needs to be carefully worded, and I think it had better be considered by a committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman, however, seems to concur in the propriety of the amendment, and I think, therefore, it had better be concurred in.

Mr. FENTON. I am in favor of the proposition embodied in this section, but I think, with the gentleman from Ohio, that all the amendments had better go to a committee of conference. The committee will certainly consider itself instructed by the House on this point, and will without doubt insist on retaining the provision in substance.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, and a committee of conference requested upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in and a committee of conference requested; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

An act (S. No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 17, 1862, was next taken from the Speaker's table, having been laid over from yesterday evening.

Mr. FENTON. I do not know upon whom it falls to take charge of this bill and make a proper explanation in regard to it. It is not the bill I had in charge. I think, however, it is a bill which should be passed. If there be no objection, I will move that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, with authority to report at any time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY LANDS.

An act (S. No. 228) providing for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

An act (S. No. 336) to amend an act incorporating the Washington Gas-Light Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire. I move to refer that bill to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I should like to have that bill considered now, and I will send to the Clerk's desk a letter to be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read, as follows:

OFFICE WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY,
June 29, 1864.

DEAR SIR: This Gas-Light Company has been actually losing money every day for nearly twelve months, and that loss is continually increasing. We are now paying one hundred per cent. more for coal, labor, iron, retorts, and every other article used in the manufacture of gas than two years ago when the present rates for gas were fixed, and unless we can get relief from Congress this session will be compelled to close our works before December. A bill passed the Senate unanimously yesterday giving an increase of only fifteen per cent., and making the price less than in 1861; but we are content with it: (three dollars net.) There are four hundred and forty-five gas companies in the United States, of which four hundred and twenty-six receive over three dollars, and all the others have taken steps to put the price to those figures. It is to the interest of every company to sell gas as cheap as possible, but we cannot afford to lose money as we are now doing. The par value of our stock is twenty dollars per share on the gold standard, and it is now offered at nineteen dollars in paper, and no purchasers. A great proportion of it is held by widows, orphans, and trustees who rely upon their dividends for support, which we have not made or declared for nearly twelve months, and never will at present prices. There is no other article, from the cradle to the coffin, that can be procured at the same cost as three years ago, except gas, which we are required to sell at fifty-four cents per thousand less than then, and we are willing to furnish it at fifteen cents less.

We cannot think it is the intention of the House to destroy this company by requiring it to furnish gas at so great a loss, or to put the city in darkness by closing the works, yet this must be the inevitable result unless your honorable body will at once pass the Senate bill.

I have the honor, &c.,

J. F. BROWN,
Secretary in charge.

Hon. J. B. STEELE, Chairman, &c.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand that there is a provision in that bill increasing the fare on the passenger railways two cents.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. There is such a provision, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MORRIS] is upon the floor to move to strike it out.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has been considered by the Committee for the District of Columbia, and that I am authorized by the majority of that committee to move to put it on its passage.

Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire. I think it ought to be referred to that committee.

Mr. DAWSON. I hope it will be acted on now. It is late in the session and the bill has already been considered by that committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. This matter has been three times before this House during this session, and after full and deliberate discussion been voted down. Now it comes before the House for the fourth time just on the heel of the session. It is well known if this passes it will increase the expense to the Government $30,000 during the coming year. I do not care to go over the discussion. I have considered it fully and have seen no cause to believe that what I stated in the discussion before the House is not true. It seems to me it would be vastly better to refer this subject to the Committee for the District of Columbia for consideration.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Is this one of that class of companies which has watered stock—the stock of which does not represent the actual cost incurred? If it is the company with watered stock I would never increase its pay.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 43.

Mr. DAWSON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROLLINS of New Hampshire, and DAWSON, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 45.

So the bill was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HUMILIATION AND PRAYER.

Joint resolution (S. No. 74) requesting the President to appoint a day for national humiliation and prayer.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVIDENCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

An act (S. No. 271) relating to the laws of evidence in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. PRUYN moved that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON moved to put the bill upon its passage, and demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. PRUYN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRUYN and LITTLEJOHN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 52.

So the bill was not referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, moved to lay the bill on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 64.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 272) to facilitate trade on the Red river of the North;

Joint resolution (S. No. 66) providing for adjustment of the accounts of Henry W. Diman; and

An act (S. No. 332) to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes.

VOTES RECORDED.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I was not present last evening when the vote was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] on the conscription bill. I supposed that the whole matter had been postponed until to-day on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS,] and having an engagement I left the Hall. I now ask unanimous consent to record my vote on the amendment.

There was no objection, and Mr. ELDRIDGE voted "ay."

Mr. COBB, having been absent on official business, presenting bills to the President for his signature, when the vote was taken last evening on that amendment, asked leave to record his vote.

There was no objection, and Mr. COBB voted "no."

Mr. INGERSOLL asked and obtained like consent, and voted "no."

Mr. ODELL asked and obtained like consent, and voted "no."

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, asked and obtained like consent, and voted "ay."

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraphic communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho was referred to the select committee on that subject.

The vote was reconsidered.

The question recurred on the motion to refer the bill, and it was not referred.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

The bill authorizes the United States Telegraph Company and their associates to erect a line or lines of magnetic telegraph between the Missouri river and the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, on such route as they may select, to connect with the lines of that company now constructed and being constructed through the States of the Union. The company is to have the use of such unoccupied land of the United States as may be necessary for the right of way and materials, and for the establishing of stations along the line for repairs, not exceeding at any station one quarter section of land, and the stations not to exceed one in fifteen miles on the average of the whole line, unless the lands shall be required by the Government of the United States for railroad or other purposes; but no right to preempt any lands under the laws of the United States is to inure to the company or their agents, or any other person or persons whatsoever.

The second section authorizes the United States Telegraph Company, under the direction of the President of the United States, to erect a line of telegraph from Fort Hall by Walla-Walla and the Dalles and San Francisco to Portland, in the State of Oregon, and from Fort Hall to Bannock and Virginia City, in the Territory of Idaho, with the same privileges as to the right of way, &c., as is provided in the first section; the United States to have priority in the use of the lines of telegraph to Oregon and Idaho.

According to the third section, the company is to send and receive dispatches on payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches over any line that may now or hereafter be constructed by the authority or aid of Congress, to connect with any line or lines authorized or erected by the Russian or English Government, and all dispatches received by the line are to be transmitted in the order of their reception, and the answers thereto to be delivered to the United States Telegraph Company for transmission over their lines to the office whence the original message was sent.

The fourth section provides that the several railroad companies authorized by act of Congress July 1, 1862, may enter into arrangements with the United States Telegraph Company so that the line of telegraph between the Missouri river and San Francisco may be made upon and along the line of that railroad and branches as fast as the roads and branches are built, and if such arrangements be entered into and the transfer of the telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of the railroads and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of the act referred to, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of the railroad companies of the provision of the act in regard to the construction of a telegraph line; and, in case of disagreement, the telegraph company are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad therein contemplated, without prejudice to the rights of the railroad companies.

Mr. DONNELLY. I desire to offer an amendment to the third section of the bill, to add to the section the words "whenever so directed by the sender thereof." As the bill at present stands the company referred to in the bill will absorb all the return business of telegraphing. The amendment provides that the business shall go to this particular line only when the sender of the telegraph desires it. I do not think there can be any objection to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On examination of the amendment I do not see any particular objection to it, and I withdraw the previous question for the purpose of letting the amendment be offered.

Mr. DONNELLY offered his amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the amendment was agreed to, and the bill read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BROOMALL asked and obtained leave of absence for a few days from to-morrow on account of illness.

Mr. ODELL asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Blow for the remainder of the session.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The House is still in execution of the order to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table.

ANTHONY SWEETING.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata, for losses or fines sustained by him in consequence of his employment in the service of the United States, provided that the sum shall not exceed $500.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next bill taken from the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of land situated in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I move to refer that bill to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PROCEEDS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The next bill taken from the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 193) to extend the eighth section of an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to refer that bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

The next bill taken from the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 339) to repeal the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department," and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to hear the bill read.

The bill, which was read, repeals the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department." The second section directs the Secretary of the Interior to assign for the temporary use of the Commissioner of Agriculture such rooms in the Interior Department suitable for the business of the Commissioner, and necessary to enable him to perform efficiently the business of the office, as can be so appropriated with the least inconvenience to the transaction of other public business. The third section appropriates for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for the use of the Department of Agriculture, on any unoccupied public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, to be indicated by the President, $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the President, provided the whole cost of the building shall not exceed the sum so appropriated.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to know whether the Secretary of the Interior approves of that bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I raise the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and should be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the objection comes too late.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This bill is different from what I supposed it was, and I am opposed to the passage of some of the provisions in it, particularly that appropriating $100,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that he was not aware that the bill contained any appropriation or he would have had it read before it was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am in favor of repealing the joint resolution giving to the Commissioner of Agriculture the rooms in the Land Office, where I am told there are deposited six million papers belonging to the General Land Office. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to a third reading, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As the bill is now open to amendment, I move to amend by striking out the third section, which contains the appropriation of $100,000. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendment submitted by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of the State of Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 550) to establish Colfax street, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Martha Jane Skaggs;

An act (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Richard G. Murphy;

An act (H. R. No. 316) for the relief of Dr. Charles M. Wetherill; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 39) for the relief of Alexander Cross.

GEORGE A. SHREINER.

An act (S. No. 240) for the relief of George A. Shreiner was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. JONES.

An act (S. No. 251) for the relief of John S. Jones, an Ottawa Indian, for depredations committed upon his property in Kansas Territory, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

All of the bills on the Speaker's table having been disposed of,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the reference of such bills as had been referred to committees; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLD BILL.

Mr. PRUYN asked unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the repeal of the gold bill.

Mr. HOOPER objected.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. COFFROTH moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Upon the motion, 28 voted in the affirmative and 56 in the negative; no quorum.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. DIXON and COFFROTH.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 56.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

WEST POINT ACADEMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SCHENCK asked consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs a Senate joint resolution in relation to the professors of the Military Academy at West Point.

The joint resolution was read. It construes the thirty-first section of the act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, not to abridge the privileges of the professors of the West Point Academy during the suspension of the ordinary academic studies of the year.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move to amend the bill by inserting the words "or the eleventh section of the act to increase the pay of the soldiers of the United States Army, approved June 24, 1864."

I will explain that the joint resolution is simply this: by the thirtieth section of the enrollment bill of 1863 officers are not permitted to be absent without having their pay deducted, except in case of sickness. The eleventh section of the act increasing the pay of the soldiers prohibits officers from absenting themselves for more than one year. The professors of the Military Academy are construed as officers. Their vacation every year while the cadets are in camp is for two months, and there is no objection to their being absent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, one of their clerks, notifying the House that having made a correction in the engrossment of the bill of the House (No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, had again passed the bill, and that he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House in their amendments to the said bill.

EXTRA CLERICAL COMPENSATION.

Mr. GRISWOLD asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid to the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs one dollar a day during the present session of Congress in addition to the compensation heretofore provided.

Mr. HOLMAN objected.

DANIEL HEBARD.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back joint resolution of the Senate (No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard, of the United States volunteers, with an amendment.

The joint resolution provides that in the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard, of the United States volunteers, an assistant adjutant general on the staff of General Gorman, the Secretary of War is to allow and pay for the whole time that officer was actually employed and on duty in the military service of the United States, whether before or after the date of his commission.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs provided that the same principle of allowance and payment be observed in the settlement of the accounts of Major William M. Este and Captain Maxwell V. Z. Woodhull, aids-de-camp on the staff of Major General Robert C. Schenck, from the 22d day of December, 1862, when they entered upon their duties on the staff of the commanding general of the Middle department and eighth Army corps until the date when they respectively received and accepted their commissions as aids-de-camp, deducting only from the pay and allowances of Major Este what he received in any part of that time as a lieutenant of the twenty-sixth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended by adding the words "and of other officers."

ENROLLMENT BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the House postpone for the present the consideration of private bills, and that it take up the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 549, further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. What the Senate have sent us is contained in Senate bill No. 286, and I hope that we will non-concur. I demand the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I ask the gentleman to yield to me, so that I may move to concur with an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing to yield that a vote may be taken on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move to concur with this amendment:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no person drafted shall be entitled to be exempted from personal service on payment of commutation money.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all enrolled persons shall be divided into two classes, one comprising those between eighteen and twenty-five years of age, and the other those over twenty-five and under forty years of age.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every year during the continuance of the rebellion the President shall cause two hundred and fifty thousand men to be drafted from the first class, who shall be organized, drilled, and either sent into the field or held as a reserve to meet the exigencies of the service.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in the event of the service requiring a levy of more than two hundred and fifty thousand men in any year the residue beyond that number shall be drafted from the second class.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That prior to any draft and during the execution of the same, till the requisition is filled, the President shall call for volunteers to fill the same, and is authorized to offer and pay every volunteer $300 who shall volunteer for three years, and proportionably for any shorter period designated by the President, one half at the time of mustering in and the other half on his discharge.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That every drafted man not appearing by the assessment for the internal revenue to have an income of $300 on whom wife, parent, child, brother, or sister is dependent for support shall be allowed ten dollars a month for the support of every such dependent, payable directly to such dependent or the person charged with the guardianship of any of them: Provided, That not more than twenty dollars shall be paid for this purpose in any month on account of any drafted man.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the President to order and execute a draft in each of the States heretofore declared in rebellion, so far as the territory of said State shall be under the military occupation of the United States; and any State may procure volunteers from any of the States declared in rebellion except Tennessee and have them credited to the quotas of the State procuring the same; but all persons residents of any loyal State volunteering in any other loyal State shall be credited to the State of his residence.

Mr. SCHENCK. The bill which passed the House was the one submitted by my friend from Delaware, [Mr. SMITHERS.] The Senate have stricken that out and sent us their bill, No. 286. The gentleman from Maryland has moved a substitute for the Senate bill. I shall ask the House to stand by its own bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If we adopt the Senate amendment will it allow one State to go into other States and procure substitutes?

Mr. SCHENCK. There is no law prohibiting it and there is no law allowing it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When each State is assigned her quota does not that prohibit her from going beyond her own limits?

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman asks me for my construction of the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the gentleman to give me his opinion, as he is familiar with military law.

Mr. SCHENCK. My opinion is that they cannot go into any State to recruit unless it is allowed by law. It is not allowed by law now.

Mr. MALLORY. Permit me to ask the gentleman if he did not say the other day, in the course of an argument, that a bill was passed through this body, introduced by Mr. Blair, of Missouri, which does expressly allow one State to subsidize another.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is not a part of this Senate amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Is it not an existing law?

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill has not yet passed the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to submit an amendment to the proposition of the Senate, which will put at rest all contrariety of opinion upon that point, merely to test the sense of the House. In that connection I will say that I know of my own personal knowledge that under existing laws—whether with or without the assent of the Secretary of War I am not prepared to say—that practice is indulged in which it seems a majority of this House is disposed to prohibit. It is notorious that at this moment in the District of Columbia there are agents of other States here engaged in securing for citizens of other States the absconding negroes of the South coming within the borders of the District of Columbia. One very great evil is growing out of it. There is a competition between the agents of different States and citizens of adjoining States, and the result is that the price of substitutes is going up to a very high figure.

With a view to give direction to the very few remarks I desire to make, I desire the Clerk to read an amendment I propose to submit before the previous question is called to the Senate proposition.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any of the States to send recruiting agents into other States and Territories to enlist soldiers to be credited to the States that may procure their enlistment; and no State shall be credited with soldiers recruited who are not citizens of the State claiming the credit, or foreigners who do not owe allegiance to the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. It is hardly worth while to say that I propose this amendment with no unkind feelings toward any section of the country, as I entertain no such feelings. I desire to act in a very liberal spirit. In my humble judgment the evils resulting from this practice of recruiting by State agents the absconding slaves more than overbalances any good which can possibly result from it. These slaves of the South who have absconded owe military duty to the Government of the United States, as much so, according to the laws of Congress, as the white man; and when the Government is about to call for five hundred thousand additional men, if the States which are engaged in this practice send into the sections in which these slaves have absconded and take two hundred thousand of them away, the inevitable effect is to deprive the Government of the United States of the services of that number of men, for thereby two hundred thousand white men are exempted from the service. If the Congress of the United States would take a firm and decided stand, from which it could not be driven, authorizing the United States Government officers alone to go into the South and obtain recruits for the Army, all the States of the Union will be equally benefited and all be equally affected by the draft.

Under existing laws, I repeat, when northern States recruit two hundred thousand fugitives and are credited for them, an equal number of their citizens are exempt from military duty. But if my amendment could prevail and the Government of the United States have alone the right to recruit fugitives from service, every State in the Union would have its fair proportion of soldiers to furnish to make up any number needed for the Army; and we would avoid those State jealousies and rivalries which tend so seriously to interfere with the measures required to quell this insurrection.

I hope that the mere statement of the proposition will satisfy the House as to the propriety of adopting my amendment. It is a vital matter to us. Can it not be foreseen by gentlemen that it will have the effect to discourage and disgust the States that will not adopt this policy? I hope that Maryland when she responds to the call of the President for troops will turn her back upon that policy. As one of her sons I would advise her people to stand ready at all times to fight out this fight to the bitter end; and if some States will not engage in that policy why should others be allowed to do so? Let us bring up the whole country breast-high to this fight. Let all the citizens of the land know that each owes his allegiance to the country, ay, his heart's blood, if the country requires the sacrifice. Let that sentiment go abroad from this common center over the whole land. Let us have none of that huckstering of agents of the States outbidding each other for ignorant negroes to take the place of their citizens in the ranks of the Army. Let our constituents be taught that each State must rely upon its resources for them to make up any deficiency in our Army which may exist after the common Government of the Union has exhausted the means which is afforded by the rebellious States.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have made my object sufficiently plain, and leave the proposition to the judgment of the House. And I will conclude by saying that when I voted against the House bill, for which this bill from the Senate is a substitute, I was not influenced by any opposition to the clause of that bill which proposed a repeal of the laws which allow of a money commutation for military service. On that point I am not unwilling to yield to the wishes of the President and Secretary of War. This privilege of recruiting by State agents outside of the State for which they are appointed was in the bill of the House, and on that account I voted against that measure, and will continue to vote against any bill which contains a proposition, in my judgment, so mischievous. I know from my personal knowledge that under existing laws authority has been given to agents to go to Alexandria in search of recruits, for the purpose of crediting them to the State in whose service the agent is. So that if the policy of Congress is that each State shall rely on its own citizens to perform the duty which they owe to the country, it is necessary to put in this statute a prohibitory clause that cannot be hereafter misunderstood or misconceived by any of the officers of Government.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I gave way in order that the gentleman from Maryland might have an amendment read for information; but I have no idea of being drawn into the discussion of this matter.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will make a proposition to the House. I had already promised to my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] that he should have an opportunity of offering an amendment containing two sections of a bill introduced some time ago from the Committee on Military Affairs, about which everybody was then agreed, and which is asked for by the Department. While keeping the control of this bill within the management of the House, I will let in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. THOMAS,] and call the previous question first on that amendment, so that he shall have a vote on it. Then I will call for a vote on the other amendments. Perhaps my colleague and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will agree to put their two amendments together.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir. I am willing to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the House may, by unanimous consent, allow all the amendments to be received, and the previous question to be called and seconded on them, and the votes to be taken upon them one after another. Otherwise the previous question will have to be moved on each amendment by itself.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the House will by unanimous consent agree that all the amendments of the gentlemen desiring to offer them may be offered at this time and then allow the previous question to be moved on them, I will be satisfied.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendments must be acted on separately.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question on the amendments now pending—

Mr. MALLORY. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] in order? I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. THOMAS] to be an amendment to an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the amendment of the Senate is by the rule considered as the original text, and the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is therefore only an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw my objection to all the amendments being offered.

There being no further objection, Messrs. PRUYN, HOLMAN, GARFIELD, and MORRILL indicated that they would offer amendments.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move the previous question on all these various amendments, not including the substitute of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. DAVIS.]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question being first upon the adoption of the amendment submitted by Mr. INGERSOLL, it was read, as follows:

Add after the word "soldiers," at the end of the fourth line, "except such States or Territories or parts thereof declared in rebellion."

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

The question was next on the amendment submitted by Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, with the following result—yeas 63, noes 62, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Blair, Brooks, James S. The SPEAKER voted in the negative, making a tie.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, called for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 62, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. HOLMAN stated that Mr. HARRINGTON had paired with Mr. MARVIN.

Mr. ANCONA stated that Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania had paired with Mr. LONGYEAR.

Mr. HARDING stated that Mr. GRIDER had paired with Mr. BAXTER.

The question then recurred on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, was rejected.

Mr. WILSON demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 62, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Blair, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Finck, Ganson, Griswold, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. ORTH stated that he was paired with Mr. PRUYN of New York.

Mr. COBB stated that his colleague, Mr. McINDOE, was paired with Mr. McDOWELL.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, stated that his colleague, Mr. PIKE, was paired with Mr. CRAVENS.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question again recurred on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 65, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Blair, Brooks, James S. Randall, Rogers, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, Stevens, Sweet, Voorhees, Ward, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—54.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the following amendment submitted by Mr. PRUYN:

And he further enacted, That for the purpose of aiding the operations of the Government in raising and maintaining the troops hereby authorized to be enrolled and called out, the act entitled "An act to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange," approved June 17, 1864, commonly known as the gold bill, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PRUYN. I will withdraw that to submit it on another occasion.

The question then recurred on the following amendment submitted by Mr. ORTH; which was agreed to:

And be it further enacted, That the number of men heretofore furnished by any of the States shall be credited to said State on her quota in any future draft in proportion to the length of time for which said men were furnished.

The question next recurred on the following amendment submitted by Mr. MORRILL:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized at any time hereafter to accept of one hundred thousand volunteers for the term of one year, to be composed of men exceeding forty-five years of age, of requisite physical ability, who shall be employed in the service of the United States for post and garrison duty, to guard lines of communication, or such other military service as they may be found suitable for; and the force herein authorized shall be organized and officered as other regiments and companies of volunteers now are, and shall be styled the Old Guard, and shall receive, in addition to such pay, rations, and clothing as is now paid or allowed to other troops in the service of the United States, $100 bounty, one half of which shall be paid when such men shall be mustered into service, and the other half when honorably discharged therefrom, or at the expiration of the term of service.

The question next recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. GARFIELD, which was to add the following new sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That any persons resident in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, or Arkansas, who may voluntarily enlist in the military service of the United States for a term of not more than three years, or during the war, or not less than one year, shall be entitled to the benefits and privileges of existing laws; and such persons shall be mustered into the regiments or other organizations of whatsoever State they may elect, or, in the case of colored troops, shall be assigned as now provided by law. And the States or subdivisions of States procuring such enlistments shall receive credit for such persons in accordance with the laws in other cases: Provided, That such enlistments as are authorized in any State, under the provisions of this act, shall only continue until such State shall have been made subject to a call for troops: And provided further, That no enlistments shall be made of any soldiers, either in or out of any State, except those enumerated herein, unless full credit is given to the State to which the enlisted soldier belongs.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That section three of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct district provost marshals, under the direction of the Provost Marshal General, to make a draft for fifty per cent. in addition to the number required to fill the quota of any district, as provided by said section.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That instead of traveling pay, all drafted persons reporting at the place of rendezvous shall be allowed transportation from their places of residence; and persons discharged at the place of rendezvous shall be allowed transportation to their places of residence.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the twentieth section of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1864, shall be construed to mean that the Secretary of War shall discharge minors under the age of eighteen years under the circumstances and on the conditions prescribed in said section; and hereafter, if any officer of the United States shall knowingly enlist or muster into the military service any person under the age of sixteen years, with or without the consent of his parent or guardian, such person so enlisted or recruited shall be immediately and unconditionally discharged; and such recruiting or mustering officer shall be dismissed the service, with forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and shall be subject to such further punishment as a court-martial may direct.

Mr. GARFIELD called for a separate vote on each section of the amendment.

Mr. MALLORY demanded the yeas and nays on the first section.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 69, nays 53, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Boyd, Broomall, Cobb, Cole, Croswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Gardfield, Gooch, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. NAYS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Blair, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, William H. Randall, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Sweet, Thomas, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Winfield—53.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Thomas T. Randall, Rogers, Scott, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Stevens, Stuart, Tracy, Voorhees, Ward, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—60.

So the first section of the amendment was agreed to.

The remaining portion of the amendment was then agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now call the previous question on the substitute, and the amendment offered to it by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. Davis.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Will the gentleman from Ohio withdraw that demand and allow me to explain in a few words my amendment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, illness and its consequences have deprived me of the opportunity of assisting the deliberations of the House on this topic till this time, when it is not to be expected that anything I may say shall at all influence the result. But I beg that I may be allowed to have their attention for a few moments to explain the propositions which I have offered, and which embody in the shape of a bill what I think the exigencies of the time demand.

I am not under any delusion respecting the fate of the proposition. I know that the amendment is not likely to receive the vote of a majority of the House. I despair of seeing the House rise to the height of the occasion and show that degree of energy which the crisis demands. I do not presume to put my judgment against theirs; all I desire is that I shall have an opportunity of spreading before the country briefly what I think the great cause of the nation demands at our hands, and leave it to the future and events to decide who is right.

We want men not money. We want men to bear arms. Whatever stands in the way of getting men is striking directly at the existence of the Republic, and therefore not a subject for consideration touching its political expediency. To allow men to buy by money exemption from personal military service is to place money in the hands of the Government and not men. To commute service for money is to throw upon that class of the community which cannot raise the requisite sum the whole burden of compulsory military service. No democratic Government can defend any such provision. It is new in the history of military organization. No aristocratic or despotic country has ever ventured to attempt it, and those who undertake to defend it upon principle reason upon ground I cannot understand. It allows one man to pay his obligations to the Republic in money and requires another to pay it in blood.

Therefore the first provision of my amendment prohibits any commutation for personal service. It leaves open the right, which is secure in every compulsory military organization in the world, to furnish a substitute, which gives the Government at least the requisite ability to meet and repel the public enemy.

The Senate bill is fatally defective, though it repeals the commutation clause, in limiting the draft to one year. That pushes a mob of raw recruits against veteran corps to encounter inevitable defeat and shed useless blood.

The opposition to a vigorous draft is wholly incomprehensible. It is the republican and the only republican mode of raising an army. The Roman republic placed her youth liable to military service on the Campus Martius, and the consul selected at will whom he chose.

The French republic saved the existence of the nation and the principles of republican liberty by the law of conscription. And it has been the law of the American Republic from the Administration of President Washington, and the law I propose merely adds vigor to that system.

The next provision of my amendment relates to the classification of the military population. No civilized nation includes in one draft all the men from eighteen or twenty years of age to forty-five years of age. There is no inequality in that. The rule of all military Powers is to make the army consist of and to cause it to be drawn from the young men of the country—the men under twenty-five or twenty-six years of age, before they become involved in the responsibilities of life, before, in a large proportion, they are married, before families have accumulated around them, before they become entangled in the business occupations of life, before large masses of workmen and great capitals are dependent upon their personal attention and their capacity to manage business. Every military nation makes that the first and preferred source from which to recruit its army; older men, having passed that period of liability to active military service, form the national guard, or a reserve for great emergencies. I therefore have provided in the second section of the bill that the military population of the United States shall be divided into two classes: the first to consist of the men between eighteen and twenty-five, and the second to consist of those between twenty-five and forty-five.

The next thing we want is that there shall be a regular, constant levy of force to supply the deficiencies of our troops, the casualties of the service, the expiration of terms of enlistment, and to enable the Government to advance with a steady, unvarying pressure upon the enemy; so that it shall not be hereafter, as it has been heretofore, that we shall send an army into the field and wait till it is wasted by disease and by the fire of the enemy and then rest on our arms till the enemy recruits his ranks while we are recruiting ours, and refreshed by repose and strong in the fruits of their vigorous conscription they stand with full ranks to dispute our advance. Therefore the third section of my substitute requires that every year during the rebellion the President shall cause to be levied two hundred and fifty thousand men to be armed and trained and organized provisionally, and sent to the front or held as a reserve to be moved as the President may direct, according to the exigencies of the service.

The fourth section of the substitute provides that if more men are needed for the service in any year the President shall cause the rest to be levied from the men over twenty-five and under forty-five, which subjects them in their regular turn to the responsibilities and dangers of war.

Then, as there is an earnest feeling all over the country in favor of procuring men by volunteering rather than by draft, the substitute further provides that prior to and concurrently with the draft, until it shall be filled, the President shall call for and accept volunteers to fill the requisition to the extent of the draft, and he is authorized to pay them $300 for an enlistment for three years and proportionally for a less period, to be designated by the Government. That will enable the Government to procure, as far as volunteering and bounties can do so, the men it requires. It imposes no definite delay between the call of volunteers and the enforcement of the draft, for no man can regulate the advance of the enemy. No man can determine the exigencies of war. No man can say how long a time may elapse before this capital is in danger, before retreating forces may require men to be moved rapidly to their support. And therefore I leave to the discretion of the President to call for volunteers as long before or as shortly before the draft as prudence or the necessities of the case may dictate.

The bill has this other provision, essential to prevent the draft being intolerable to the poor men: that men who have parent or wife, child or sister, dependent on their labor for support, shall, when drafted, be allowed ten dollars a month for each such dependent, provided that the allowance shall not exceed twenty dollars in any one month on account of any one conscript, and the sum is payable not to the conscript but to or for the benefit of the dependent person for whose support it is a charitable provision. These deserted persons must starve, or go to the poor-house, or be honorably supported by the nation which exacts the time and blood of their natural protector.

And then the final provision is that it shall be the duty of the Government—not merely giving authority, but that it shall be the duty of the Government to enforce the draft in every district in the rebel States occupied by the armies of the Republic. A traitor in the midst of loyal men with a musket on his shoulder will make as good and as vigorous a soldier as any man. Napoleon prostrated Europe at his feet with men conscripted from hostile nations, who would, if they could, have cut the throats of the men by whose side they fought.

There is also another provision that any of the loyal States may send agents into the rebel States and there procure volunteers, which shall be credited to the loyal State procuring them. I have also provided that persons residing in one State who shall enlist or volunteer in another State shall be credited, in calculating the draft, to the State in which they reside.

Now, sir, in my judgment this bill, as I have proposed to amend it, will give to the Government the power to create an army which, if there be only wisdom and energy at the White House, will be able to stamp out the rebellion in another campaign. This campaign cannot accomplish it; we have not men enough in the field, nor on the decisive points of the field; and we cannot get enough in time to accomplish that purpose during this campaign. What I desire is to adopt a system that shall keep our armies full continually, that will enable them to pour a constant stream of fire upon the enemies of the Republic, till the last armed rebel shall be driven into the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. MALLORY. Did I understand the gentleman from Maryland to say that his bill provides for the enlistment of soldiers in the rebel States by the loyal States to be credited to the States enlisting them?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Yes, sir, it allows them to go into the rebel States and enlist. I have put that provision in, in deference to the feeling which exists on this side of the House. It is not a provision which meets my approval entirely, but I do not regard it as one of vital importance, and therefore for the purpose of meeting the wishes of gentlemen on this side of the House I have inserted it as one of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK demanded the previous question upon the substitute.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, demanded the yeas and nays upon his substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 26, nays 102, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Arnold, Ashley, Baxter, Broomall, Freeman Clarke, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Donnelly, Eckley, Garfield, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Longyear, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Orth, Scofield, Sloan, Stevens, and Woodbridge—26.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. FENTON stated that he had paired with Mr. PRUYN on all votes on which they would be likely to disagree, but believing they would not disagree upon this question he voted in the negative.

Mr. HOOPER stated that Mr. BOUTWELL had paired with Mr. NOBLE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received by Mr. HICKEY, their Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate (No. 154) for the better organization of the quartermaster's office.

Also, that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill of the House (No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1865.

Also, that the Senate have disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service.

Also, that the Senate have passed an act (No. 325) to repeal the act of the 17th June, 1864, prohibiting the sales of gold and foreign exchange; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The question recurred on concurring in the Senate amendment as amended.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the House ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

IN REGARD TO THE EVENING SESSION.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the House dispense with the evening session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I hope that the House will now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the evening session was dispensed with. There are three conference reports to be made this evening.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If that be so, then I hope that the motion to reconsider will prevail.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now withdraw the motion that the evening session be dispensed with.

WRECKED SEAMEN.

The SPEAKER stated that the Senate had returned the House amendment to Senate bill No. 246, for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne upon the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service.

A motion was made that the House insist on its amendment, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senate have notified us that they have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the preservation and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending 30th of June, 1865. I move that the House agree to that report. The items stricken out and from which disagreement they have receded were reported by the Committee of Ways and Means on special recommendation of the Department. The Senate amendment from which the House recedes appropriates $177,000 for the land defenses of San Francisco. It has been specially recommended by General Delafield, chief of the engineer corps, and by the Secretary of War.

The report was adopted.

Mr. PENDLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLD BILL REPEALED.

The next bill upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 325, to repeal the act of the 17th June, 1864, prohibiting the sale of gold and foreign exchange.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOOPER demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 29, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cole, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Loan, Long, Longyear, Marcy, McAllister, Middleton, William H. NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, William G. Brown, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Denning, Dixon, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Hutchins, Jenckes, William Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Mallory, Marvin, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Rogers, Scofield, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, Stevens, Voorhees, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—66.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ASHLEY said: I voted for the original bill with great reluctance, and I vote for its repeal with much pleasure.

Mr. SCHENCK stated that Mr. KELLEY had paired off.

Mr. DAWSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a privileged question. When the select committee on the investigation in reference to the Treasury Department made its report yesterday, the chairman of the committee asked permission for the minority to file a report subsequent to that time.

That minority has to-day presented that report. I notice that with the report are submitted several documents which the committee rejected as not being evidence before the committee. I move that those documents thus submitted and ordered by the committee not to be a part of the record be rejected from among the papers connected with that minority report.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the House take a recess at half past four?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BROOKS. I have some remarks to submit upon this subject whenever the proper time arrives.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to extend the session ten minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

Mr. KERNAN. After the recess, will not my colleague have the floor in the evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is a question of privilege, and the gentleman from New York will be entitled to the floor after the recess if he is upon the floor when the time for the recess arrives.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire if this is a debatable question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it is. The Chair knows of no rule to prevent its being debated.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. If objection is made to the reception of the minority report, is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The minority report was ordered by the House to be received at the time the majority report was presented.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my question of privilege until the evening session.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman has not the floor and cannot withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether he can withdraw it under the circumstances.

Half past four o'clock having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LOAN asked leave of absence for the remainder of the session for his colleague, Mr. Knox, on account of sickness.

Leave was granted.

MILITARY ROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back an act (S. No. 23) granting land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATHAN S. BRENTON.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution which is absolutely necessary to save an innocent man from ruin.

The resolution, which was read, directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the account of Major Nathan S. Brenton, a paymaster in the service of the United States, with $2,600,000, being for the United States Treasury notes destroyed by the burning of the steamer Ruth on the Mississippi river while in his charge, if, on examination of the evidence by the Paymaster General, he shall deem him justly entitled to such credit.

Mr. NOBLE. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will hear me before he objects.

Mr. NOBLE. I sought to inquire after the evidence in that case the other day, and it was refused.

Mr. STEVENS. The evidence is all on file, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. NOBLE. I must insist upon my objection.

COMPENSATION OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉES.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the laborers and employes thereof, out of the contingent fund, twenty per cent. in addition to the compensation as it was from the commencement of the present session, and that Sandy Bruce, the colored assistant in the bath-room, be paid as a laborer at the same rate for the same period.

Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire, objected.

SANDY BRUCE.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, asked unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund to Sandy Bruce, the colored assistant in the bath-room, the compensation of a laborer from the commencement of the present session.

There being no objection, the resolution was received and adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALLY C. NORTHRUP.

Mr. SLOAN, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on Public Lands, a bill for the relief of Sally C. Northrup; which was read a first and second time.

The bill gives to Sally C. Northrup, of Beloit, Wisconsin, permission to enter on the public lands certain land warrants issued under the act of February 11, 1847.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BLUE MONT COLLEGE.

Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 73, to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the trustees of Blue Mont College to enter a certain quarter section of land," approved March 2, 1861.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is too late in the session to go into the consideration of private bills.

Mr. HALE. The Private Calendar has hardly been taken up three times during the session. There are a good many bills upon it to which no objection will be made.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order if the gentleman from New York, who is entitled to the floor on a question of privilege, yields the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKS. Retaining my right to resume the floor, I will yield.

Mr. HALE called for tellers on his motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox and Woodbridge were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, (Mr. KNAPP in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar, resuming its reading where it was left off on last objection day.

GEORGE MOWRY.

A bill for the relief of George Mowry. The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George Mowry the sum of $72 12 in full for conveying two prisoners from Somerset jail, in Pennsylvania, to Pittsburg, in the year 1841, by order of the United States deputy marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The report states that the services for which this appropriation is asked were performed in 1841, and the claim was presented to the Thirtieth Congress, and at the second session thereof Mr. John A. Rockwell, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill appropriating $72 12 for the relief of the claimant. Upon a full examination of the claim the committee think Mr. Mowry is justly entitled to that amount and no more.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN WARREN AND SON.

The bill directs the Treasurer of the United States to pay to John Warren & Son $500 in full satisfaction of a draft drawn and dated at Fort Bliss, Texas, December 4, 1860, by Thomas G. Rhett, paymaster United States Army, on the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, payable to the order of Frank De Ruyther, for $500, upon their filing the draft with the Treasurer.

From the report it appears that on the 4th of December, 1860, John G. Rhett, a paymaster in the United States Army, stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas, drew a draft on the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York for $500, for the purpose of paying off troops in the United States service at that point, which draft was cashed by parties at Fort Bliss in the same manner they had been in the habit of doing for some time previous thereto, and the money disbursed in payment of the troops. The draft then passed by indorsement through a number of hands, and came, through the regular course of business transaction, into the hands of the present holders, Warren & Son, who presented it to Mr. Cisco, Assistant Treasurer, for payment, who declined to pay the same upon the ground that the drawer, John G. Rhett, had joined the southern confederacy, and was a defaulter to the Government of the United States, but that he had to his credit on the books of the Treasury, for some time subsequent to the date of the draft, a sum exceeding $16,000. The draft being refused payment, relief was then sought by letter addressed to Hon. Simon Cameron, who replied, November 1, 1861, as follows:

"That Rhett was an accredited agent of the Government at the time the check was drawn, and that it was purchased in good faith, and that there is no doubt the Government is equitably and perhaps legally bound to pay them, but that there is no relief for holders except through the action of Congress."

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES F. ANDERSON.

An act (S. No. 207) for the relief of Charles F. Anderson. [Objected to by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, their Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1865.

Also that the Senate have passed a joint resolution (No. 77) explanatory of the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The committee again resumed its session.

D. McV. STUART.

A bill (H. R. No. 489) for the relief of D. McV. Stuart.

The bill directs the Secretary to pay D. McV. Stuart the sum of $121 30, in full for money expended while recruiting soldiers for the United States service, by order of Colonel Peter E. Bland, of the sixth regiment Missouri volunteers, in the year 1861.

The report states that the claimant was a private in the sixth Missouri regiment of infantry, and that Colonel Peter E. Bland, commanding the sixth regiment, on the 21st October, 1861, issued an order authorizing him to go to the State of Minnesota, or elsewhere, to recruit for the regiment. That he proceeded to Minnesota, and there enlisted eight soldiers, all of whom Colonel Bland certifies entered the service—four of them in his regiment and the others in other regiments. Upon submitting his account of money actually expended to the proper officer, which amount in the aggregate was $208, it was cut down to the sum of $86 70, on the ground, first, that they had no evidence that more than four of the recruits were ever mustered into the United States service; and second, that thirty cents per day for rations and lodging per man was all the Government allowed, and that the recruiting officer being an enlisted man they had no right to commute his rations, and therefore only allowed thirty cents per day for his subsistence.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KNAPP reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and had instructed him to report three bills to the House, with the recommendation that the same do pass.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a privileged question. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, to make a report. There were but three items of any importance before the conference committee. The other matters were of no importance. In the first place, there was the question about the old Hall of the House of Representatives. The clause in reference to it had been non-concurred in by the Senate. The conference committee agreed to cut down the appropriation from $24,000 to $15,000.

Then there was the item for the Columbia Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind. All of the appropriation except some seven thousand dollars was struck out by the Senate. The House agreed to recede from that clause making an appropriation for the building of a house in the grounds; and instead of that an appropriation was made to buy thirteen acres of ground adjoining the institution, and on which an old house can be moved.

The next item of any importance was in regard to the Washington aqueduct. The House, it will be remembered, had confined the expenditure of the $150,000 appropriated to building a dam and bringing the water from beyond the reservoir to below it, so as to get the water of the Potomac. The Senate struck that out, and gave the $150,000 to the general purposes of the aqueduct. The House committee of conference was unwilling to leave it in that way. They supposed that the $150,000 might be spent without our still getting the Potomac water, and that when we came here next session we could hardly see what had become of it, as we can hardly see what has become of the $3,000,000 already expended. As we could not agree upon it, the House committee preferred to strike out the whole item and let the work stop rather than have it go on in that way. We disagreed upon it, and the whole appropriation falls. That is about all the matters of importance passed on by the conference committee. If gentlemen have any inquiry to make about other matters in the bill I will be happy to give all the information I possess.

The question was taken on the report of the conference committee, and it was adopted.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, as follows:

GEORGE MOWRY.

A bill (H. R. No. 458) for the relief of George Mowry was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN WARREN AND SON.

A bill (H. R. No. 479) for the relief of John Warren & Son was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

D. McV. STUART.

A bill (H. R. No. 489) for the relief of D. McV. Stuart was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAN FRANCISCO BRANCH MINT.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 186, authorizing the erection of buildings for the branch mint at San Francisco.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was read. It appropriates $300,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of a site, if necessary, and the erection of a suitable building or buildings for the use of a branch mint in San Francisco, California.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERK TO NAVAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. GRISWOLD asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution directing the payment of one dollar per day during the present session of Congress to the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs in addition to the compensation heretofore provided.

Mr. BROOMALL objected.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. HALE moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. KNAPP in the chair,) it being considered as objection day.

HORACE E. DIMOCK.

A bill (H. R. No. 490) for the relief of Horace E. Dimock, of St. Louis, Missouri. [Objected to by Mr. LOAN.]

C. J. FIELD AND C. F. CLAY.

A bill (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of C. J. Field and C. F. Clay, of Bolivar county, Mississippi. [Objected to by Mr. FARNSWORTH.]

HEIRS OF ISAAC I. STEVENS.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 84) for the relief of the heirs of the late Isaac I. Stevens. [Objected to by Mr. ORTH.]

FRANCES MUNSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Frances Munson.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Frances Munson, the daughter of Major Isaac Hubbel, of the revolutionary army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500.

It appears from the report that Mrs. Frances Munson is a widow lady of the age of eighty-two years, entirely blind, quite helpless, and in indigent circumstances. She is the daughter of Major Isaac Hubbel, of the army of the Revolution, who was stationed at West Point at the time Benedict Arnold attempted to betray his country by surrendering that important post to the British. Major Hubbel met a premature death in consequence of his exposure in the revolutionary war, leaving his daughter, now Mrs. Frances Munson, only eight years old. He did not live to share the bounty of his Government in the shape of a pension, and no member of his family has hitherto asked for or received pecuniary aid from that source.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

COLONEL ARCHIBALD CRARY.

A bill (H. R. No. 528) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Colonel Archibald Crary.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to the heirs-at-law of Colonel Archibald Crary, deceased, the sum of $1,256 44, without interest, the balance due Colonel Crary, in full, after crediting the United States the amounts paid by him, from time to time; at the current exchange value of the money in which the payments were made; the sum being the balance due for his services as colonel of a regiment of the Rhode Island brigade, from the 16th of December, 1777, until the 16th of March, 1780, three years and three months.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMZI L. BURNES.

A bill (H. R. No. 529) for the relief of Amzi L. Burnes. [Objected to by Mr. WEBSTER.]

GEORGE CALVERT.

A bill (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of George Calvert.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to pay George Calvert $500, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for the loss of his ferry-boat, on the Patuxent river, taken by order of the military authorities of the United States in September, 1861.

It appears from the report that George Calvert was the owner of a ferry on the Patuxent river, in Prince George's county, Maryland. On the 11th September, 1861, Lieutenant Hogg, with a squad of United States troops, known as Colonel Young's Kentucky cavalry, took possession of the ferry and ordered the ferryman, an indentured servant of the petitioner, to take him and his squad of seven men and horses across the river. The ferryman, who seems to have been a valuable and faithful servant, remonstrating against taking all the men and horses at one load, and stated that the boat was not able to carry all with safety. The lieutenant, however, declared they had not time to make two trips, and that all must go at once, and ordered the ferryman to take them all in his boat and proceed across the river. On the passage the boat, being overloaded, foundered and sank, drowning the lieutenant and the ferryman. The boat being lost, and the petitioner being a poor man and unable to procure another, his ferry, which was the only means of support for himself and family, became useless, and he now asks the Government to compensate him for the loss he has sustained. The proof being clear and conclusive as to the fact of the impressment of the boat into the service of the United States by an officer of the Army, and that the loss arose by his overloading it, the committee think it only just that he should be repaid the loss occasioned by the act. The petitioner claims compensation for the loss of his slave, who had near two years to serve, when he would be free, and who undoubtedly lost his life in consequence of the overloading of the boat. But the committee do not think it accords with the policy and practice of the Government to pay for the losses of life in cases of this kind, and they therefore disallow the claim for the slave, but allow the petitioner $500 for the other loss sustained by him.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EGBERT A. THOMPSON.

GARRETT R. BARRY.

LOUISVILLE AND BARDSTOWN TURNPIKE.

A bill (H. R. No. 544) for the relief of the Louisville and Bardstown Turnpike Company. [Objected to by Mr. ALLISON.]

COLONEL H. C. DE AHNA.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 105) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military services. [Objected to by Mr. THAYER.]

The joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over to Henry C. De Ahna the sum of $2,000 deposited by De Ahna with Jay Cooke & Co. to the credit of C. V. Hogan, an employé in the secret service of the Treasury Department, or any part thereof, or to cause the whole or part of the same to be confiscated and paid over to the Treasury of the United States, as, in the judgment of the Secretary, may appear just.

The joint resolution was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JEAN M. LANDER.

A bill (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Jean M. Lander, widow of F. W. Lander, deceased. [Objected to by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

HORACE GATES.

A bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Horace Gates.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Horace Gates, of Franklin, Vermont, upon the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1862, and continue during his natural life.

It appears from the report that Gates enlisted in Captain Martin D. Follet's company, in Colonel Luther Dixon's regiment of Vermont militia, about the 20th of September, 1813, and was honorably discharged on or about the 20th of November, 1813, at Plattsburg, New York; that during his term of service the regiment to which he belonged was at Burlington, Vermont; Cumberland Head, Chazy, Champlain, and Plattsburg, in the State of New York, and La Cole in Canada; that during a part of the time in their march they were without tents and were exposed to the rigor of the climate during the fall of the year. That the tents of the regiment were struck in the morning of the day they were discharged at Plattsburg, New York, and the troops remained during the forenoon exposed to a cold, heavy rain and sleet. He was, at the place of his discharge, three days' march from his place of residence, (Huntsburg, now Franklin,) and was obliged to march home, carrying three days' rations. The latter part of this march was made in a heavy snow-storm, and the petitioner caught an addition to the severe cold already contracted while in the service of the United States and brought on an attack of pleurisy. The petitioner has never fully recovered from this attack, as his constitution, which previous to his enlistment was strong and vigorous, had been shattered and weakened, and is now unable to obtain a livelihood by manual labor, and has been for the last eight years, in consequence of the lameness in his left side, which, at times, extends to the region of the heart. The certificates of the surgeons show that disability has increased with the advance of his years.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EZEKIEL DARLING.

A bill (H. R. No. 556) for the relief of Ezekiel Darling.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ezekiel Darling on the pension rolls, at the rate of four dollars per month, during his natural life, the pension to commence from the passage of the bill.

It appears from the report that Ezekiel Darling, a soldier of 1812, is in feeble health and entirely blind; that he performed long service in behalf of his country in three wars—the French, Tripolitan, and through the whole late war with England; that the petitioner performed many daring and praiseworthy acts, aiding, supplying, and rescuing shipwrecked mariners.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH PIKE.

A bill (H. R. No. 557) granting a pension to Joseph Pike.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Joseph Pike, a private of the war of 1812, on the pension roll, at the rate provided or hereafter to be provided in cases of half disability.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS.

A bill (H. R. No. 196) for the benefit of half-breeds and mixed-bloods of the Winnebago tribe of Indians.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the President of the United States to exempt from the operation of the act of Congress approved February 21, 1863, entitled "An act for the removal of the Winnebago Indians, and for the sale of their reservation in Minnesota for their benefit," such half-breeds and mixed-bloods of the Winnebago tribe of Indians as are, in his opinion, sufficiently advanced in civilization, and as have abandoned, or may abandon, their tribal relation, and permit them to retain and occupy the several tracts of land that have been allotted to them, respectively, under the provisions of the first article of a treaty made and concluded at the city of Washington the 15th of April, 1859, between the United States and the Winnebago tribe of Indians; and that the half-breeds and mixed-bloods be permitted to hold the tracts in severalty, for which patents shall be issued to them in fee simple, and they shall be subject to taxation as other lands from and after the date of the patents.

JOSEPH C. G. KENNEDY.

A bill (H. R. No. 294) for the relief of Joseph C. G. Kennedy.

Five members objected.

Mr. PRUYN. I move that the committee rise. No matter how just and fair a bill may be, gentlemen rise and offer objections. After all these claims have been examined by the Committee of Claims this proceeding is a perfect farce.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KNAPP reported that the Committee of the Whole had had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass, joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of certain moneys therein mentioned;

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Frances Munson;

A bill (H. R. No. 528) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Colonel Archibald Crary;

A bill (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of George Calvert;

A bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Horace Gates;

A bill (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling;

A bill (H. R. No. 557) granting a pension to Joseph Pike;

A bill (H. R. No. 194) for the benefit of half-breeds and mixed-bloods of the Winnebago tribe of Indians; and

A bill (H. R. No. 94) for the relief of Isaac R. Diller.

The several bills reported from the committee as above indicated were generally read a first and second time by their titles, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resume the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table, which was interrupted by the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] The Chair understands that, with the assent of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] that motion is withdrawn.

PAY OF ARMY MUSICIANS.

The last remaining business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution No. 77, explanatory of an act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers of the United States Army, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It resolves that the word "musicians" in the first section of the act is not to be construed to include musicians (other than leaders) employed as members of brigade and regimental bands; but such members of bands are to be paid as heretofore—one fourth of the members of each band thirty-four dollars per month, one fourth of them twenty dollars per month, and the remaining half of them seventeen dollars per month.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OBITUARY ADDRESSES ON MR. LOVEJOY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution directing the printing for the use of this House of ten thousand copies of the addresses made in the Senate and House of Representatives on the death of the late Owen Lovejoy; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

C. F. JOHNSON.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent of the House to take up House bill No. 384, for the relief of C. F. Johnson, of Alabama. I wish to say a few words in favor of the bill. Mr. Johnson was a soldier in the Mexican war. He was severely wounded, and is now a cripple for life. He lived at Mobile at the time of the breaking out of the rebellion. In order to avoid the secessionists he gathered all his little property and put it in a skiff which he launched, and steered to New Orleans. There his property was seized on suspicion that he was a secessionist, and it was lost. General Sherman himself, who was then in command at that point, approves of the payment of the amount claimed, and says that the claim is just and right, and that this man is a loyal citizen. He is now here, an object of charity. Justice and humanity require the payment of the claim, and I appeal to the House to pass the bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think that the man who could paddle a skiff from Mobile to New Orleans ought to be paid.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. W. RUSSELL'S ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. MOORHEAD called up House bill No. 337, for the relief of the administrator of W. W. Russell, late paymaster in the marine corps, which was postponed on last private bill day.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOORHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH WOODWARD.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the joint resolution for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpennig.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am very willing to hear the gentleman's speech, reserving the right to object to the joint resolution.

Mr. COFFROTH. I simply desire to say that Mrs. Woodward is the widow of George Woodward, who was killed by the Indians while he was carrying the mails to California. I believe the bill is just and ought to pass; and I ask the House to pass it.

Mr. PRUYN. If anything more is to be done about these private bills, I think it ought to be done in the regular way. Let us go back into committee, if that be the pleasure of the House, and go through the bills regularly on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of House bill No. 464.

Mr. RADFORD. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think if we have nothing else to do but to clear the Private Calendar we might as well adjourn.

THE LATE EXPLOSION AT THE ARSENAL.

Mr. INGERSOLL asked unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution appropriating $2,000, to be expended under the direction of the commandant of the arsenal, for the benefit of such of the sufferers from the recent explosion at said arsenal as are living and the near relatives of those not living.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was introduced and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARBITRARY ARRESTS.

Mr. EDEN asked consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a report of the names of all citizens of the State of Illinois, not being in the military or naval service of the United States, now confined in any prison without the limits of said State, under any military order, as well as the date of their arrest and the charges upon which they were committed; also, a list of such prisoners whose names have been furnished to the judges of the courts, in compliance with the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating proceedings in certain cases."

Mr. ORTH objected.

ENROLLED BILL AND RESOLUTION.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) to refer the claim of Nahum Ward back to the Court of Claims.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand from the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the House ought to remain in session some time yet to-night for the purpose of receiving reports of committees of conference which are expected from the Senate; and as it may be difficult to get a quorum together again if the House takes a recess, I will move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the President's annual message, with the understanding that debate may be interrupted at any moment for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to—ayes seventy, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STEVENS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the President's annual message, on which Mr. STILES was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STILES. Mr. Chairman, if I were to consult my own feelings I should not now trespass upon the time and patience of this House. If these were ordinary times I should return to my constituents with the record of my votes and quietly wait their judgment. The early day for final adjournment admonishes me that I should take as little of the remaining time as possible. The fact that our labors are rapidly coming to a close is suggestive of many reflections. The closing scenes incident to a protracted session of this body will very soon be announced to the country. That it will be welcome news, all will admit. We leave these spacious halls amid the din of battle and the clash of arms. We are about to meet before another forum; before the people who confidently and hopefully committed to our hands the destiny of a great nation and people. They will rightfully demand to know of us what we have done, in the many long wearisome months in which we have held counsel, to bring peace to this distracted land. Are we all ready to render an account that will satisfy the hopes and dispel the fears of those who have with so much interest watched our proceedings? Are you of the dominant party, who have wielded power with so much intolerance, ready to meet the question? What have you done to restore confidence? What have you done to end this war and restore this Union? These questions so pertinent we demand to be answered before a forum where there are no stringency rules to govern legislators; where there are no favored committees; where uninterrupted debate shall be had, and where you shall be compelled to answer.

Mr. Chairman, the high hopes of those who believed it possible that the proceedings of this body might be conducted under the auspices of a conservative majority vanished as the mist upon the assembling of this Congress. The Administration, with its immense power and patronage, speedily gave proof that the wavering border man and the doubtful conservator were the special objects of its favor and regard. The apparent closeness of the vote upon organization was at once dispelled, and we witnessed the election of a Speaker embodying all the heresies of abolitionism with the most apparent ease. Upon assuming his duties he announced to us and the country that the rebellion was in its death-struggle and would soon die a deserved death. From the seat you now occupy the Speaker will announce the adjournment of this body. What words of hope will he now give to his listening countrymen? After waiting patiently for the truth of his inaugural, will he silently make the announcement duty enjoins upon him? Can he charge that the struggle has been prolonged because we have opposed infractions of the Constitution which we have all sworn to support and defend, and the rights of an outraged and deceived people? Let him do so if he will, and the record he has made shall go out to confront him. He has had the power to place in the hands of committees from those who supported him all the questions that have been the subject of exciting discussions here, and upon all of them a majority has ever been ready to sanction the most unwise policy of the dominant party. We have succeeded in no efforts to investigate the corruption of the Administration; we have had no power through a single committee of bringing to the light the blunders and crimes of the men at the head of the Government. We have had charge of no committees to investigate the subject of arbitrary arrests and the flagrant violation of the rights of the citizen. Yours has been the iron rule. In the issue, therefore, to be presented we must maintain that for all that has been and all that has not been done you are responsible.

The deliberations of this body have been conducted in the fourth year of a war that is fast exhausting the energies, means, and men of the country; a war of your own making. You promised it should speedily end. You have had all the branches of the Government and have made no demand that has not been promptly met. Your resources have been abundant and you have showered your favors upon friends with lavish hands. The cohesive power of plunder has made your organization invulnerable. The great battles of this war have been almost within hearing of this Capitol. This beleaguered city has been the receptacle of the dead, wounded, and dying soldier. You have been reminded daily by your visits to hospitals and embalming-rooms of the countless victims in this slaughter. Amid it all you have never paused a moment to count the cost, the misery, the woe you have caused in your efforts to subjugate a people that your policy may prevail. All along your pathway have been found the monuments of your folly.

Sir, this nation had but fairly entered upon her great mission of spreading the principles of civil, political, and religious liberty throughout all the nations when it was suddenly arrested by the elevation at its head of a party that had been its enemy from the beginning. The liberality of our laws, the heroic devotion of our people to the principles of republican government, the varied character of our soil combined to perfect upon this continent a Government that ought never to have died by the hands of men made by its own power.

But before our system of government was perfected, before the maturity of its benign power, we have been cast upon the ocean of discord and are at the mercy of the waves of faction. Who shall now stay the angry waters that threaten to engulf us, and restore once more to harmony the restless masses that are being carried by the surges of fanaticism?

Mr. Chairman, before we meet again the question of whether we are to have a restored Union will be settled forever. The wisdom of the providence that shuts from our view the future no one can be found to question. It may be that we shall never look upon another scene like this. In the events so rapidly passing around us, all of us that remains as a people and nation will be shut out from our view forever. But I am not willing to yield it all without one more struggle for the preservation of what yet remains of the Constitution and Union. I know the passions of the people are inflamed, their prejudices stimulated to an extent that alarms; reason slumbers amid the hours of madness, and the storm of sectionalism, hate, and revenge rages wildly. I know that confidence is lost, and that the work of disintegration mars the beauty of all about us; that by your reckless action here you have left little hope; but I have not yet despaired.

Sir, the people, the masses North and South, love this Union too well to ever desire to see only its ghastly form. Born under its protecting influence, early taught to revere and love it, as the child is instinctively taught to love its protecting parent, they will never yield it up, and with its past glories and future hopes, without one great, grand, superhuman effort to save it. That it can be saved by the abolitionists, its enemies, who have prayed for its destruction, and are now reveling amid its partial ruins, no one, even though his faith would remove mountains, can believe. The destroyer will not save. The enemies of the Union will never restore liberty, because liberty and union are inseparable.

Sir, these are perilous times. That something is to be done and that speedily all agree. Is this to be a perpetual war? Is this ninety-day struggle to end only when our commerce is destroyed, resources exhausted, and bankruptcy and ruin come to the door of every man in this country? Is this abolition party to be continued in power? That we shall have war while we have a sectional party in power, I believe. Sectional parties never could have made the Union; it is folly and worse than folly to hope they can restore it now.

But I desire to call the attention of this House to the germ of a new trouble that I fear threatens to assail this already afflicted land. It is my purpose to be brief, but also to be candid. If in the exercise of the latter attribute I should incur the displeasure of those in this body who hold opposite views, let it be remembered that I am a Representative of the people, and as such shall use my privilege of free expressions of opinion in this Hall. I am responsible to my constituents and not to this House or to its majority for what I utter, and by virtue of my office I shall exercise the right to express whatever views I may entertain, however unpalatable they may be to one or more or all of my peers.

It is, I confess, humiliating that a member of

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JULY 4, 1864.

NEW SERIES.....No. 218.

this Congress should have occasion to refer to his privileges. The fault is not mine. I cannot forget that a Representative of the people has recently been censured in this Hall for the candid expression of his opinions, and as a precedent of persecution for opinion's sake has thus been established against all right and reason in the temple itself dedicated to free discussion, I consider it due to my conception of the great wrong then accomplished to protest against its repetition in my person. Sir, it would seem that an offended God has already made visible the signs of retribution for the recklessness with which we have been plunged into civil strife. Our deluded people have witnessed as its consequence the destruction of all that was most precious to them of their political inheritance. The shrine of their liberty has been profaned and its costly treasures trampled under foot. They have seen the bayonet at their ballot-boxes, the bayonet in their courts of justice, the bayonet in their legislative halls, at their homesteads, and at their bedsides in the dead of night. At every place once held sacred the bayonet has been seen, threatening, insulting, and applying the rule of force to the will of freemen.

But while the ordeal of a presidential election promised to purge the political system, the people looked forward to that day for their redemption. If that ark of safety had not been in view a deluge of popular resistance would have swept the land. But, sir, the people are now asking themselves, is it indeed in view? Is it more than an illusion, a counterfeit presentment, a shadow of the substance that is seen, mocking them with false assurances? Do they not trace the weaving of a snare for the ballot-boxes of next November? If so, in their names I say that ruin must be spared the Republic; if not through the forbearance of tyranny, if not through some latent virtue revealing itself at the eleventh hour in the reckless aspirant, then through the resistance of the people awakened at last from their sleep-walk while at the brink of the abyss. Sir, it may be held unreasonable that I should conjure up a phantom for the future when so many real horrors environ the present hour. But it is no phantom, it is a reality, that awaits only the hour to reveal its essence. By the fruit already borne we judge what fruit the tree will yield hereafter. We have seen the military power stand between the citizen and the expression of his will at the ballot-box. We have seen the elective franchise controlled by armed force in States powerless to resist the minions of tyranny who thwarted them in the exercise of their most sacred right. Our Cæsar then passed his Rubicon, and the Republic may well fear that he will not henceforward pause in his unlawful career unless he be swept from its course by the torrent of the popular will sustaining the ballot-box, if need be, with weapons as those which have assailed it.

Sir, I am convinced we are on the eve of a final collision between all of despotism that has been developed in the land and all of the love of liberty that yet remains in the popular breast. I trust fervently that the contest may be decided with the elements of moral force; that those who may be tempted to build a partisan or personal greatness upon the ruins of constitutional liberty will be checked in the presence of the wrath of the multitudes by some wholesome attribute of fear or conscience. But should the draughts of power already drained have provoked an uncontrollable thirst for more; should the stolen fruit of authority be so sweet as to have created an appetite that knows no conscience and no discretion, then, sir, the people will stand before their treasures with weapons in their hands. Let there be no attempt to disturb the action of the elective franchise at this crisis with fraud or violence, for should there be it will provoke resistance and engender war within a civil war. In that event, which may God avert! it will be vain to hurl the cry of treason against the people. If revolution comes, those who shall have attempted to defraud the people with false votes will be the revolutionists. There is a certain political system for our guidance, and those that disturb it, be they officials or be they private citizens, are responsible for any convulsion that may ensue. If any candidate, presuming upon any resources for compulsion that he may control, shall assume to be elected by virtue of the pretended suffrages of States where the will of the people cannot be ascertained he will be in the attitude of a usurper. His will be the revolutionary action and the resistance of the people will be resistance to the revolution.

Sir, the sacred tribunal is about to open for a fair trial of the people's will. They ask no more, they will have no less. Think not that the apathy with which they have submitted to past encroachments will remain unbroken in the face of fraud or violence at the presidential election. On the contrary, be sure that this apathy was but the influence of a resolve to redeem their rights in November. They will be redeemed, at what cost I know not, but they shall be redeemed. There is not cunning enough in the craftiest intriguer to defraud the people at that election, and for the military power to enforce fraud I am convinced will be in vain. The American soldier is an American citizen. He has intelligence as well as courage. He appreciates the value to him of purity in the elective franchise. He will understand that a candidate who claims the presidential chair, or the Executive who retains it by virtue of false votes, is not the President and is not the Commander-in-Chief. Sir, the Army will join with the people to resist a usurpation of the chief magistracy. They will then be the soldiers of the Republic. If the retainers of the Executive shall attempt to speak in the names of the States galvanized into an unreal Federal existence to secure electoral votes, their voices will be air and will go for nothing. The people will acknowledge no votes in the electoral college in the names of States whose representation is impossible, and where every sane man knows that the nominee of the abolition party could not get a hundred votes from the real population of such States. It will be safer to forego the attempt. The prize is too costly to be surrendered to the juggling of even a master hand. He who shall claim the presidential chair upon such votes will find its rightful claimant ready to contest his seat. It will be contested to the full effect that the right shall be vindicated although it should be necessary to array the power of the States against the power of the usurper. If the present incumbent has patronage enough at his command to secure enough of real votes to elect him, so be it. Many will be sorrowful for the people's degeneracy and folly, but none will dispute their choice. The candidate who shall be fairly elected by the voice of the people constitutionally uttered will be their Chief Magistrate, but none other.

I am aware that arbitrary power exercised with impunity gives boldness to despotism, and I am forced to confess that the northern people, untrue to themselves and to their political faith, have tamely submitted to despotic acts so wanton, daring, and pernicious, that had their reason not been clouded and their instincts deadened by the influences of civil strife they would have resisted to the death. That was in the hour of popular delirium. The sudden transition from the calm pursuits of peace to the intoxication of desperate warfare, the bewildering emotions created by the contemplation of battle-fields, together with the sensational harangues of demagogues and the alluring false appeals in the name of the Union, acted like the spell of an enchantment on the masses, and in the midst of the tumult and excitement they permitted tyranny to obtain the first foothold upon our soil. Then followed the strange, humiliating spectacle of a nation of freemen passing under the yoke without lifting hand or voice to arrest their degradation. Like idiots chasing a swamp fire, they cast aside everything however precious that seemed to impede their course. Habeas corpus, the right of trial by jury, the freedom of speech and of the press, the independence of the judiciary, the privilege of faithful expression of opinion in Congress, the Monroe doctrine, the right of sanctuary to foreign refugees, the sanctity of the elective franchise, all in fact that constituted our republicanism, were betrayed, more through our apathy than through our fears, into the hands of despotism.

Sir, unless the influence of these precedents be neutralized by the prompt repudiation of the people, unless we make known to future generations that they were the fruits of a passing madness, to be atoned for by the guilty and marked with the sign of condemnation, I hold them fraught with greater danger to republicanism, with greater misfortune to the people, than the dismemberment of the Republic. Better that the sections should be separated eternally, or that each State should resume the distinct political existence it held at the close of the revolutionary war, than that the several Commonwealths should lose their independence in the ordeal of forcible reconstruction. But now, sir, I fully believe that the frenzy is over; the spell is broken; the danger is no longer disguised in the garb of military necessity. The people perceive their own folly and the crime of their misrulers. They look forward to the ballot-box of next November as to a tribunal where judgment shall be rendered upon political criminals and they shall not be baffled by either fraud or violence.

Sir, I appeal to this House to exert what influence it possesses to secure a perfectly fair and legal election in November. The temper of the people is such that they will brook no devices, from whatever source they emanate, designed to elevate a nominee in defiance of the popular will. Bear in mind my warning that the pent-up indignation of the masses is reserved to be launched with irresistible fury against him that shall dare to trifle with their right of suffrage in November. The fanatics of 1860 scoffed at the idea of civil strife; let the intriguers of 1864 more justly appreciate the signs of the times and beware of firing the train that will lead to another and if possible a more terrible explosion. The history of the revolutionary past of other climes presents many a hideous precedent that should startle the ambitious schemer from his dream of usurpation. The power achieved by plots against the prerogative of the people is dangerous to all, but most dangerous to him that wields it. Let him that meditates treason against the elective franchise reflect that he purposes to crush the last hope of the people, and where hope is crushed there comes despair and frenzy to instigate to deeds of violence. Shall not the fate of Robespierre, mangled and torn by an infuriated populace, tumbled in a day from the zenith of his power and perishing amid the jeers and curses of his betrayed countrymen, appall even the callous nature of one too suddenly elevated and destined perhaps too suddenly to fall? A people provoked to the extremity of wrath are not appeased without a victim, and their victim is always the highest that is guilty.

Heaven grant that no act of usurpation in November, no trifling with the elective franchise, no forcing of fraudulent votes into the electoral college, shall put a climax to the violations of the Constitution that have filled the measure of the people's patience. I will rather hope that the auguries are false, that the signs have lied, that the evidence of our senses is not to be trusted, that the ballot-box on the 8th of November will be permitted to render the true verdict of the people, and that that verdict will be respected and obeyed. But, sir, the vindication of the elective franchise will bring us only to the threshold of redemption. However much we may resolve to follow the landmarks of constitutional freedom in a condition of civil strife, we shall always be tempted by false lights and impelled by currents that lead to political danger. There must be peace in the land before we can boast of security in a republican form of government. Separation does not involve the destruction of republicanism, but that destruction is inevitable in the event of subjugation, if we must hold the conquered territory by military power, as alone it can be held. There are some that propose to exterminate the southern race, as if realizing the impossibility of a friendly political companionship after conquest. That fearful alternative will not be permitted, for an outraged humanity would protest throughout the civilized world, and that were ineffectual the swords of all Christendom would be unsheathed in behalf of the doomed race.

Sir, I believe that all men of ordinary intelligence, to whatever political party they belong, are convinced that this campaign, should the Federal arms again be baffled, must end the war. Never again should that magnificent array of military strength become disorganized by defeat. Never again will the manhood of the North consent to be led or driven to the shambles in a hopeless cause. No cry of Union can allure the patriot now, for it is too well known that the Union can only be reconstructed by the agencies that built it—the consent and friendliness of the parties to the compact. It was a bond of love; it cannot be restored by the instruments of hate. A few, compelled by their necessities or allured by their cupidity, may serve under the banner of invasion. But neither bounty money nor conscriptions will ever again in this quarrel fill the Federal ranks with the strength and valor of the North if this campaign should fail. The Administration know it so well that they are staking all upon the hazard of the present operations in the field. The lives of our soldiers have no longer any value to those in power except so far as they assist their military purpose. By thousands daily they are sacrificed in this last desperate attempt to crush the southern armies. Our devoted countrymen have been pushed into the jaws of death with a savage recklessness that appalls the Christian world and that for centuries to come will pollute our moral atmosphere with the sickening taint of blood. Our people, whose kindred every day are facing death in those doomed ranks, look on the frightful saturnalia with the stolidity of despair, for I cannot believe it to be the apathy of indifference. I have read in the public prints, not one only but many a grim pleasantry upon the sang froid with which our best and bravest are hurried into eternity. So nearly have we attained that degree of ferocity that marked the Reign of Terror in France that some among us find a theme for hideous witticisms in the most horrible phases of this reign of murder.

Sir, the butcheries in Virginia must end the war. Such horrors cannot be repeated. I do not propose to discuss the right to enforce a political condition by force of arms; but I say that when rulers in a war of subjugation insist upon decimating their own people and deluging the land with blood to the extent we have witnessed they pass the line of legitimate warfare and enter the domain of murder. If there were blood enough in northern veins to be outpoured in another such campaign there is not cruelty enough in the northern heart nor folly enough in the northern brain to permit the infernal sacrifice.

I have forbore allusion to the many snares for republicanism that have been set by foreign schemers who in our madness have found their opportunity for encroachment. Three years ago Napoleon was at the threshold of his Mexican enterprise, and as far back as then in this Chamber you were warned of this new germ of mischief. The warning was unheeded, and we now witness the humiliating attitude we hold toward foreign Powers.

I am aware that this House has peculiar reason to be sensitive upon that score, having so lately been held up to ridicule at the Tuileries by this Administration. I am therefore assured that this House will redeem its dignity and assert its prerogative to speak in the name of the people in regard to the foreign policy of the Republic. But I cannot be zealous in the cause of a sister republic when my own country is bleeding, perhaps perishing. I can bear awhile my portion of the shame of our prostration at the footstool of a foreign potentate in the hope that we shall rise again erect and make amends to ourselves for that servility. But another such year of civil strife will suffice to put this question of foreign encroachment beyond our arbitrament. My hope is that the inauguration of a new Administration, setting at rest for a space at least the question of partisan aspiration and personal ambition, will leave all parties in a fitter mood for calm reflection, undisturbed by prejudice, passion, or selfish motives, on the best method of preparing to welcome peace. But then that inevitable objection of obstinate and uncompromising natures intervenes, upon what basis shall negotiation be opened?

Sir, it is this cleaving to extreme positions that constitutes the radical difficulty in the way of an adjustment. I am convinced that the antagonism in sentiment between the sections is not irreconcilable. It is not that the space to be traversed is interminable, but that both sections respectively stand at the extreme limits when mutual advance would soon bring them together. In the intervening ground we are creating boundaries of the corpses of the slain, and as the shout of defiance, the curses of mutual hate, the groans of the wounded, and the lamentations of the bereaved, assail the heavens, further and further the sections recede from each other; wider and wider stretches the gulf, and closer shut the avenues of reconciliation. The ties of brotherhood that were firmly knit by our fathers upon the battle-planes of the Revolution have been rent asunder upon the battle-planes of this unnatural strife.

Is there, then, no link between the North and South, none other than that which we are seeking to weld on the anvils of unnatural strife? Sir, there is. And I realize the beneficence of a forgiving God in that He has revealed a hope and opportunity of redemption even in those things which threatened most to our shame and disadvantage. I am not speaking the vague language of surmise when I assert that the southern people equally with ourselves, more than ourselves perhaps, protest in their inmost hearts against the encroachments of foreign power upon this continent. If we believe that they have turned apostates to their republican faith, that they are willing to betray the mission of freedom inaugurated by our fathers and their fathers, we have not conceived the full measure of the influence that nearly a century's existence in the atmosphere of self-government has exercised upon a race of freemen. There is yet that bond of fellowship between the North and South, and we shall be traitors to the paramount principle that appeals to us from the spirit of a stricken republicanism if we permit a blinded hate and jealousy and fanaticism to cancel that bond among the rest that have been canceled. Out of that single thread of sympathy may be woven a fabric of political companionship that will confirm the safety of republicanism on this continent.

It is not my purpose nor is it within my power to define the basis upon which the confederate authorities will negotiate; but I have reason to believe that they are willing and anxious to unite with us in vindication of the Monroe doctrine, and that they will meet us frankly and in the spirit of reconciliation. I know that there are gentlemen who will demand no less than an unconditional surrender and submission. They will be disappointed. No, sir, although the war should be protracted till the great umpire throw down the warder at the day of judgment, never, never will submission in the deed or the spirit be wrung by your arms from the South, although their armies should be prostrated. I am proud to say that such humility is not a characteristic of the American freeman. Fight on if you will until you make your country one vast burying-ground of all your visible strength, with only age and infancy and helplessness to mourn the desolation, but in the end there must be compromise. It is the only hope of staying this pitiless scourge beneath which the country groans and bleeds; and it involves the further hope of concord and forgiveness in the future. Banded together as the companion soldiers of republicanism, the veterans of this war on either side will find a Lethe for their animosities in the joint laurels they shall cull upon the soil of betrayed Mexico. Every blow that they have dealt at one another will be atoned for by the blows that they shall strike together at the common enemy. The mutual valor displayed in mutual destruction upon such fields as Antietam, as Gettysburg, as the Wilderness, as a hundred others that are melancholy monuments of American heroism and folly, will seek a more glorious arena upon the same memorable plains where once before the North and the South marched side by side to victory. And afterwards, when the Austrian usurper and his French myrmidons shall have disgorged their prey, when the crown shall be tossed into the sea and the scepter shivered and the imperial invader shall have turned his scourged back forever upon this continent, there will remain, among other blessed results of the struggle, a bond between the North and South of the same nature as that which our fathers sealed with their blood upon the battle-planes of the Revolution.

Sir, let us give one word of invitation to the southern people to strike with us for Mexico, and they will rend the skies with their shouts of acceptance. The soldiers of Grant and the soldiers of Lee will spring from their ranks and grasp each other's hands in pledge of their sympathy in that congenial cause. The false pride of the sections, colliding interests, social differences, political antagonism, partisan and personal antipathies, jealousies, and heart-burnings, will all be checked if not canceled by the influence of an absorbing popular sentiment and the wholesome excitement of a struggle in behalf of true republican principles. In rebuilding the Mexican republic we shall upraise the shaken props upon which our own political system depends, and the bells of victory will at the same time ring the knell of imperialism upon this continent and celebrate the regeneration of the elements of good will and fraternity between the sections.

MR. LAW. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom that I trespass on the patience of the House in the way of speech making. I have been, however, not an inattentive listener to what has been said on both sides of this Chamber, and I must confess that I have been somewhat startled with the doctrines which I have heard enunciated by the other side of the House; doctrines which, if they had been uttered at any other period of our history, would have led to the belief that some political madman, some Anacharsis Clootz, fresh from a revolutionary tribunal, had by some means or other obtained a seat on this floor and was promulgating opinions dangerous in their character, at war with all our social institutions, and which, if carried out, must inevitably tend to anarchy or despotism; opinions hostile, as I conceive, to the best interests of the country, at war with the Constitution, and in violation of all the rights of a free people. But what is worse, sir, these opinions thus dangerous in such a crisis as we are now passing through, are shaped in the form of laws and resolutions which become the laws of the land, and operate on the whole body of the people now within the Union. Is this the time, let me ask any patriotic man in the House, when we are engaged in civil war, when we are expending the very life-blood of the nation, to be trying new experiments in political economy and abandoning the principles of our fathers; adopting new theories never before heard of since the foundation of the Government, and which, if carried out, must inevitably shipwreck the Union, break down the barriers of the Constitution, and unavoidably destroy the glorious fabric reared by the patriots and statesmen who have preceded us.

Sir, as the representatives of the American people, as the representatives of the Union people of this country, have we fully considered these things? Have we weighed them as we ought? Everything, so far as regards the consequences of the present state of affairs in this nation, whether it be for weal or woe, is dependant upon the action of this Congress. Before the close of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, in March, 1865, the destinies of the Republic will probably be settled. What they may be is only known to that Being who "rules the destinies of nations as well as men."

We should be calm in our deliberations, wise in our counsels. We should look only to the good of the country. Are we prepared so to do? From what I have witnessed here this session I fear that "madness rules the hour." The passions and feelings, and I may add prejudices, North and South, have been inflamed to such a degree that it seems impossible to subdue them. Evil counselors on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line have lent their aid, either from interest or fanaticism, "twin sisters of evil," to increase those prejudices between our people north and south of the Potomac, and they have succeeded even beyond their expectations. Those who required "a little blood-letting" before they would listen to any terms have had oceans of it, and now every raid, every foray, every battle-field, let the result be as it may, must render us more antagonistic.

Why, sir, is there an intelligent member of this body who believes that if the seceded States would this day offer to come back, stack their arms around the Capitol, and return to their allegiance, you, gentlemen, on the other side of the House would agree to it, except on such terms as they never would accept—the abolition of slavery within their borders, a territorial vassalage, and the application of the Wilmot proviso to their State constitutions? Would you not say this? In fact, do you not repeat it daily? Do not the bills which have been introduced here say in so many words, "Throw down your arms, sue for peace, and we will only give it to you on our own terms." What are they? A return to a territorial condition, the abolition of slavery, and the application of the Wilmot proviso to your constitutions when readmitted to the Union. These are your terms, these are the conditions; and does any rational man in the country believe they will accept them? War, war to the knife; a war to be handed down from one generation to another; such a war as the Waldenses and Albigenses carried on for years in Germany; such a war as La Vendée carried on against all France combined; such a war as Poland has carried on against Russia, and Hungary for years waged against Austria. Such will be the contest between the Anglo-Saxon race on this continent, between father and son, brother and brother, friend and friend, between those who in a common cause marched together from Vera Cruz to Mexico and planted the stars and stripes on the halls of Montezuma.

As the President said in his inaugural address, "we cannot fight always, and when we have done fighting we must return to first principles, and see if matters cannot be adjusted." The President was right, "we must return to first principles;" the principles laid down by our fathers; the principles which established our unity as one people; the principles which are laid down in our organic act, the Constitution, which enabled each State to settle its own domestic institutions without any let or hinderance from another or from all combined; principles which for seventy years and upwards made us the most powerful and respected Government on the face of the earth, increasing in wealth, population, and power to an extent heretofore unknown in the annals of the world. How is it now? There is none so poor as to do us reverence.

Why, sir, I have no doubt Napoleon III laughed in his sleeves when he received a copy of that memorable manifesto, that "brutum fulmen," introduced by the gentleman from Maryland, and which passed unanimously through the House, (I believe there was not a dissenting vote,) and in which we reaffirmed, boldly and fearlessly, the Monroe doctrine as applicable to Mexico at the very time Maximilian was on his voyage from Europe, guarded by a French fleet, and for the purpose of at once taking possession of his throne. And how perfectly powerless we are to stop him if he pleases to do so. Napoleon understands it as well as we do, and I fancy has not much fear of an interference on our part, considering our present condition. But, I ask again, how have our present ills been brought upon us as a nation? How has our unity as one people been destroyed? Not by the Democratic party. "Thou canst not say we did it." From the commencement of our difficulties we proposed to adjust them in a way satisfactory to all parties except the "abolitionists." From us came the Crittenden propositions, which all admit would have been satisfactory, and made the basis of a settlement of all our difficulties. The South would have accepted them beyond all question, but the Republicans voted them down in the Senate, so says Douglas, who, anxious as he was to arrange the matter, must have been cognizant of all that took place. He is a reliable and credible witness himself, but he has been corroborated in the statement he made again and again by other Senators who were present in the Senate on that memorable occasion.

I shall not attempt to repeat the terms of the resolutions, they are known to us all, but I cannot refer to them without saying a few words as a testimony of my sincere regard and esteem for the memory of one whom I regard as one of the most amiable gentlemen, purest patriots, and distinguished statesmen of this generation. I have known him long and known him well. We served together in the Thirty-Seventh Congress, and I can safely say in the hearing of all who were here then, that no man in Congress held a higher position, or was more universally respected in this House, on both sides of it, than was Hon. John J. Crittenden. Devoted to his country, an ardent lover of its free institutions, conservative in all his views, he spoke to the House, which contained a large majority diametrically opposed to him, as if he was addressing the Senate in the palmiest days of the Republic. Cool, calm, collected in his manner, dignified in his deportment, gentlemanly, never violating any rule of the House in debate, his voice always heard, because all were attentive, he spoke with a fluency and power which commanded attention. Even those who dissented from him admitted the truth of his premises and the force of his arguments while differing from his conclusions. In the midst of a rebellion brought about in part by those who heard him, he could not bring himself to believe that the old Constitution, the work of our fathers, was worn out, and that while the form remained the spirit and life of it were gone. Those who move with the tide are hardly conscious of the rate at which it is flowing, and are dashed against the rock before they are aware of it. Such, I fear, is the character of those who now hold the destinies of the nation in their hands, and are moving on with the impulse to sure and certain destruction. Sir, I know no living man on this continent whose reputation I would accept in exchange for the dead statesman's—Mr. Crittenden's—the colleague of Mr. Clay, the associate of Daniel Webster, of Silas Wright, of Lewis Cass, of Thomas H. Benton, of Stephen A. Douglas, in the Senate of the United States. He was, in that body of the most distinguished men ever occupying the councils of the nation, among the first. "A peer among princes, a prince among peers." In all that galaxy of eminent men, of patriots, statesmen, and scholars, but one survives, Hon. Lewis Cass, who, far beyond the allotted period of life, is now the only connecting link between the present and the past, and who, it is hoped in the providence of God, may yet live to see that Union for which he struggled so long intact, one and indivisible, under the same Government which was framed by our fathers, and which for so long a period has preserved us as a nation. Alas, that in looking back to those days we are forced to admit that "Atlas has gone to the Hesperides, and there is nothing left to uphold the sky. Ulysses has gone on his weary wanderings, and there is no one left who can bend his bow."

Mr. Crittenden, like all his contemporaries I have mentioned, with a single exception, has been gathered to his fathers. "The places which once knew him will know him no more forever." His resting-place on earth is among those he loved so well. Entombed in the "dark and bloody ground" made historical in the West, in the soil of his own beloved Kentucky, he rests from his labors in his country's cause "and sleeps the sleep that knows no waking." Should the great and gallant State who honored him so highly while living erect a monument to his memory as she ought, let this be his epitaph: "Here rest the remains of one who if his counsels had been observed the Union would have been maintained as it was and the Constitution preserved as it is."

Sir, the most memorable legislative act of the nineteenth century which will be chronicled by the future historian of these deplorable times will be the Senate resolutions of the distinguished gentleman to whom I have referred, and the House resolutions introduced by him and voted on July 22, 1861, the day after the battle of Bull Run, and while our brave and gallant soldiers, worn out, fatigued, and wounded, were making their weary and painful way to the capital as a place of refuge. Who is there now here who was a member of the called session of 1861 but remembers the occasion? All was panic and dismay in the city, and many there were of intelligent and brave men who thought and believed the capital itself was in danger, and so it was. Had Beauregard, at the close of the battle, received a reinforcement of ten thousand fresh troops, the most experienced military men here believed he might have captured the city. The Senate and House sat as the Roman Senators sat when the Gauls surrounded their city. The safety of Washington was the absorbing subject not only of conversation but of debate. Mr. Crittenden arose; the silence was profound. In a clear, full, and sonorous tone of voice he read his resolution, which could be heard in the remotest part of the gallery. I had seen the resolution in manuscript before it was offered. I knew what it was. I had not a doubt it would pass, as Mr. Crittenden informed me he had consulted with the Republican members before submitting it, and that no objection had been made by those with whom he consulted. On its presentation to the House, Barnett of Kentucky moved a division of the resolution, which the Speaker decided in his favor. The first part of the proposition, "that the war had been forced upon the country by the disunionists of the southern States," was carried by a vote of 121 to 2, Barnett of Kentucky and Reid of Missouri, both of whom have since been expelled from the House for joining the rebels, voting in the negative. On the second part of the proposition, "that the war was not to be waged in any spirit of oppression or for conquest or subjugation or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the southern States, but to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired," the vote was—yeas 117, nays 2. It will be seen that there are four votes less in the yeas on the second proposition than on the first. It arises from the fact that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] true to the instincts and principles for which he has combated for years, "in overthrowing the rights and established institutions of the southern States"—and in which he bids fair to be successful—did not vote on the second division of the original proposition; neither did Lovejoy of Illinois, Bingham of Ohio, or Conway of Kansas, each of whom entertained similar principles with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Potter of Wisconsin and Kiddle of Ohio, both Republicans, voted "no."

Permit me here, Mr. Chairman, to say, I may be wrong, I may be deceived, but I have thought sometimes the Republican members of this House have doubted the loyalty of Kentucky, and looked upon the majority of the members from that State as merely "locum tenens," holding their positions here as a half-way house between "secessia" and the "Union States." Sir, in my judgment, if ever there was a loyal State that State is Kentucky. At the commencement of hostilities between the North and the South, allied as she was with the southern States, both in her proximity to them and as a slave State, it was very natural to suppose, that like her neighbors in Virginia and Tennessee, to the former of whom she was indebted for her paternity, she would have gone with them; nothing was more natural, and but for the loyalty of her prominent men, men of the highest influence and standing, the probability is she would have gone. Had she done so, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois would have been the battleground of this fratricidal contest. What did she do? She declared herself a neutral in the contest. Under the circumstances that surrounded her she could do nothing else. She must have taken sides one way or the other, and the chances were that she would have joined the southern States, with which in unity of feeling and unity of interest she was much more allied than with the northern. Her leading men came forward, and as the best means of saving the State to the Union urged neutrality. Temporarily it was the best and most prudent step she could have taken. Guthrie, Prentice, Dixon, and hundreds of others of her best and loyal men urged the measure, and it was adopted. It gave time for thought and reflection, and Kentucky was saved for the Union.

Sir, others may judge of her action and conduct as they please, but as a citizen of Indiana, a border State, a free State, a loyal State, of which I have been a citizen for nearly a half century, knowing as I do the difficulties under which she labored, the perils which surrounded her, I believe she acted wisely, and she acted loyally. It is very easy for gentlemen from the northern States, from New England, "who live at home in ease," who are making fortunes out of the rebellion while they have never seen a rebel themselves, to descant upon the duties of a State a thousand miles off, surrounded by seceded States, with numbers of their own citizens sympathizing with them, with foes without and foes within, and subject at any time to an invasion from the north side of the Ohio or from the seceded States on the south; a State continually in danger from one quarter or the other—it is very easy for these gentlemen who have no knowledge of passing events there to coolly and quietly advise them what to do and what not to do. Of this, I take it, they were as good judges as those who thought proper to lecture them, and probably it was a quarter from which they thought it unwise to ask either advice or aid. Indiana at least ought not to chide her; she owes her now and forever a debt of gratitude which it will be hard to repay. In the territorial infancy of that great State, now the fifth in the Union, when the Indians were committing depredations throughout its borders, when the hardy pioneer strapped his rifle over his shoulder as he drove his "team afield" over the small patch of land he cultivated, ready at all times to meet his savage foe, whether in ambush or in the field, "when the darkness of midnight was illumined with the blaze of their dwellings, when the blood of their sons fattened their corn-fields and the war-whoop awakened the sleep of the cradle," the brave and chivalrous and gallant men of Kentucky came to our relief. The battle-fields of Tippecanoe and the Thames bear evidences of their patriotism and their courage, for, as I myself have witnessed, the Indians who fell on those bloody fields lay side by side with the chivalrous men of our sister State. The best blood of both was poured out like water, and the result was the restoration of peace and quiet to our borders.

Connected with the subject I have been treating, Kentucky and her loyalty as a State within the Union, I wish to say a few words in reference to a charge made by H. J. Raymond, Esq., one of the editors of the New York Times, in a work lately published by him, entitled President Lincoln's Administration, in which, with a view of aiding Mr. Lincoln and damaging General McClellan, he makes in a few lines in the appendix to his work these covert remarks—noticed hereafter—wholly uncalled for, and in my judgment wholly untrue. I have the slightest acquaintance, sir, with General McClellan. I doubt whether I should know him were I to meet him on the avenue. His father, Dr. George McClellan of Philadelphia, and myself were educated together at Yale; we were bosom friends until the day of his death. We started in life professionally at the same time. He was a surgeon and physician, I a lawyer. We went to Philadelphia together in the fall of 1817; he remained there to practice his profession, in which he became preëminent, while I followed the "Star of Empire" west. It is due to his memory dead, as it is to his son living, who appears to inherit the best qualities of his ancestor, that I should endeavor to show the accusation made against General McClellan false in every particular. What is the charge? I give it as it is written in the book: "General McClellan, while in command of the Department of the Ohio, had entered into an agreement with General Buckner by which the substantial neutrality of that State was recognized and respected." Buckner, in June, 1861, professed to be a loyal man. His letter in reference to General McClellan's proposition was addressed to the Governor of Kentucky, June 10, 1861. Buckner now is a traitor, as he probably was in 1861 a hypocrite—false to his State which trusted and honored him as to his country which he betrayed. He does not profess to show a scrap of memorandum or writing entered into with General McClellan on this most important arrangement by which the "substantial neutrality" of Kentucky was to be "recognized and respected;" while on the other hand General McClellan, in a letter which was addressed to a naval officer in Cincinnati, dated June 26, 1861, (published in the Cincinnati papers, and which Mr. Raymond must have seen at the time he penned the remarks alluded to,) expressly and emphatically denies the charge made by Buckner. Which of them should be believed? A man who is the "soul of honor," whose character for truth and veracity never has been impeached, or the double-dyed traitor who made the charge? I leave it to every honorable member of the House to say. Sir, without reference to General McClellan's political opinions, or the position in which his friends in several States of the Union have thought proper to place him with regard to the presidential election in November, but simply as a military man, I think great injustice has been done him.

The battles of Malvern Hill, South Mountain, and Antietam, prove his conduct and courage as a commander beyond all question. Never was there a greater truth expressed than at the close of his campaign when superseded he said, speaking of the conduct of his troops, "No man can justly charge upon any portion of that army, from the commanding general to the private, any lack of devotion to the service of the United States Government, and to the cause of the Constitution and the Union. They have proved their fealty in much sorrow, suffering, danger, and through the very shadow of death. Their comrades dead on all the fields where they fought have scarcely more claim to the honor of a nation's reverence than their survivors to the justice of a nation's gratitude."

Sir, I ask, but ask in vain, why has not that justice been awarded them? Faction, fanaticism, folly, seem to have ruled the Administration, and simple justice, all that was asked for, was denied to these brave men and their leader. When his military qualifications were called in question General McClellan might answer his accusers in the language which Shakespeare, in the play of Troilus and Cressida, puts in the mouth of Ulysses, in reply to Nestor at the siege of Troy, who informs him that Ajax, "grown self-willed," rails at his, Ulysses's, mode of carrying on the war, "bold as an oracle;" and Thersites, "a slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint," joins in the abuse of him. Might not General McClellan make the same reply to these modern Thersites, hounded as they are by their masters "to coin slanders like a mint" against him, as Ulysses does?

"They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Foretell prescience, and esteem no act
But that of blind: the still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight,
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity!
They call this—bed-work, mappery, closet war;
So that the rain, that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and readiness of his poise,
They place before his hand, that made the engine;
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution."

Sir, there is one consolation: if the present Administration will not do him and his noble and gallant followers justice for their gallantry, courage, and skill in the campaign in Virginia, in 1862, his country will.

"For more true joy Marcellus exiled feels Than Cæsar with a senate at his heels."

The Crittenden resolutions were but a mere affirmation of the declarations of the President made again and again to the people and to Congress, in which he said he "had no power directly or indirectly to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it existed;" that he had "not the power, neither the inclination to do so;" that those who nominated him "placed in the platform for his acceptance, and as a law unto him and to themselves," the resolution which I will read, being the fourth of the Chicago platform:

"Resolved, That the maintenance inviolate of the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions [slavery included] according to its own judgment exclusively is essential to the balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend, and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed force [the raid of John Brown, the 'saint, hero, and martyr' of the Republican party to-day] of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as the gravest of crimes."

How far the President and the party who placed him in power kept these pledges after that power was obtained may be found in the series of legislative acts passed by Congress and approved by the President from the period when he signed the bill "abolishing slavery in the District," down to that of his proclamation abolishing it every where, repealing the fugitive slave law, putting arms in the hands of the negro, enlisting him in the Army, and placing him upon full equality with our white scarred and veteran soldiers. In fact, Congress has done more for the negro; it has provided for the subsistence of their families while the men were in the field, while those of the whites are not provided for.

The President tells us that the Chicago platform was a "law" unto him and to those who nominated him. If this is so why is it that he and his friends with the most unblushing effrontery ask the Democratic party to disband and join the Republican. If the Chicago platform is a "law" to Mr. Lincoln and his party should not the platform of the Democratic party, handed down from the days of Mr. Jefferson, unchanged, unaltered, and which for upwards of sixty years has carried this country to the highest state of prosperity, through two foreign, not domestic, wars, be still adhered to? And is not that platform as much a "law" to us as the Chicago platform to the Republican party? The last imperishable, whatever may be the destinies of the Republic, as long as freedom exists, while the former is now unknown, never spoken of, never thought of, and scarcely a clause in it but what is either changed or entirely obliterated by the legislation of that party since it came into power, not one of whom is so "poor as to do it reverence." It had its day and accomplished its object, and is now thrown away as waste paper. I have never heard it quoted since Mr. Lincoln made his allusion to it in his message at the called session of 1861.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that the clauses in the Chicago platform "had been changed or obliterated." Sir, there is one, the sixth, which in theory is true, "true as holy writ," and the sentiments tersely and beautifully expressed on paper, one which should be placed in letters of brass (gold would at the present prices be rather expensive) on the doors of your Treasury, on those of every Department of the Government, ay, even on the White House, on the custom-houses, on every disbursing office of the Government. The sixth clause of the platform reads thus:

"That the people justly view with alarm the reckless extravagance which pervades every department of the Federal Government; that a return to rigid economy and accountability is indispensable to arrest the systematic plunder of the public Treasury by favored partisans, while the recent startling developments of frauds and corruptions at the Federal metropolis show that an entire change of administration is imperatively demanded."

Brave words, well rounded periods, but most impotent conclusions in action since the Republican party came into power. How do the people "justly view the reckless extravagance which pervades every department of the Government?" now; how the "startling developments of fraud and corruption at the Federal metropolis" now; and will they not tell you at the "ides of November" that "an entire change of administration is imperatively demanded?" I think so. Why, sir, it is not two years since, that the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVES,] than whom no gentleman on either side of this House stands higher for his gentlemanly deportment, independence, and candor, and who, where fraud is to be ferreted out, never "gives up to party what was meant for mankind," said here, on this floor, that the Treasury had been robbed of more money by fraudulent contracts up to that time than would have paid all "the current expenses of Buchanan's administration;" and has not this rivulet of speculation and fraud since that time swelled into a volume likely to bankrupt a Treasury already depleted by the actual wants of the Government? And yet this is the party which viewed with so much alarm when out of power "the reckless extravagance which pervaded every department" of the Administration which preceded it. Was there ever greater hypocrisy? And yet it was by such pretenses as these that the Republican party came into power.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House deny that the Crittenden resolutions in the Thirty-Sixth Congress were defeated by them, although voting in solid column against them. Their excuse is, that finding the Democratic Senators from the seceded States, then holding their seats in the Senate, would not vote at all, (a two-third vote being required,) even should a portion of the Republicans vote for them, they determined to vote them down, and they did so. Admitting this to be true, I ask my Republican friends to tell me why on another occasion, when the same resolutions were before the House on a proposition to submit them to a vote of the people who would have adopted them beyond all question by an overwhelming vote, they voted the proposition down?

On the 27th of February, 1861, some two weeks after the failure of the passage of the Crittenden resolutions in the Senate, at nearly the close of the Thirty-Sixth Congress, Mr. Clemens, of Virginia, offered the following proposition for the consideration of the House, (see House Journal, second session Thirty-Sixth Congress, page 407:)

"That provision ought to be made by law without delay for taking the sense of the people, and submitting to their votes [the Crittenden resolutions] as the basis for the final and permanent settlement of those disputes that now disturb the peace of the country and threaten the existence of the Union."

The resolutions are appended to the proposition. The vote on this proposition was—ayes 18, noes 113, every Democrat and every conservative man voting "ay," every Republican member voting "no." With this proposition Virginia was satisfied, as asserted by her peace delegation then, I believe, in the city trying to prevent separation if possible. Why not have submitted the resolutions to the people? Simply for the reason that the Republicans never did intend they should be adopted. They wanted war instead of peace; large armies, large disbursements from the Treasury. They wanted to abolish slavery—an object to be obtained at any sacrifice of white men's lives or white men's money. They wanted to continue their power, to preserve their patronage—in short, to continue the administration of Mr. Lincoln for a second term. For who can doubt that if the proposition alluded to had been accepted by the Republican party before a gun had been fired or a man killed, the glorious stars and stripes would now have been floating over all this continent from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, one people united under one Government, and even more prosperous and united than we had ever been? That it is not so united now is not the fault of the Democratic party. The defeat of the Crittenden resolutions lays entirely with the Republican party, and for their defeat they are entirely responsible. Sad, indeed, have been the consequences, not only to our own country but to the world. And fifty or one hundred years hence, when passion and prejudice have no longer sway, but the truth of history is vindicated, some future Gibbon, in writing the "Decline and Fall of the American Republic," will trace its cause to the non-acceptance of the Crittenden propositions by the Republican party.

But, sir, it was not only before hostilities commenced, but long since the war commenced opportunities have occurred, which if taken advantage of by a wise and prudent Administration having solely in view the settlement of our difficulties, this unhappy, fratricidal, and terrible contest might have been brought to a close; a contest in which not "a little blood-letting" has occurred, but one in which if all the blood that has been shed had been gathered in one vast reservoir as large as the dimensions of this Chamber, you might have walked knee-deep in it. By some radical application or act of Congress calculated still further to excite and exasperate the public mind, skillfully and ingeniously to stir up hatred and ill will instead of seeking to restore the seceded States with their "constitutional rights unimpaired," as they pledged themselves to do, it seems to have been the steady purpose and determined object of the party in power, if possible, to widen the breach, and prevent the return of a single seceded State to the Union. Why, sir, a single act of this session confirms all I have said. I refer to the bill for the reconstruction of the rebel States which passed the House by a strict party vote. Are the "equality, dignity, and rights" of the States to be reconstructed left unimpaired by that act? On the contrary, are they not entirely abrogated and destroyed? Why, sir, the plan of that arch radical, Wendell Phillips, as enunciated by him in his letter to Judge Stallo, lately published, is not worse than the House bill. His plan is this: "Subdue the South as rapidly as possible. The moment territory comes under our flag reconstruct the States thus—confiscate and divide the lands of the rebels, extend the right of suffrage as broadly as possible to whites and blacks, let the Federal Constitution prohibit slavery throughout the Union and forbid the States to make any distinction among their citizens." No law permitting any distinction of race; no law preventing the marriage of the two races; "miscegenation" allowed to the fullest extent. On the whole, I rather prefer this plan to that proposed by the Republican leaders of the House; it is clear, distinct, palpable in its objects, and effects directly what it is attempted in the House to effect indirectly.

Sir, the Republican party has been as revolutionary in its character and designs as that of the rebels. The object of both seems to be to divide the Union, but for widely different objects and purposes, the one for a separate power over a section, the other for absolute power over the whole. It is a lamentable chapter in American history, and if there is the slightest hope for the future it is in the united and conservative action of all who love their country, in the coming fall elections.

But it is said "slavery is the cause of this war," slavery must be exterminated; that there can be no peace between the North and the South until slavery is abolished. Sir, slavery was not the cause of this war, but simply the occasion for bringing it on. As well might you say the apple-tree from which Eve plucked the fruit which entailed sin on the world was the cause of sin. It was the command she disobeyed that brought on all mankind the evil they have suffered, the eating of the forbidden fruit. So with slavery as the cause of our present troubles. The command in the Constitution is, you shall not interfere with slavery in the States where it exists. Its existence is acknowledged in the Constitution, and provision made to secure all slave property to its owners against all attempts made to divest them of it, either by individuals or their sister States who were free. Our fathers made this solemn compact and agreement with the slave States, who were parties to the covenant. Without it we all know the Constitution could not have been made or the Union formed. As their descendants we are legally and morally bound to enforce that agreement. We have all sworn to do so in the oath we have taken as members at the commencement of the session. The radical party in the country have interfered with the rights of the South in this particular. They have violated the command laid down to them in the organic law of the nation, which was binding on us all. They have interfered with the constitutional rights of their brethren as prescribed in the written compact of their fathers, which was a "law unto them" and should be a "law" unto us. For the violation of this law, war, civil war, has been the necessary consequence, and what has followed? A destruction of life unheard of in the annals of the world; a Treasury bankrupt; a Republic, the fairest on God's earth, destroyed; a nation ruined, whatever may be the result of the present contest. And is this the price you have been willing to pay for the freedom of four million blacks, who, if the facts stated are true as reported by your own agents, are far worse off as freedmen than they were in bondage. I quote from Mr. Yeatman's report as published in the speech of Mr. Error, the gentleman from Massachusetts, who reported the bill for creating a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs. I believe such was the title.

"They [the blacks] say they do not realize that they are freedmen. They say they are told they are; but then they are taken and hired out to men who treat them far worse than their seceded masters did. Besides, they feel their pay or hire is lower now than it was when the seceded hired them."

Again:

"He was promised freedom, but how is it with him? He is seized in the street and ordered to go and help unload a steamboat, for which he will be paid, or sent to work in the trenches or labor for some quartermaster or chop-wood for the Government. He labors for months, and at last is only paid with promises, unless perchance it may be with kicks, cuffs, and curses."

And this is the grand result of the politico philanthropy of the Republican party in giving freedom to the black man, a boon they never asked, never sought for; nor will their hardships be less or their wrongs redressed any more by this new-fangled Bureau of Freedmen, nor as much as by their former masters; a new Republican institution gotten up to pension off some more of those cormorants who feed upon the offal of the Treasury and swarm about the Capitol like the locusts of Egypt, seeking what they may devour.

Sir, I was perfectly astonished when I heard the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWWELL,] knowing as I did his former political associations a few years since with the Democratic party, who had, as I had understood, sent in his official character more than one darkey to the "land of Egypt and house of bondage" under the fugitive slave law, assert "that wherever slavery exists there republicanism is not; that wherever slavery exists there a republican government cannot be." Why, sir, has not republicanism and slavery existed on this continent for upwards of one hundred years? Has it not done so under the Constitution made by our fathers for upwards of seventy years? And that the coexistence of the two would have continued as long as the Constitution existed but for the radical efforts of the abolitionists North, who were determined, even at the cost of the destruction of the Union, to abolish it; not that slavery was malum in se, not from any philanthropic feeling, but having tried every other "ism," Maine law liquorism Know-Nothingism, in their aspirations for power they played slavery as their last trump card, and won.

Sir, the rise and progress of slavery on this continent is an anomaly, such as has been witnessed nowhere else. In 1607 the first successful colony was planted at Jamestown, in Virginia. In 1620 a Dutch man-of-war landed twenty negro slaves for sale. This was the germ of slaveholding in the United States. For many years the number of slaves was small. The introduction of the cultivation of tobacco alone impressed on Virginia and Maryland the position of slaveholding States. New England was not tardy in availing herself of the prospect of gain held out in the cheap labor of slaves and the rich returns of the slave trade. Among the "fundamentals," a "Body of Liberties" as they called it, as early as 1641, in Massachusetts, they distinctly recognized the lawfulness of "Indian and negro slavery," as well as an approval of the African slave trade. In 1754, by an official census, it appears there were 2,248 slaves over sixteen years of age in Massachusetts, of whom 1,000 were in Boston. Finding them unprofitable, she was the first of the New England States to abolish slavery, when and how we have no record, for as late as 1833 her supreme court left it an open question when slavery was abolished in that State. Vermont claims the honor of having been the first to abolish slavery by her "bill of rights," in 1770. In 1790 there were but seventeen slaves in the whole State. It required no great magnanimity to free them. Connecticut, my own State, the "land of steady habits," where I was born, reared, and educated, a capital State to be reared and educated in if, as Douglas said of Vermont, "one emigrated early," was not free from the "sin of slavery" by any means. She turned many an "honest penny" in the traffic. The proportion of slaves was greater than in Massachusetts, and the laws regulating slaves equally stringent. One quaint act of hers in 1650 provided "that if an Indian failed to make satisfaction for his injuries, he was seized and delivered to the injured person, either to serve or be shipped out of the colony and exchanged for negroes, as the case will justly bear." Rhode Island dealt largely in the slave traffic, with the exception or Providence. The heretic Roger Williams alone placed the services of the white and black races on the same footing and limitation. Slaves abounded to a greater extent in Rhode Island than in any other portion of New England. There was a greater proportion of slaves in Newport than in Boston. The former was the "barbaric" of the slave trade for the whole South. Its extent may be judged of from the following official table of the slave trade from the North to the port of Charleston alone, from January 1, 1804, to December 31, 1807. The whole number imported in American vessels, 8,888. Of these—

Bristol, Rhode Island, imported	3,914
Newport, " "	3,488
Providence, " "	556
Warren, " "	280
Hartford, Connecticut, " "	250
Boston, " "	200
Philadelphia, " "	200

Enormous fortunes were made out of this traffic in human flesh, and many a descendant of those engaged in the slave trade of New England, having princely inheritances, are now the most radical of the Republican school, ultra abolitionists, claiming the right to rob—I can use no more fitting phrase—the descendants of those to whose ancestors their fathers had sold these negroes in good faith and for high prices, and all this from philanthropic motives and with a view "to save the Union," which must perish inevitably if slavery is not abolished. Was there ever more unblushing hypocrisy in this class of men, whose fathers in the nineteenth century so early made a "league with hell and a covenant with death?" Pennsylvania did not entirely eschew the holding of negroes as slaves; and if Bancroft is to be believed it is yet a mooted question whether Penn himself did not live and die a slaveholder. Slaves, however, were not numerous. The population of Philadelphia in 1750 was composed of about one fourth slaves. I might illustrate this subject further, but time will not permit it. The singular historical fact, however, may be stated, that Georgia, of all the colonies, was the only one in which slavery was prohibited by her organic law; and that Whitefield, the great leader of the Methodist church, was the most efficient advocate of the repeal of the restriction and the introduction of slavery into Georgia. At the period of the formation of the Constitution slavery existed in every colony with the exception of Massachusetts.

If I were called on to say, Mr. Chairman, which of all the States in the Union had done more for freedom than any other, I should say without the fear of contradiction, Virginia—the mother of an empire as well as presidents. She had while a colony remonstrated with the mother country, again and again, not to send slaves there. With Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware she had, in convention, voted against the extension of the slave trade to 1808, when the delegation of every State from New England voted for it. Again, when our Treasury at the close of the revolutionary war was bankrupt, the soldiers unpaid and destitute, Congress called on the several States to make a donation of their public lands, by the sale of which they hoped to raise enough money to meet the public exigencies. Virginia was the first to respond, with a clear and perfect title to all the territory now embraced in the five great States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. She gave it up, and by deed indented conveyed her title to the United States. It was a donation no prince, power, or potentate on earth would or could have made. What then, sir? By her ordinance of 1787 she dedicated it all to freedom; neither "slavery nor involuntary servitude" was ever to exist within that broad domain, and where, but for this princely gift, slavery would probably have existed to this day; and where gentlemen on this floor from those great States, the most blatant in their denunciations of her, and her sister slave States, might now be in a rebel congress instead of this. Sir, there was not another State in the Union, not one, which would have disposed of their public lands to such an extent, even if they had the power to do so, and for the purposes to which the grant referred to was made. And yet this great State, with a delegation of her most honored citizens, was here up to the time of firing on Fort Sumter, begging, beseeching, and praying you to make an amicable arrangement of the slave question, fair, honorable, and just, and yet you, the very States whose heritage you derived from her, turned your backs upon her delegation, refused to receive any proposition from her, and forced a State, until then as loyal to the Union as any State in it, to take a part against you, to join the other slave States in a rebellion they did not approve, and a fratricidal war they abhorred, but which, owing to your refusal to admit of any terms, they were forced into. A "little more blood-letting," they said, "would do no harm," and you have had it in quantities enough, one would think, to satisfy Juggernaut himself. Sir, whatever may be the result of this war, and as it may, three years' contest must have satisfied every one that the blood shed, and money expended, would to a very great degree have been saved if Virginia had remained in the Union. The subjection of the other States would have been an easy task.

Sir, I have heard the cry here and elsewhere, from the hangers-on of the Government, from the "shoddy contractors," from those who are making fortunes out of this internecine contest, that the Democratic party were disloyal to the Government, sympathizers with the rebels, and other opprobrious phrases too low and vulgar for repetition. But let me ask, sir, if this is so, what chance have you of subduing the South? The election of 1860 shows that there were a million and a half of Democratic votes given in the Union States in that year—a pretty good nucleus to rally around in 1864. Take the Democratic young men who are fighting the battles of the country out of the field, and how large an army would you have in it? Your defeat would be as certain as fate. Burke said, and with great truth, "You cannot draw an indictment against a whole people." I care not what is said here or elsewhere; history past and present teaches the fact that the Democratic party now as at all times have been loyal to the Government of the country. They will, as is their right to do, argue the question whether the war might not have been prevented by a settlement upon terms fair and honorable to both parties before its commencement. They may and they will argue the question whether the policy of the Administration has been right or wrong in carrying it on. It is right and proper they should do so; none but a despot would prevent it.

Sir, it is said, by way of sneering at the loyalty of the Democratic party, by those who never "put foot in the tented field," and never mean to as long as they can cheat the Government out of money enough to procure a substitute, that the Democratic party is the "peace party" of the country, while they will "spend the last dollar, sacrifice the last man, die in the last ditch," to put down this "accursed rebellion." They are for war, "war to the knife, the knife to the hilt."

When Cato called his little Senate together at Utica, at the time when Cæsar was marching upon the city, the fiery Sempronius proclaimed in ferocious and indignant eloquence, such as we frequently hear in this Hall—

"My voice is still for war!
Gods! can a Roman Senate long debate
Which of the two to choose—slavery or death?
No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And at the head of our remaining troops
Attack the foe, break through the thick array
Of his thronged legions, and charge home upon him;
Perhaps some arm more potent than the rest
May strike his heart, and free the world from bondage."

The conservative Lucius replied, "My thoughts I must confess are turned on peace." This counsel of Lucius was the especial object of the warrior's indignation. The "loyal" Sempronius, who scorned to submit to mediation, and could not brook the idea of peace, whispered in Cato's ear, "Beware of Lucius, he is a traitor." The very next night Sempronius deserted Cato and joined Cæsar, while Lucius, the advocate of peace, remained, and bravely fought for the liberties of Rome. There is a moral in this, "that the way-faring man, though a fool, cannot misunderstand." Instead of being the "enemies of their Government," as their enemies charge, they are its truest and best friends. Errors may and will be avoided "where reason is left free to combat them." The worst and most violent enemies of the Government are those who blindly and willfully "throw up their caps and cry, Long live King Richard," who blindly and willfully yield to the "Sic volo, sic jubeo" of presidents or kings.

Sir, I know full well the effect of power and patronage, wielded as it is in a Government like ours. I have seen its effects; they are apparent in those who "Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,

Where thrift may follow fawning."

Sir, no party that ever existed but the Democratic party could stand the recreancy and renegadism of the men to whom they have given power and wealth, who are now their worst enemies and most bitter defamers. We need not go out of the ten miles square which make this District to furnish more than one example.

Sir, I have before remarked, that if the war had been carried out in the spirit of the manifesto, as set forth in the President's inaugural, and as again enunciated in his message to Congress at the called session, as approved by nearly the whole House, in February, 1861, Republicans as well as Democrats, in the passage of the Crittenden resolutions, this unhappy strife and bloody contest would long since have terminated, would have brought to us the Union men of the South, then no doubt in the ascendant, and the Union flag would long since have floated over the whole continent, over one people, united and prosperous beyond any nation on the face of the earth. That the President was honest in the assertions that he then made, and would have faithfully carried them out, I firmly believe. I had known him long and well; he resided in the district I have the honor to represent here, before he moved to Illinois; what the influences were that induced him to change his purposes I do not know, nor do I care about knowing them now; they were the most malign and baleful that ever counselors gave to their superior, and on the heads of those who gave them will be heaped the curses and anathemas of future generations in this country to the latest of our posterity. But a "change," for some cause or other, "came over the spirit of his (the President's) dream."

Like Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, and his successor in Israel, who consulted with the old men that stood before his father, while he yet lived, and said: "How do you advise that I may answer the people?" and they spake unto him, saying, "If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and will serve them and answer them and speak good words unto them, then will they be thy servants forever." But he forsook the counsel of the old men which they had given him, and consulted with the young men, who had grown up with him, (and had made him king,) and stood before him, and he said unto them, "What counsel give you, that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying: Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter?" and the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people, who spake unto thee, saying: "Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us," thus shalt thou say unto them: "My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins, and now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke; my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." And the king answered the people roughly, and forsook the old men's (the revolutionary fathers') counsel that they had given him, and he hearkened not unto the people. And so when the people saw that the king hearkened not unto them, they said, "What portion have we in David? Neither have we inheritance in Jesse: to your tents, O Israel, now see to thine own house, David." What was the result? Rehoboam made speed in his chariot and fled to Jerusalem, the twelve tribes were divided, Jeroboam reigned over eleven, while Rehoboam had only Judah for an inheritance.

Sir, this is not the only moral in that good Book that kings and presidents might profit by if they would read it, as they should do. I do not believe it possible for the President to "run the churches" unless he does.

Sir, while I was at college Livy was one of our text-books, and I remember now with pleasure one of the incidents in the early history of Rome as narrated by him, which made an impression on my mind that half a century has not erased. He states "that about three hundred and fifty years before the advent of our Saviour, the earth in the middle of the Forum at Rome, either by means of an earthquake or some other natural cause, sunk to an immense depth, forming a vast aperture, nor could the crevasse be filled up with all the exertions of the Roman people to do so. The aperture widened and the fissure deepened, notwithstanding all the attempts to stop it, until, pursuant to the advice of the gods, they consulted the soothsayers. The answer given was, 'that if they wished to save Rome, and make it everlasting, they must sacrifice what constituted the principal strength of the Roman people.' While deliberating on what constituted that strength, Marcus Curtius, a youth descended from the noblest Roman family, and distinguished for his military exploits, reproved them for disputing 'whether Rome could be possessed of greater strength than that which was founded on the arms and valor of her citizens.' Casting his eyes on the temples of the gods in sight of the Forum, and to the capitol, stretching his hands to the heavens, and then to the infernal gods, through the chasm yawning at his feet, he devoted himself as a victim; dressed in complete armor, mounting his richly caparisoned horse, he plunged into the abyss, and Rome was saved." Sir, there is an abyss wide and deep between us and the seceded States; vain indeed have been all efforts thus far to close it. Who in these times will take the leap and save the Republic? I look with great earnestness to the other side of the House, where, if they are to be believed, all the patriotism, loyalty, and love of the country is concentrated. With a whole platoon of generals, is there no one among them who will make the sacrifice, or have they left the army for the army's good, in order to do the State some service, believing this a better sphere to serve their country than in its battle-fields? I appeal to all and each of the military gentlemen; to those on the Committee on Military Affairs who have seen service, and hard service, particularly, to be up and doing. Gird on your armor and make your selection. I have not the slightest doubt any one of you would make the sacrifice cheerfully, but I am equally aware of the power and influence of rank in the service. The duty properly belongs to your chairman; a more proper selection could not be made; young, ardent, courageous, loyal as he has given us to understand on this side of the House, when questioning our loyalty; willing to sacrifice everything dear to him to put down this "cursed rebellion." Why should not he, doffing his civilian's dress and donning his regimentals, as major general of volunteers, mount his war-horse, and take the leap? Should he do so, as I trust he will, his name will go down to future generations, to generations yet unborn, as the saviour of his country, and some future Livy, in making a note of it, will record the fact that Major General SCHENCK, of Ohio, like a second Marcus Curtius, saved the Republic.

Sir, it is not reconstruction but restoration that the people demand. It is the old family household, the foundations of which our fathers helped to lay, and whose structure they helped to embellish. It is that noble old mansion, now somewhat dilapidated by years, and injured somewhat by the action of their children, who, grown reckless and dissipated by their prosperity, have broken its walls and defaced the building; but there is enough left to restore it to its pristine strength and beauty. Let it be done. Every column restored, every stone relaid as our fathers placed them, firm and solid and lasting as the pyramids of Egypt; a domicile for our children and children's children as long as time shall endure. We want the inheritances bequeathed to us by Washington and Jefferson, by John Hancock and the elder Adams, and their compatriots North and South. "Not conquered provinces," desolated empires, States broken down, their boundaries eradicated, deserts more waste than Sahara; but flourishing cities, thriving villages, cultivated fields, churches, colleges, schools, as they flourished and abounded before this internecine war commenced. Give us, I say, restoration, the restoration of the "Union as it was, the Constitution as it is." Not States dismantled, disjointed, broken up, but a "union of hearts and a union of hands" from the Bay of Fundy to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Sir, all history teaches us in lessons of blood that in republics, unless such a union exists despotism is the natural and legitimate result. How has it been in comparatively modern times? Read the history of the Commonwealth under Cromwell in England. Who was his successor? Charles II, the weakest prince that ever occupied the English throne. Look at France, broken into factions during the Revolution, she yielded without a struggle to Napoleon I and his guards. Where in Europe is there a single republic but Switzerland and "San Marino?"

How was it in the Old World? Rome, republican Rome, bowed to the mandates of Cæsar and his cohorts, and, like a "close corporation," surrendered her rights to the conqueror. Greece, "the land of scholars and the nurse of arms," the fairest and most glorious republic of ancient times, "for more than two thousand years despotism has bound her with its chains. Her arts are no more, her temples destroyed, the Pantheon a wreck, her palaces in ruins. At Thermopylae she defied the Persian cohorts, and at Marathon was victorious. The tide of her triumph rolled back on the Hellespont. Factions betrayed her, and her ruin was the work of the descendants of Pericles and Leonidas, in whose veins flowed the blood of the conquerors at Marathon." May we not profit from her history?

Sir, it is sometimes a momentous question in the political as well as in the natural world, "whether the mountain which oppresses the volcano is wrong or the volcano which upheaves it?"

Sir, consistently, continually, and from the commencement of our difficulties, have I held to one doctrine. I have said, Carry on this war for the "Union and the Constitution, and the enforcement of the laws," as proposed by the President in the messages referred to, and in the almost unanimous vote of this House in the adoption of the Crittenden resolution in July, 1861, and I am with you to the end. Violate no right, State or individual; adhere to all the compromises of our fathers—we could not have formed the Constitution without them. They pledged their honor as well as ours to abide by them. Shall we, their descendants, be so faithless as to break that pledge? Shall we violate that bond? Shall we be recreant to every principle of honor and duty, and because we have the power set aside those rights as sacred as ours and held by the same tenure? Is might to make right? Is the war power to override all guarantees? Are we because we have the numerical strength to abjure all principles of honor and justice in dealing with those opposed to us, "bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh," those who should be united to us by every tie that can bind man to his fellow-man? God forbid it. Let us, even as conquerors, deal with them in good faith. You will never restore them to the Union unless you do. I appeal not to the fanatics, not to the abolitionists, not to the "one idea" men, not to the "Jellabys" in breeches, who prefer taking care of the pickaninnies at Borrioboolagah to their own household, but to those conservative men here and elsewhere who, thank God, are daily increasing in power and influence; to those who still believe the Union, "tempering mercy with justice" even now, may be restored, the Constitution preserved, and the flag of our country, the stars and stripes which have so long been borne aloft in the "battle and the breeze," upon more than one victorious field, may again, whether in peace or war, be the only emblem of our nationality from one end of this continent to the other; embracing every State and every inch of territory within our broad domain. Sir, to bring about this result I will still act with the conservative men of this House and elsewhere, as I have hitherto done; with those who are for maintaining inviolate the pledges made by our fathers; with those who wish to see our glorious Union restored to its pristine simplicity and beauty; with those who are for preserving the Constitution as our fathers made it. With such a party I will act, act diligently and faithfully, aiding, assisting, and supporting them as Aaron and Hur did with the patriarch of old, "even to the going down of the sun."

And all other provisions of this act, so far as applicable, relating or in any manner appertaining to the companies so consolidated, or either thereof, shall apply and be of force as to such consolidated organization. And in case, upon the completion by such consolidated organization of the roads or either of them, of the companies so consolidated, any other of the road or roads of either of the other companies authorized as aforesaid, (and forming, or intended or necessary to form a portion of a continuous line from each of the several points on the Missouri river, hereinbefore designated, to the Pacific coast,) shall not have constructed the number of miles of its said road within the time herein required, such consolidated organization is hereby authorized to continue the construction of its road and telegraph in the general direction and route upon which such incomplete or unconstructed road is hereinbefore authorized to be built, until such continuation of the road of such consolidated organization shall reach the constructed road and telegraph of said other company, and at such point to connect and unite therewith; and for and in aid thereof the said consolidated organization may do and perform, in reference to such portion of the road and telegraph as shall so be in continuation of its constructed road and telegraph, and to the construction and equipment thereof, all and singular the several acts and things hereinbefore provided, authorized, or granted to be done by the company hereinbefore authorized to construct and equip the same, and shall be entitled to similar and like grants, benefits, immunities, guarantees, acts, and things to be done and performed by the Government of the United States, by the President of the United States, by the Secretaries of the Treasury and Interior, and by commissioners, in reference to such company, and to such portion of the road hereinbefore authorized to be constructed by it, and upon the like and similar terms and conditions, so far as the same are applicable thereto. And in case any company authorized thereto shall not enter into such consolidated organization, such company upon the completion of its road as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled to, and is hereby authorized to continue and extend the same under the circumstances, and in accordance with the provisions of this section, and to have all the benefits thereof, as fully and completely as are herein provided touching such consolidated organization. And in case more than one such consolidated organization shall be made, pursuant to this act, the terms and conditions of this act, hereinbefore recited as to one, shall apply in like manner, force, and effect to the other: Provided, however, That rights and interests at any time acquired by one such consolidated organization shall not be impaired by another thereof. It is further provided that, should the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California complete their line to the eastern line of the State of California before the line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall have been extended westward so as to meet the line of said first-named company, said first-named company may extend their line of road eastward one hundred and fifty miles, on the established route, so as to meet and connect with the line of the Union Pacific road, complying in all respects with the provisions and restrictions of this act as to said Union Pacific road, and upon doing so shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by this act on said Union Pacific Railroad Company."

"And be it further enacted, That before any land granted by this act shall be conveyed to any company or party entitled thereto under this act, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest, as the title shall be required by said company, which amount shall without any further appropriation stand to the credit of the proper account, to be used by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the prosecution of the survey of the public lands along the line of said road, and so from year to year until the whole shall be completed, as provided under the provisions of this act."

That the House agree to the said bill as amended.

JAMES HARLAN,
L. F. S. FOSTER,
JOHN CONNESS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THADDEUS STEVENS,
J. W. MCCLURG,
C. COLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

During the reading of the report, Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, said: I would suggest that the conference committee explain the report instead of having it read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the chairman will consent to have the report printed, and let it go over until morning.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; I do not know that we shall have a quorum here after to-night.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. STEVENS. There is a great deal of verbiage in that report; but it all simply amounts to this: that the single companies may consolidate into one company and build the road if they choose; and I supposed that just about as many words as I have used would be sufficient to convey that idea in the report. But they have written out a long report, and it only conveys that idea at last.

Now, sir, the main change from the House bill is this: we granted to the branch to be made from Leavenworth to the main stem at Lawrence a subsidy of $16,000 a mile, the distance being thirty-six miles. The Senate rejected that and the House receded from that proposition, and the subsidy, therefore, is about half a million dollars less than it was in the bill as it went to the Senate.

Mr. WILDER. Is it understood by the committee that the Union Pacific Railway Company forfeit their right under the bill if the road from Leavenworth to Lawrence be not built in the time mentioned in the bill?

Mr. STEVENS. We expressly provide that they shall build that branch, and they do forfeit their rights unless they build it. The whole is granted upon the condition that they comply with the conditions of the grant. And if they do not build that road they forfeit all their interests.

We have, however, enlarged the time, and given them two years instead of one to complete the road from Leavenworth to the main line at Lawrence. We thought it might be difficult to go on and build that road within a year. We granted them that additional time although we struck out the whole subsidy for the thirty-six miles; and there is that much less of bonds saved to the Government.

There is a little further change, inasmuch as we amended the law in regard to timber on the land on the western side of the mountain. By the original law, although the odd sections, if mineral lands, did not belong to the company, yet they were granted all the timber upon them. We have thought that unreasonable, and that the miners who would occupy these odd sections, which did not fall to the company on account of their being mineral lands, would need a large portion of the timber for mining purposes; and therefore we modified the original law so as to give the timber to the miners. If the company accept the provisions of the law, of course they will be bound by that. Both branches of the committee thought we were granting nothing more than the settlers upon the mineral lands were entitled to. I do not know that there are any other essential changes. If gentlemen wish information upon any other point I will gladly give it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will the gentleman have the report printed so that we may know what it is?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know when a majority of the House will be found here again. I think it is explained to the House fairly, and when they look at the bill I think they will find no material changes beyond what I have mentioned, and that all the changes which have been made are in derogation of the rights granted to the company. In other words, they are all in favor of the United States.

I call the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. WILSON demanded tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, and Mr. STEVENS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 13.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded tellers on agreeing to the report.

Tellers were not ordered.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution. If I am allowed, I may say a word or two before introducing it. The House had agreed to appropriate $150,000 under circumstances such as I need not repeat for the purpose of bringing the water from the Potomac into this city. The House confined the appropriation to a specific object so that the money should not be spent on the general work of the aqueduct, but should effect a certain purpose. The Senate refused to agree to it, and required that the money should be left to be spent in any way the superintendent pleased. The conference committee on the part of the House refused to agree to that; and so the whole appropriation was struck out. Since that has been done both Houses have been informed that unless some appropriation of this kind be made there cannot be any water brought into the city. Now I desire to have sent to the Senate a joint resolution reaffirming the appropriation that we made in the very same way and throwing upon the Senate the responsibility of rejecting it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The House has just voted away $96,000,000 of the public treasure, without even a vote by yeas and nays. I object.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is not before the House.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I insist upon my objection; we have drank muddy water here for ten years, and we can do so a little longer.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at a quarter to eleven o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 2, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 483) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 278) prescribing the terms on which exemptions shall be furnished by the General Land Office.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 232) in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between the loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (No. 573) making an appropriation to carry into effect an act to prevent smuggling; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 23) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State;

A bill (H. R. No. 569) for the relief of John Williams.

ANTHONY SWEETING.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata, have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. It merely provides for the claim of a colored man for piloting our vessels, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata, for losses or fines sustained by him in consequence of his employment in the service of vessels of the United States; but the amount of the claim is not to exceed $500.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. SUMNER. While we were in executive session I was called to the door by the Secretary of the Interior, who asked me and urged me very strenuously not to allow a bill that has passed the House of Representatives which is on our Calendar, and which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations in this body, to fail to be acted upon. It is House bill No. 552. It will take but two minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that bill will not be taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Because I desire to make a report from a committee of conference, and there are several reports of that character to be made.

Mr. SUMNER. I know of none.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator's colleague wishes to make one. Because the Senator from Massachusetts has not any to make, he seems to suppose there is no such business to be done. I trust that these reports from committees of conference will be disposed of before we take up other business. I ask the consent of the Senate to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) There is a motion before the Senate. The report can be received only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SUMNER. Let me pass my bill first.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall not agree to it. If you can get a majority of the Senate you can do it, not otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 552. The Senator from Illinois, pending the motion, asks unanimous consent to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Illinois. I do not wish to make a battle on a small matter. This is a bill that I have been trying to get up for two or three days, and, as I said, the Secretary of the Interior has come to our door to-day especially to remind me of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the report of the committee of conference will be received.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection, if it shall not be understood that the floor is still held by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, I hold nothing; I do not understand that I hold anything.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 511 have instructed me to make the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment, being the proviso to the first section.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate's third amendment, and agree to the same with the following amendment: "to the end of said amendment the following words, 'so far as relates to bounties.'"

That the Senate recede from its further amendment.

That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate's amendment to the title of said bill and agree to the same.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

H. S. LANE,

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. F. FARNSWORTH,

J. K. MOORHEAD,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

SALARIES OF SLAVE-TRADE OFFICERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 552.

Mr. McDougall. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. SUMNER. It is a bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. A bill to increase the salaries of the judges and arbitrators appointed under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade.

Mr. CONNESS. Why increase them?

Mr. SUMNER. Because they cannot live on the salaries they now receive. It is impossible.

Mr. CONNESS. I object to taking up that bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, let it be put to a vote. I am sure the Senator will not object when he has listened to my statement.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust that bill will not be taken up, and as a reason for not taking it up I desire to say to the Senate that application has been made to the Judiciary Committee at the present session from nearly every judge in the United States asking to have his salary increased. The committee believe that they ought to be increased; there are judges who do not get enough to live upon; but under the circumstances and the peculiar condition of the country, the committee agreed that they would not recommend the increase of the salary of a single judge at this time; that they, in common with the rest of the country, must bear the burdens.

Now, sir, to take up a bill to increase the salaries of judges who have no business to do, and are paid in gold, seems to me to be preposterous. I trust that the Senate will not take it up.

Mr. McDougall. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations a question. I want to understand this matter exactly. If my recollection is not imperfect, it was understood in committee that that bill would be left to lie over until the next session. I so understood.

Mr. SUMNER. I will explain it.

Mr. CONNESS. I simply desire to say in addition to what the Senator from Illinois has said, that to-day the judges in the State of California receive only forty per cent. upon the amount stated by law to be their salary owing to the disparity in the currency. Now, shall we increase the salary of these officers and pass by those of whom I have spoken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on taking up the bill. It is not yet before the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to answer the remarks that Senators have made if it be in order, and very briefly.

Mr. CONNESS. They understand it. Let us vote.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from California, who has made his argument, who has attacked the bill, says Senators understand it. I do not wish to take up time on this matter, but it is entrusted to me in the order of business. This appropriation, which is very small, comes recommended from two different Departments of the Government, the Department of State and the Department of the Interior. It has been under the careful consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body, and in obedience to a general rule which they adopted at the beginning of the session, they forbore to make any recommendation with regard to it. That general rule was, that notwithstanding we had applications from almost every quarter of the globe for an increase of salary, we would make no recommendation in that direction. Meanwhile the House of Representatives have acted on the double recommendation of the two Departments of the Government, and have sent us this bill.

Mr. McDougall. Allow me to ask the Senator whether it was not understood in committee that it should be postponed until the next session?

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am coming to that. The bill was duly referred to the committee of which the Senator is a member. It was considered by them again, and they directed me to report it to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass. That is the history of the measure.

Since then I have been addressed at least twice by the Secretary of the Interior, who takes a particular interest in this matter. The Senate is aware that the supervision of what is done for the arrest of the slave trade is placed in the Department of the Interior. He has satisfied himself that this addition ought to be made. The Secretary of State is of the same opinion. It is to meet the case in only two places, Sierra Leone and the Cape of Good Hope. The first place is singularly inhospitable and disagreeable; a place not agreeable to visit; and the pay of the judge there is $2,500, and of the arbitrator $2,000. A similar salary is allowed at the Cape of Good Hope. The statements from both of these places are that these gentlemen cannot subsist on those salaries; and the question is whether, having come into these treaty stipulations with Great Britain for the constitution of this court at these two different places, we do not owe it to good faith to put our officers there on such a footing that they can at least live. It is proposed to raise the salaries of each $1,000; to make the salary of the judges $3,500 instead of $2,500, and of the arbit-trators $3,000 instead of $2,000. That is the story.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Is it in order to move to postpone this motion?

Mr. SUMNER. The question is on taking it up. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Then I move to postpone this motion until the first Monday in December next.

The motion was agreed to.

PASSENGERS ON STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 510, which was laid over yesterday.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a report from a committee of conference?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir, as soon as my motion is put.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I should like to know what the bill is.

The Secretary read the title of the bill, as follows: "A bill further to regulate the carriage of passengers on steamships and other vessels."

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to postpone that motion until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. There will be more time spent in this way than it would take to pass the bill. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his motion.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am willing to do so if we can get a vote without discussion.

Mr. CONNESS. I will agree not to discuss it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. How is it with your colleague? I want to call up the resolution for an adjournment as soon as I can get the floor.

Mr. McDougall. If the Senator will allow me to say a word, I believe there is no opposition to this bill. It is a matter peculiarly relating to the State of California. I do not propose to discuss it. I have said all that I desire to say upon it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. With the understanding that there is to be no discussion I will withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be withdrawn by common consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered. The Chair hears no objection. The question now is on taking up the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We were notified yesterday by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. TEN Eyck,] who is a member of the Committee on Commerce that reported this bill, that it involved very important considerations, and that it was understood by them that it was not to be acted upon at this session. I hope, therefore, it will not be taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. I call on the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] for a statement in relation to that point.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; the Senator from Rhode Island, who reported the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I had the honor of reporting the bill. It was not the intention of the committee that it should not be acted upon at this session, but that it should be reported favorably from the committee and the matter brought before the Senate that they might hear what the Senators who were the advocates of this bill had to say in favor of it. The attorneys of the lines, both on the Atlantic and Pacific side, who were adverse to the bill appeared before the committee, and the statements which those attorneys made were put in writing and have been laid before the Senate accompanying this bill. The committee reported the bill favorably. They did so with a view of obtaining from those who advocated the bill information as to the necessity of its passage. I must be permitted to say, however, they were not favorable to giving their votes to it until they received some information from the Senators who were in favor of it, they having heard but one side of the question; but under the circumstances, the measure being so important to the interests of California, they deemed it proper and right that the question should be placed before Senate. It was believed that it had merit, and that that merit should be brought to the attention of Senators, and then the committee would make up their minds as to what position they would take upon the subject. We had no doubt that they would take a favorable view of the subject.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I feel called upon to say a word after the quite astrigent remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] last evening upon the course I had taken, and upon his appeal to the Senator from Rhode Island just now to make a statement when I was called upon to make a statement. I am glad the Senator from Rhode Island has made his statement.

The Senator from California expressed his profound astonishment that I should have made the statement I did last evening before the Senate. That, I may be allowed to say, was a very ungracious return for what I may perhaps be led to say is the truth, that had it not been for my recommendation his bill never could have seen daylight this session before the Senate; but out of consideration to the Senator who I myself had invited to appear before the committee and make a statement, and inasmuch as this was an important measure, I agreed to allow it to be reported. I wanted to have it examined. I was inclined favorably toward the bill. It is my impression now that the bill ought to pass, and I expect to give my vote for it, and did from the beginning; but, according to the statement of certain persons, it involved the question of the continuation of the California steamship lines; it involved the raising of the passage money to double the present amount; and it involved a discontinuance of the power on the part of steamer passengers to go from the Atlantic coast to the golden coast of the Pacific.

Whether that is so or not, I cannot say; but it was a matter of sufficient importance for this Senate to know something about, and it was the wish of the committee that the subject should come before the Senate, and, according to my understanding, should remain reported, and that we would act upon it at the next session. The Senator from Rhode Island understands that.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I do not think that was the understanding.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I have understood the Senator to say what his understanding was. I simply state what mine was. We do not understand it exactly alike; but it comes to about the same thing.

Having said this much, I have no objection to the passage of this bill, and if it should be brought before the Senate I shall vote for it.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator took what I said as being offensive to him, it gives me great pleasure to withdraw it. The only thing I shall say in advocacy of this bill after it shall be taken up will be to call for the reading of a single paragraph of a letter from the American consul at Aspinwall; and if the Senate then will not pass the bill, I shall be perfectly satisfied with whatever disposition they may make of it.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 10—

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Can I make a report from a committee of conference now?

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the report will be received pending the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion pending, and no other business can be entertained except by the unanimous consent of the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to make a report from a committee of conference. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be received.

AMENDMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

Mr. WILSON. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, have agreed upon a report, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest that the chairman making this report shall read it, and as he reads each clause shall explain it so that the Senate may know what it is. When the report is read in a lump by the Secretary we cannot tell much about it.

Mr. WILSON. The Secretary had better read the report, and I will explain it when he gets through.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 549) to further regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the Senate do recede from its amendment to the House bill, and agree to the said bill with the following amendments:
2. After the word "township" in line six of section one, insert the words "ward of a city."
3. After the word "district" in the seventh line, section one, insert the words "or of a county not so subdivided."
4. In the eighth and ninth lines of section one strike out the words "and substitute."
5. In the twelfth line, section one, strike out the word "two" and insert "one."
6. In line thirteen, section one, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two."
7. In line fifteen, section one, strike out the word "four" and insert "three."
8. In line fifteen, section one, strike out the word "half" and insert the word "third."
9. In line seventeen, section one, strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "third."
10. In the eighteenth line, section one, strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "third."
11. In line twenty-one, section one, after the word "none" strike out the words "to his legal representatives," and insert the words "to his mother, if she be a widow."
12. After the word "representatives" in the twenty-second line, section one, strike out the residue of said section.
13. In line two, section two, after the word "ward" insert the words "of a city."
14. In line four, section two, strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "fifty."
15. In line five, section two, after the word "shall" insert the word "immediately;" and that the House do agree to said sections as amended.
16. In line four, section three, after the word "rebellion" insert the words "except the States of Arkansas, Tennessee, and Louisiana;" and that the House do agree to the said section as amended.
17. In lines twelve and thirteen, section five, strike out the word "knowingly."
18. In line eighteen, section five, strike out the words "and unconditionally."
19. In line eighteen, section five, after the word "discharged" insert the words "upon repayment of all bounties received."
20. In line nineteen, section five, after the word "officially" insert the word "who."
21. In the same line after the word "shall" insert the words "knowingly enlist any person under sixteen years of age shall;" and that the House do agree to said section as amended.
22. In line ten, section six, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred;" and the House do agree to said section as amended.
23. Add at the end of section eight the following words: "upon satisfactory proof of their residence made to the Secretary of War;" and that the House do agree to said section as amended.
24. In line four, section ten, strike out all of said section after the word "the" and insert the following in lieu thereof: "the provisions of the seventeenth section of an act approved February 24, 1864, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1863; and that the House agree to said section as amended."
25. Add the following as section eleven: "Be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter or change the provisions of existing laws relative to permitting persons liable to military service to furnish substitutes;" and both Houses agree to said amendment.

HENRY WILSON,

H. S. LANE,

E. D. MORGAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. GARFIELD,

N. B. SMITHERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the chairman of the committee of conference to explain these changes. We cannot well understand what are material by the mere reading of the report.

Mr. WILSON. I will endeavor to explain the material points in the report. Nearly all of these changes were made in the House bill the other night by the Senate. The first section of the House bill provided for a bounty of $200 to any person who would enlist for one year; $300 for two years, and $400 for three years. The committee have changed that so as to give a bounty of $100 to the man who enlists for one year, $200 for two years, and $300 for three years.

Mr. JOHNSON. A reduction of $100 in each year.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. In the next place the original bill provided that a person who was drafted should get no bounty, but if he obtained a substitute the substitute should receive the same bounty as though he had volunteered. The bill as it originally stood then would discourage personal service and encourage the procurement of substitutes. The committee struck out that provision, so that volunteers only will get the bounty and not substitutes.

Then the original bill provided that one half of this bounty should be paid to the soldier at the time of his being mustered into the service, one fourth at the expiration of half his term of service, and one fourth at the expiration of service. The committee have changed that so that he will receive one third of the bounty at the time of enlistment, one third when half his time is out, and one third at the expiration of his term of service. We paid one fifth of our last bounties at the time of enlistment; now we propose to pay one third. The House bill provided that we should pay one half down, which seemed to look very much like encouraging bounty-jumping.

Then the last two lines of the first section of the House bill are stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. What were they?

Mr. WILSON. I will read them:

And in case he is honorably discharged by reason of wounds or sickness incurred in the service in the line of his duty, he shall receive full bounty.

It was believed that that clause would have a disorganizing influence in the Army. There are so many different complaints and forms of sickness that may manifest themselves, that to pay a full bounty in those cases would be furnishing an inducement to men to attempt to get off in that way; and the committee therefore struck out that clause.

The House bill provided that the bounty to be paid to the volunteer should, in case of his death while in service, go to his widow, his children, or to his legal representatives. This report provides that it shall go to his widow, his children if he have any, or his mother if she be a widow.

Mr. JOHNSON. And there stop?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. Then the second section of the House bill allowed sixty days for each district to fill up its quota by volunteering prior to a draft. The Senate the other day made it forty days. The committee report in favor of making it fifty days, and after that time the President is to immediately order a draft, so that the people may feel and know that there will be a draft if the quota is not filled and that there will be no further postponement.

The changes in the fifth section are immaterial, merely correcting the form without changing the sense.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to know exactly how that section stands as reported by the conference committee.

Mr. WILSON. It provides that minors under sixteen years of age shall be discharged from the service on the repayment of the bounties they have received, and any officer who shall knowingly enlist any person under sixteen years of age is to be dismissed the service. The section stands substantially as it was amended by the Senate the other day.

In the eighth line of the sixth section the word "fifty" is stricken out and "one hundred" substituted, so that they may make a draft of one hundred per cent. in addition to the number required to fill the quota of any district. Experience has shown that about fifty per cent. of the men drafted are held. By drafting one hundred per cent. additional we shall avoid the necessity of drafting over and over again to fill one call, and save all that time and expense.

The eighth section of the House bill provided for crediting all enlistments of seamen to the district in which they reside. The committee retain that section with this modification: in the seventh line to insert "upon satisfactory proof of residence," so that it throws the burden of proof upon the community claiming to have credit for seamen, and the proof is to be made satisfactory to the War Department. If they cannot prove it clearly they do not get any credit for them.

I shall now explain the action of the committee on the third section of this bill allowing the enlistment of men in States declared to be in rebellion. The section as it originally came to us in the House bill was as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Executive of any of the States to send recruiting agents into any of the States declared to be in rebellion to recruit volunteers under any call under the provisions of this act, who shall be credited to the State, and to the respective subdivisions thereof, which may procure the enlistment.

The committee of conference amended that section by exempting the States of Tennessee, Arkansas, and Louisiana from its operation. It was represented that the House of Representatives had over and over again distinctly voted on this question and would not retreat if the bill was lost, and it was maintained very strongly that it should stand in this form. The Senate committee, representing the sentiment of the Senate as nearly as possible, insisted that it should not be retained, but finally agreed to it with an amendment exempting from its operation Tennessee, where we have raised some twenty or twenty-five regiments, Arkansas, where we have raised seven or eight regiments, and Louisiana, where we have also raised several regiments; so that the section will now apply, if the report should be adopted, to Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for the reading of the fifth section as it will stand if this report should be adopted.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the twentieth section of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1864, shall be construed to mean that the Secretary of War shall discharge minors under the age of eighteen years under the circumstances and on the conditions prescribed in said section; and hereafter, if any officer of the United States shall enlist or muster into the military service any person under the age of sixteen years, with or without the consent of his parent or guardian, such person so enlisted or recruited shall be immediately discharged upon repayment of all bounties received; and such recruiting or mustering officer who shall knowingly enlist any person under sixteen years of age shall be dismissed the service, with forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and shall be subject to such further punishment as a court-martial may direct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why was the word "knowingly" where it first occurs stricken out of that section?

Mr. WILSON. The word "knowingly" was stricken out by a vote of the Senate the other night when we had the bill under consideration. It was thought best to strike it out for this reason: if an officer enlists a minor under sixteen years of age without knowing it, that is no reason why the minor should not be discharged.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has nothing to do with the punishment of the officer?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; nothing at all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think the Senate ought to concur in this report. If there was any one question upon which the Senate expressed a positive opinion it was upon this question as to whether the executive officers of the different States should be allowed to send agents into the States in rebellion with a view of filling up their quota with negroes in those States. As I understood from the argument, it was esteemed by the Senate a most objectionable feature of the House bill. Under that provision, Indiana will send her agents down perhaps and meet the agents of Massachusetts in the State of North Carolina, or in such portions of that State as these agents may be able to reach, and then commences a disgraceful struggle between these two States as to which shall get the most negroes to fill up the places that ought to be filled by the men of Indiana and Massachusetts.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. But they are credited to the States from which they are taken.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; they are to be credited to the States that secure their enlistment. This section will now read:

That it shall be lawful for the Executive of any of the States to send recruiting agents into any of the States, except Tennessee, Louisiana, and Arkansas, declared to be in rebellion, to recruit volunteers under any call under the provisions of this act, who shall be credited to the State, and to the respective subdivisions thereof, which may procure the enlistment.

I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I read it correctly.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Indiana will move to accept all the other portions of the report.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We cannot do that; we must take it as a whole.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I shall vote against it, and let us raise another committee.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to say this: the committee on the part of the House of Representatives stated distinctly that on that question the whole bill turned, and its defeat was inevitable without that action on it. The Senator from Indiana, a member of the committee, who had strenuously resisted that action in the Senate, finally yielded to that amendment and agreed to it with this amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Who was that?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. LANE, of Indiana, who was opposed to this section; but with the exemption of these three States, he agreed to accept it. We compromised it in that way, and in that way alone the committee came to an agreement.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, early in the war a policy was adopted by which the States were allowed to buy arms, the United States finally assuming to pay the cost of those arms. The result was that Indiana, Illinois, and the other States met in the common market; they became competing purchasers, and the price of arms went up more than one hundred per cent; and that very arrangement cost the Government perhaps millions of dollars. We shall have a more disgraceful scene than that presented to us under this bill. We shall see the agents of Indiana, Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, and all the States that wish to relieve their own population from the burden of this war, in the southern States competing for negroes to fill up their regiments instead of the men of those respective States. It is disgraceful enough, according to my judgment, not according to the judgment of some Senators, to bring the negro into the Army at all; but when the several States become competing purchasers of the negroes to fill up the ranks, I think the scene will be unparalleled in this or any other country.

What is a draft? It is a call upon the men of the respective States for a certain number of men. If the States are to be allowed to secure negroes as mercenary troops to fill up those places and have competing agents to secure such a supply to the Army, as was well said the other day by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Brown,] and I thought his words were full of wisdom on this subject, this very provision will defeat your conscription and the filling up of your Army. Instead of obtaining white men who can win battles, you will secure and supply to your Army negroes right from the plantations. What do you want now? Men of intelligence; men who will not only endure the fatigues of camp life, but with such intelligence as that they may readily become soldiers.

As was asked the other day by the Senator from Missouri, are you to take the negroes who will be secured in South Carolina and North Carolina and put them in the depleted white regiments? That cannot be without a mutiny so far as Indiana troops are concerned. They are men of pride as well as of courage. They have illustrated their pride and their courage upon every battle-field to which they have been called. You cannot fill up the white regiments by the negroes that will be bought up by the competing agents of the States in the southern States.

Then the only possible way in which they can be used will be to make entire new regiments out of these negro troops; and what are they worth for the first year? Did not the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs say to the Senate the other day that new regiments for the first year would not be worth much to the Army, but that if good men were enlisted and distributed into the regiments that are now organized, veteran regiments, the new troops would be almost as valuable as the old troops? But that very purpose and policy will be defeated if this entire enlistment or draft is to be supplied with colored troops. Then you must have entire new regiments with a new organization; they cannot be incorporated into the veteran regiments; and you will defeat the very purpose of this conscription. This is not my argument. It was the argument presented the other day with so much force and eloquence by the Senator from Missouri.

I object to it in part because I think Indiana will not enter into this struggle. Her representatives in the House of Representatives and in this body have not asked for such a provision, and I think her Executive will scarcely venture to represent her people with agents in the southern States to buy up negroes to fill up her quota. What will be the effect? Other States that are so clamorous for this provision will send their agents down into the southern States; they will supply their quota with negroes to offset against the white men of the State of Indiana and of other northern States that will not enter into this contest and this struggle. They cannot well do it. They do not know how to do it. They have no money appropriated for such a purpose.

But the Senator from Massachusetts has told the Senate as the only argument which should control the judgment of the Senate in favor of agreeing to this report, that there are members of the House of Representatives who will not agree to the bill at all without this provision. I should like the Senator to have told this body what States are so represented, what States say there shall be no conscription unless they are allowed to go into the southern States and fill up their numbers in that way. I understand it is the State represented by the Senator in this body.

It is known to the Senate that I am entirely opposed to repealing the commutation clause; but I do not choose to refer to that in this discussion. If it is the judgment of the Senate that it should be repealed, of course I bow to the judgment of the Senate on that subject. But it is the judgment of the Senate, deliberately expressed and by a very large vote, that the States should not be allowed to send their agents down into the southern States to fill up their ranks with negroes.

I wish to call the attention of Senators who are earnest for a vigorous prosecution of the war and to make this campaign a success to this subject. Suppose Massachusetts is called upon for five thousand men and Massachusetts furnishes five thousand white men. They are new recruits; and standing alone in new regiments are not worth much, as the chairman said himself, for this campaign; but taken and distributed among the other Massachusetts regiments they are worth almost as much as five thousand veterans. But instead of getting that valuable service under the conscription, this proposition is that Massachusetts may go into the southern States and buy up five thousand negroes who must be organized into new regiments and be unavailable for the coming year. I address this argument to Senators who feel some responsibility touching this campaign. This report ought to be defeated, and I hope it will be. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Foot, Foster, Hale, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—16.

NAYS.—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—18.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Richardson, and Wright—15.

So the report was non-concurred in.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move—

Mr. CONNESS. There is a question before the Senate.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives in relation to the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the subject of the enrollment bill passes from the Senate I will move that another committee of conference be asked for on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McDougall. I desire to call the attention of the President of the Senate to what has transpired. My colleague had the floor and submitted a motion to take up a certain bill, and he waived it to allow the Senator from Massachusetts to make this report.

Mr. CONNESS. The yeas and nays have been called on my motion, and pending that by unanimous consent this report was presented. That is the condition of things now. I am willing to yield still further to allow the appointment of another committee of conference. I think the motion of the Senator from Ohio is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe the motion I have submitted is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference was received by unanimous consent. After the report was disposed of the Senator from Kansas rose in his place and moved to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him; and that is the pending question before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I had the floor upon the business before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair gave the floor to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. The business had not passed from the consideration of the Senate when I rose in my place and made the motion I have submitted. I waited a moment, expecting the Senator from Massachusetts, who had the right to do it, would make the motion. The business had not yet passed from the hands of the Senate; it was still in the hands of the Secretary; and I therefore had a right to submit the motion that the Senate further insist on their amendments to the House bill, and ask for another committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that after the Senate disagreed to the report of the committee of conference, and before any other motion was made, the Senator from Kansas, as he had a perfect right to do, moved to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him. By the unanimous consent of the Senate, or if the motion of the Senator from Kansas is withdrawn, the motion of the Senator from Ohio can be received.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I rise to relieve the Senate from this embarrassment by withdrawing my motion for the present.

Mr. CONNESS. The state of the question before the Senate is this: the yeas and nays have been ordered—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the state of the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will now move that the Senate further insist on their amendments to the House bill, and ask for another committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to postpone all prior orders with a view of submitting the motion indicated by him.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the motion will not be put in that form. If it can be done by common consent, as the other part of the same business was done, I have no objection.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object.

Mr. CONNESS. My colleague does not understand it. The question, as stated by the Chair, is that all prior orders be postponed. I wish this business to be done by common consent as the other part of the same business was, and I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If that is the understanding, that the motion of the Senator from Ohio is to be considered by unanimous consent, without displacing the question that was pending when the Senator from Massachusetts took the floor, I will agree to let that pass over informally for the transaction of this business, but not to lose the right that my colleague has to the floor in presenting the business that was under discussion when this report was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator that he loses no right.

Mr. CARLILE. Before the question is put on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, I desire to make a remark by way of opposition to it. This question of difference between the Houses has been the subject of conference for several times at least. It is perfectly understood, I believe—and if I am wrong the Senator from Massachusetts will correct me—that the Houses will never agree upon any bill of this kind. The House of Representatives is fixed as to its purpose, and the Senate has again and again signified its determination upon this subject of the enlistment of negroes by the loyal States in the rebellious States to be substituted in lieu of white soldiers. It seems to be generally conceded that the House of Representatives will not agree to any enrollment bill unless the privilege is allowed to the northern States to substitute for their white citizens South Carolina and North Carolina negroes. Now, sir, we are upon the eve of an adjournment, and I trust that that adjournment will not be delayed in a fruitless effort to accomplish what must be manifest to every one cannot be accomplished; and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Virginia says that there is a dispute between the two Houses. There is no dispute between the two Houses in my judgment that cannot be easily reconciled. This is the first committee of conference we have had on the subject, and it is due from me in candor and justice to say that the committee of conference was not made in conformity to the usage of the Senate. The main and principal point of difference between the two Houses was as to the right to send agents into the rebel States for the purpose of procuring substitutes, and upon that point a majority of the committee appointed on behalf of the Senate voted with the minority, and consequently did not represent by their votes the majority of the body. There can be no question about that fact, and therefore there never has been really a conference between the two Houses. I should like to have the question tested. I think the Senate has made up its mind that under the circumstances it would not be wise to allow agents of the northern States to go down and substitute negroes in the rebel States for the drafted white men of the northern States. I think that feeling of the Senate ought to be represented in a conference. If the House then shall refuse to agree with them upon such a conference, I will vote for this conscription bill in any way in which it can be placed hereafter; but I think there ought to be a fair effort at least to bring about an agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say a single word in reply to a remark that fell from the Senator from Virginia. He counsels this Senate now, just as we are on the eve of adjournment, without having made due provision for the maintenance of the Army, not to delay the adjournment on that account. Now, sir, when we have driven rebellion from its circumference to its military centers, now when we have got the rebellion by the throat and its sympathizers see that the death-struggle is upon it, you have seen in the last few days in this Senate an attempt to baffle every effort on the part of the Government to sustain itself in this hour of its peril, in this crisis. The men who from the beginning of this war have stood here to baffle every effort on the part of the Government to sustain itself now howl on the track of the Government as if the hour had come when they could put this Government under their feet. The question for the majority of the Senate to determine is whether we will break up in disorder and allow the Opposition in this country to raise this howl on the track of the Government, and this country to go into disorder, or whether we mean to do the necessary legislation of the country—that legislation which no man knows better than the Senator from Virginia is necessary to fill up the ranks of your Army. He and the men who associate with him here know that if this Congress adjourns at this hour leaving the Government powerless to fill up the ranks the great struggle which after three years has now been brought to the moment of success is to end in anarchy.

Now, sir, when the two Houses happen to disagree on this measure, the Senator from Virginia, who from the beginning has not believed in what this nation is doing to protect itself, who has counseled against every measure calculated to strengthen the arm of the Government against the rebellion, seems to think the hour has come when its enemies are to triumph, when a faction in the North, when the Opposition in the North, is to demoralize and disorganize the nation. You are to have no more troops. Grant is not to be sustained before Richmond. He is not to be permitted to throttle the rebellion, now that he is at the very door. That is plain. You have seen that here in the last ten days of the session.

On a question of disagreement between the two Houses, the Senator from Virginia rises here to counsel this Senate, to counsel the majority of this Senate, men who have stood here for three years battling against rebellion and against his counsels, and he stands here to tell us it is not worth while to try to settle this difficulty. We have disagreed. The question is whether we shall get the negroes into the service or not, and on that question he counsels no further effort; let these two bodies go asunder; provide no means for the support of your Army in the field; go home to your constituents; admit the thing has failed; the Opposition in the Senate have triumphed and are to triumph in the coming elections, and you are to welcome the reign of disorder and anarchy in this country.

For one, sir, I stand here to protest against such counsels. I stand here to say to these gentlemen that I do not propose to adjourn for the next thirty days unless the Government of the country is made strong, unless they have all they desire to give them the strength and the reinforcements necessary to maintain their positions at the great military centers where they are, and where none knows better than the honorable Senator from Virginia that rebellion is to die if the American people stand firm and give to Grant and to Sherman the recruits that are necessary and which are calculated and designed to be furnished by this bill.

I trust we shall not take the counsels of these gentlemen who from the beginning have had no faith in what this Government is doing to sustain itself against the rebellion. I submit that it does not come with a very good grace from my honorable friend, the Senator from Virginia, to undertake to counsel this Senate as to what we shall do in an emergency of this sort.

I trust, therefore, that we shall agree to this appointment of another committee; and if that fails, that we shall agree to sit here to the end of this month if it is necessary, until the proper legislation of the country is perfected and until we can retire from our positions here saying to our constituents that the Government has the power and the measures necessary to take the last man, if need be, to end this rebellion. Therefore, sir, I hope we shall agree to the appointment of another committee of conference.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, obtained the floor.

Mr. CARLILE. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I shall only be a minute.

Mr. CARLILE. I do not want to make a speech.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I shall only take a moment, and then the Senator can speak. I wish simply to speak to the question before the Senate.

This matter stands in this way: each House of Congress in a different form passed an amendment to the conscription law. The Senate passed a conscription bill repealing simply the commutation clause. The House concurred in that and passed a bill having a different feature which was to allow the Executives of the different loyal States to recruit in the States in rebellion. The Senate by several votes decided against that. A committee of conference was appointed; we have had the report of that committee of conference; and I wish to say one word in regard to the action of the committee.

I must say for my colleagues upon the committee that they represented fairly what was the opinion of the Senate upon this subject, and said to the committee on the part of the House of Representatives again and again that by some three or four distinct votes the Senate had refused to adopt that feature in their bill. The House committee adhered to the provision, and for the purpose of passing something this compromise was hit upon. The bill as it passed the House of Representatives allowed the Executives of the loyal States to recruit in all the States in rebellion. By the report of the committee of conference the States of Arkansas, Tennessee, and Louisiana were stricken out, and in that form the committee adopted it. It is known to the Senate that I have been opposed to this feature from the beginning, and am now opposed to it; but I prefer to take the report of this committee of conference precisely as it is than to make no change in the conscription law. I think, however, that if another committee should be appointed there may be an agreement yet. I rose simply to state in justice to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Morgan] who were with me upon that committee, that they fairly and fully represented what I understand to be the opinions of the Senate upon this very question.

Mr. CARLILE. No Senator, I am sure, understood me as reflecting on the committee in the remarks that I made. In the moment that I shall occupy of the attention of the Senate I shall confine myself simply to a reply to what fell from the honorable Senator from Maine, and in the exercise of my rights here as a member of this body that exercise shall be termed "counseling" the Senate, I claim to have just as much right to "counsel" the Senate, if that be counsel, as the Senator from Maine, and I think he will in his calmer moments concede to me that privilege. I do not presume to counsel learned Senators older and more experienced and more able than myself, as I willingly concede the honorable Senator from Maine to be; and I think it is not exactly fair for him to conceal what is really the question before the Senate in an effort to charge what will be the result of the conduct which he seemed to advocate upon those who are trying to resist it. What is the condition in which the Senator from Maine has placed himself in the remarks he has just made? Now that we have "got the rebellion by the throat" by virtue of the army which we have brought into the field without any such law as that which the Senator proposes to enact, he will embarrass that army, he will weaken that army, he will let go that hold on the throat of the rebellion by substituting for intelligent white soldiers the ignorant plantation negroes of the South. Now that we have "got the rebellion by the throat," now that it is in a condition to be effectually extinguished, the Senator and those who think with him will let go their hold of the efficient means which has enabled us to get it by the throat, and, in order to keep his loyal people (who will fight as long as there is a man and a dollar left) at home, he will substitute in their place the ignorant South Carolina negro.

Sir, it strikes me, without meaning any offense to the Senator from Maine, that if his speech had been made against his own motion it would have been much more valuable than against the opposition which I have made to this motion. What is that opposition? I appeal to the chairman of the Military Committee, I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts who was chairman of the committee of conference, to bear me witness that it was the determination of the House of Representatives so far as he was advised to allow this bill entirely to fail unless the section which is the principal cause of difference between the Houses was retained. In other words, those who represented this section were not sufficiently awakened as to the importance of putting an enlightened and intelligent soldier in the field and as to the interests that are at stake to go themselves, but would only be willing that a draft shall be made or enlistments shall be made upon the condition that they shall substitute for their white citizens the negroes of the South. Who is it that is trying to baffle every attempt of the Government to maintain itself in this struggle? Is it the man who contends for the intelligence and the patriotism of the country as against the ignorance and want of knowledge necessary to implant within the bosom that patriotism which is essential if we would conquer in this war? Is it he who would fill our armies with the ignorant negroes from the plantations of the South, or he who desires that the honest, intelligent patriot whose Government is to be preserved should show his patriotism and his devotion to the Government by enlisting in the ranks of its Army?

It is such attempts as that which the Senator has advocated this day that are baffling the efforts of the Government to maintain its existence in this struggle for its life. Grant's army to be strengthened by South Carolina negroes, while the citizens of Massachusetts and Maine remain at home engaged in manufacturing munitions of war and taking the contracts of this Government. That is the proposition which the Senator desires to detain the Senate here for the next thirty days upon. Sir, if it be necessary to sustain this Government in this struggle I will not only remain here thirty days but thirty years; and before I will lend my aid to weaken the Government, to baffle it in the effort that it is making for its life, and to paralyze its hold on the throat of the rebellion by putting negroes instead of white men in the armies, I will vote against adjournment as long as I am able to vote.

My resistance to this motion was predicated on what I believed to be a fact, and I have called on the Senator from Massachusetts to corroborate me. If I am wrong in this I would of course withdraw opposition to this motion; but I understand it to be so from gentlemen all around me; and I ask if it is calculated to continue that patriotic feeling which has animated the white people of the western States and of other States that are opposed to this proposition by requiring them to shoulder their own muskets and allowing another section of this country to be relieved from the performance of that duty and substitute in their place an ignorant race, who, as the Senator from Indiana has very properly said, must be for the next year at least a source of weakness, who cannot go, as was contemplated by the Senate in this bill, into the ranks of the veterans in the field, but who must be organized into separate regiments by themselves and become disciplined and made soldiers by time. That is the reason why I opposed this proposition. I do not believe that the adoption of such a proposition as this, with the fifth section remaining, will strengthen the Army. I believe it will weaken the Government in its efforts. I think it would be far better for Congress to adjourn without the adoption of any such law than to enact a law with such a provision in it. It is because I do not believe the negro to be the equal of the white man as a soldier, nor in any other relations that require intelligence and an appreciation of the service in which they are engaged, that I desire the law to remain as it is rather than to have it so changed that white men shall be relieved from military duty and negroes allowed to take their place.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. When I left the Senate a short time ago, as I was necessarily called out, all was calm as a summer morning. I come back and find the Senate in a perfect tempest. Now, Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech, but simply to say that I shall vote as a matter of course for a committee of conference; it is necessary; it is the only way to get along with this matter; but I hold in my hand a slight piece of information which I believe to be correct, and which, it seems to me, ought to put a little different phase on the state of affairs:

"NEW YORK, July 2.—Gold opened to-day at 210; in an hour went down to 205; almost immediately it fell to 200, and is now at 194."

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to say that the difference between the Senator from Virginia and myself is this: I should like to see every white man in the Army of the United States returned to his family and his home, and his place filled by a negro. I am not so devoted to, so much the lover of the negro race that I would permit them to remain at home enjoying its luxuries while white men are called upon to defend them. I should be glad to vote for a proposition that would call out a million negro troops that the white troops may be relieved from the dangers and the fatigues of the Army; and I hope that this Government will increase its energy, and that the time will soon come when we shall be grappling with this rebellion with an army of negroes sufficient to close it out. I do not believe myself that God will be fully satisfied unless this rebellion is closed out by the slaves, property in which caused the rebellion. The object of this bill is to relieve white men by negroes, and I would be glad to see it adopted.

Mr. WILSON. No effort has been made to reconsider the vote last taken, and I do not know whether any will be; but I certainly hope that an effort will be made at any rate to save this bill. As I said, we were told in committee by the gentlemen who represented the House of Representatives that the House had taken its position, that they had put together the repeal of the commutation clause and the reduction of the time and the liberty to enlist men in the rebel States, and they would not separate them, and that any attempt to do so would be a defeat of the measure by a decisive majority. It was then, and after much time, that the committee representing the sentiment of the Senate, whatever their personal opinions might be, consented to arrange this matter in the form in which it has come in here—to enlist men in the rebel States, exempting Tennessee, Arkansas, and Louisiana. Now, sir, I will simply say that those who advocate this measure do not do it entirely to relieve white men from doing their duty.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his motion, I, having voted with the majority, will move to reconsider the vote that has been had on this report, so that the dispute may be ended. Will the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion pending that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I never will interpose to prevent a majority of the Senate from doing what it chooses in a matter of this kind; and therefore I withdraw my motion with the understanding, however, that I can renew it in case the Senator's motion fails.

Mr. POWELL. I hope that a new conference will be appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered on it.

Mr. POWELL. I object.

Mr. CARLILE. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays if it is desired to make a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from California can make his motion. It is a privileged motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be entered, but it is not privileged to be considered at the present time.

Mr. CONNESS. But I can move to postpone the pending orders and take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. To postpone it would postpone the bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I wish to propound a question to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNESS. These questions only procrastinate the discussion.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. There will be no discussion. I merely wish to ask whether it is likely from the sentiments expressed by the committee of conference of the House of Representatives that if we appoint a new committee of conference that House will recede from this proposition?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot tell of course what the House will do; but I can say that the committee on the part of the House said that the House had taken its position and there could be no doubt of it, that the bill could not come within twenty-five votes of being passed if this was abandoned. Mr. SMITHERS, who introduced the bill originally, made this statement. It was sustained by both his associates, although one of them was decidedly opposed to the proposition. They said that the two ideas had been coupled together in the House and could not be separated. That was the position taken. I cannot tell of course what the House may do in the future.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask consent to make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the roll will proceed on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. If we vote down this motion of the Senator from Ohio, will the motion of the Senator from California be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire now to enter the notice of a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall vote in the negative, with a view of giving the Senator from California an opportunity to put his motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose that proposition is defeated, the bill is lost.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that if a second committee of conference be appointed they can settle the matter in half an hour.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is lost is the bill lost?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion it is not. A motion may be entertained to reconsider, and if that was adopted it would be in order to agree to another conference.

Mr. CARLILE. Cannot I, by unanimous consent, save time by withdrawing the call for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I object to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe I have the floor. I gave notice of a motion to reconsider. Now I submit to the Chair whether, if I move to postpone the existing and previous orders and take up for consideration the bill that was before the Senate when this report was made, I cannot then abandon the consideration of that bill and move to reconsider the last vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion not. When the bill comes before the Senate again the pending question will be the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will not consume the time of the Senate. I have sat quietly and voted. I sincerely hope the proposition of the Senator from Ohio may carry, and a new committee of conference may be had on this bill. There are some features in the bill that I desire to see in the enrollment of troops hereafter, but I do not regard it as a matter of very serious importance if the whole bill be defeated; and if some features be retained in it I think we ought to resist it to the death; it ought to be opposed and it will be opposed; but if we can have a fair committee of conference on the proposition I think the objectionable features may be stricken out.

Mr. McDougall. I think that for the dispatch of business and for the best administration of this disputed question a new committee of conference should be organized. I am not going to discuss this thing, but evidently that course is required for the dispatch of business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to know how to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is no question of order for the Chair.

Mr. ANTHONY. I cannot take better advice than of the Chair. If this motion be defeated I understand the motion of the Senator from California will be in order. If that motion shall be defeated will it then be competent to move for a new committee of conference?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No doubt of it. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am sure Senators around me have voted under a misapprehension.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object. This is an important question.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the first time I ever knew the Senator from Indiana to be guilty of discourtesy in this body.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wiley—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Harlan, Morgan, Sausbury, and Wilson—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Howard, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Sprague, and Wright—13.

So it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist on its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a further conference.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, and by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator wait one moment? I ask now whether the motion is not pending to take up House bill No. 510.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is pending, and the yeas and nays have been ordered on it.

Mr. CONNESS. Pending that I have no objection to the report of the conference committee being made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The committee of conference on Senate bill No. 339 have instructed me to submit the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 339) to repeal a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendment: insert in lieu of said amendment of the House the following:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to rent suitable rooms for the accommodation of his office, and to make necessary improvements; and to pay the rent of the same, for one year, the sum of $3,500 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, Such rooms shall not be rented for a period longer than three years;" and the House agree to the same.

JAMES HARLAN,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
JOHN SHERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. B. WASHBURN,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is the $100,000 appropriation in the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Instead of $100,000 being appropriated to build a house, $3,500 a year is appropriated to fit up and rent a house for three years.

The report was concurred in.

RECESS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that at half past four o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERCOURSE WITH DISLOYAL STATES.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for a vote on taking up House bill No. 510.

Mr. McDougall. I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to make a report.

Mr. CONNESS. Reports from conference committees are always in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I made a mistake. A Senate bill has been returned from the House of Representatives with a slight amendment, which I wish to have acted on.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I move concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 232) in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of fraud in States declared in insurrection.

The amendment of the House was, on page 3, section five, line four, to strike out "or shall be in danger of their raids."

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House (No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, and Mr. RUFUS P. SPALDING of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

AMENDMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce the appointment of the second committee of conference on House bill No. 549—

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the vote of the Senate agreeing to a new committee of conference on the enrollment bill be reconsidered. I voted with the majority.

Mr. McDougall. I should like to know whether that motion, being an independent motion, can intervene so as to cut off my colleague on the subject under consideration. I ask it as a question of order. There should be some law in the Senate on these matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not interfere with the motion of the Senator's colleague. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Sausbury, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wiley—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Howard, Nesmith, Richardson, Van Winkle, and Wright—12.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the Senate insist on its amendment, and ask for another conference.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator withdraw that motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to do so in order to allow the Senator to try his motion to reconsider, if it is in my power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion the Senator may withdraw it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw it.

Mr. CONNESS. I now renew my motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to say that in making this motion I make it subordinating my own judgment to what I believe to be a high public necessity. I believe that no greater error or mistake has been committed in the acts for the organization of the armies than in the introduction of the condition that is in contest here now, and I make this motion fearing the consequences; but it is stated here on good authority, and it is undoubtedly true, that the other House is dwindling away and will be without a quorum perhaps at six o'clock this evening. Therefore it becomes my duty to make this motion and sustain it by my vote.

Mr. WILKINSON. I do not know that I understand this proposition correctly, but if I am correct one difference between the Senate and House of Representatives is that the House insist on the provision in this bill that the loyal States may go into certain other States and enlist colored soldiers.

Mr. WILSON. Anybody.

Mr. WILKINSON. It means that. I have heretofore opposed it for the reason that I thought the Government of the United States should enlist them as soldiers of the United States and give no State the particular credit for doing it, but let all the States have the credit upon their quotas. As, however, the Government seems to be very backward in doing it, and inasmuch as I would rather see black soldiers enter into this contest than to have all our white men annihilated before the war shall be over, I will yield my own private feelings and vote for this motion to reconsider. I would rather that the States of New England and the State of New York, and the great wealthy States of the East should cause this element to be mustered into the service of the country than not to have it mustered in at all. That is my view. I am willing, as the representative of a western State without the means perhaps to induce this element to enlist into its service and fill out its own quota, to waive all such objections rather than not to have this very able and efficient element mustered into the service of the United States. The Senator from Virginia seemed to think that it was very desirable that the intelligent white young men of this country should be butchered off in detail upon the battle-field rather than to have the colored men of the country take any part in this conflict. I disagree entirely with that honorable Senator.

Mr. CARLILE. Will the Senator allow me to correct him? The Senator certainly misunderstood me. I understand that the law now authorizes the employment of negroes in the Army. What I object to and what I expect to object to is to relieving the white population of certain States from furnishing their quota to the Army by authorizing them to employ negro troops, not that I desire them to be slaughtered. I think I sympathize as much with every soldier killed in battle as the Senator from Minnesota; but I do not think we shall strengthen our Army or save the lives of our white soldiers by sustaining them alone with negro troops. If I am wrong in this it is an error of judgment.

Mr. WILKINSON. We do not expect to sustain the war alone with negro troops, but I suppose that every negro who enters into the service takes the place of one white man, or at least every three negroes will take the place of two white men. I am, therefore, willing to waive my own personal feelings in this matter and go for the proposition of the Senator from California.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Hicks, Howard, Johnson, Nesmith, Richardson, Sprague, Ten Eyck, and Wright—14.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question now recurs on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I am convinced in my own mind that if the second committee of conference had been accorded by the Senate as asked by the Senator from Ohio, it would result simply in expunging from the bill the feature that authorized the Governors of certain States to send their emissaries into certain rebel States for the purpose of enlisting negroes to be substituted in place of their own white population. I have no idea that the House of Representatives would have jeopardized this bill on that issue, and I believe that another committee of conference organized by the order of the two Houses would at once be able to agree on that simple modification in the measure, so that in that shape it might readily be passed. We have been told again and again, especially by gentlemen from the North, and from Massachusetts particularly, that every negro owes his fealty to the Government of the United States as much so as a white man. If that principle be true, let it be faithfully and honestly executed; enlist the negro or recruit him to fill his own place, and recruit the white man to fill his place, so as to execute harmoniously the new principles in relation to this matter that the present war has brought on.

I have understood, at least it has been proclaimed a thousand times, that Massachusetts is opposed to the slave trade, that all of the North is opposed to the slave trade; they are opposed to reopening the trade in Africans. Well, what is this but reopening the trade in Africans in another form? The whole fact is that Massachusetts and the New England States, where there is a large accumulation of money and capital and where heavy bounties can be offered for substitutes, want to shield their own white population from the storm of battle and just go into the southern rebel States and buy negroes, the blood and bones and life of negroes, to place them in the front of battle in order to keep the white men of the New England States from being exposed to such danger. The measure as it passed the Senate and went to the House of Representatives authorized the President of the United States to send recruiting officers into the southern rebel States to recruit negroes on account of the United States at large.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is mistaken in that.

Mr. DAVIS. If I am mistaken, the Senator will correct me.

Mr. WILSON. Many other Senators are mistaken on some points of the bill. That was a vote passed here and sent down to the other House, but it was found there was a mistake in it. It was sent for and brought back, and then Mr. GRIMES moved a bill, which was the first section of the original bill reported by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] with the third section put on by Judge COLLAMER, and that was all there was before the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. If the second committee of conference asked for by the Senator from Ohio had been granted, I have no doubt that feature would be introduced into the report of the second committee of conference. That feature would be just and reasonable on the principles which the majority of the Senate have assumed and laid down. With that feature added to this bill by the report of a second committee of conference, the President of the United States would send his recruiting officers; he would select those recruiting officers from Massachusetts, if you please, and I reckon none would have been more vigilant or more active or more successful in the work of recruiting negroes in the rebel States. He would send these active, effective, energetic New England recruiting officers into the rebel States to recruit negroes at large, and those negroes when recruited would be credited upon the account of the United States at large and not of any particular State, and that ought to be the case.

If the rebel States are to be gone into for the purpose of raising a military force to fill up our armies, that military force ought not to be credited to Massachusetts nor Maine nor any other State whatever. It of right, and according to the principle of obedience and loyalty to the Government, ought to be credited to the rebel State from whence they were recruited; but that not being done, the next most obviously just principle certainly is to give the benefit of these recruited negroes in the rebel States to the United States generally.

Mr. SHERMAN. I appeal to my friend from Kentucky to allow the time to be extended a while so that we may have this vote before the recess takes place. Let us extend it, say, until fifteen minutes before five. I move that the period for the recess be extended.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had better reconsider the vote for a recess, and sit right on. That will be best.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to reconsider the motion ordering a recess.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I protest against this feature in the bill and upon just and sufficient consideration. I maintain that the northern white man should not be allowed to go into the rebel States and recruit a negro and make that negro his substitute in the Army of the United States. If the negro owes fealty to the United States Government and is bound to render all of his service to sustain and support that Government, let him do it on his own account; regard him as a man from whom allegiance and service to his Government are due; do not treat him as a freedman or as a quasi slave, and permit northern white freemen to go into the rebel States and there recruit negroes to exempt them from the same military service rendered by white men in the northwestern States and the other States who are not able to pay the bounties necessary to obtain such substitutes.

I hope, Mr. President, that this report of the committee of conference will not be accepted, that it will be rejected, and that another committee of conference will be raised, and if that other committee of conference shall not agree in expunging this feature from the bill that is certainly objectionable to a majority of the Senate, it will then be time enough for the Senate to sacrifice the principle in the bill for which it has so long and so persistently contended.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not propose to debate this bill at any length; but I want to say a word in reply to a suggestion that has been made so often that I do not know but that somebody by and by will get to believe it is true; and that is that the New England States are desirous of shielding their men in this war, and want the report of the committee of conference to be agreed to in order that they may go into the rebel States and procure negroes to fight their battles for them.

Mr. DAVIS. My honorable friend will allow me to say that I did not intend to make any intimation of that kind in relation to any other State than Massachusetts. I think that that State by their representatives on this floor have evinced beyond all question that that is their purpose in which they are persevering so strenuously.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course I do not speak for the State of Massachusetts when she has two gentlemen here so much more competent than I am to speak for her; but the honorable Senator's phraseology he will allow me to say was a little unfortunate, for he used over and over again the term "the New England States."

Mr. WILSON. With the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, I will simply say what I have said before, that we believe it would weaken the enemy to enlist the loyal white men and the black men in the rebel States and put them into the armies of the United States, and we can enlist through State agency ten men or one hundred men where the Government of the United States in the ordinary course can enlist one. I have no disposition to shield the people of Massachusetts from their full share in the duties of this war; and for the Army and for the Navy no State has sent more men, unless perhaps one or two of the western States, and not more than two or three of them to the utmost extent, taking both Army and Navy together; and in the field what States have suffered more? Of thirty-three regiments in the army of the Potomac engaged in the recent battles, twenty-three have lost their commanders and more than half their men. Five new regiments passed through here the other day, four in General Burnside's corps and one regiment of sixteen hundred men of heavy artillery who have gone into action, and they have lost more than two thirds of the men they carried into those actions, and a very large share of their officers.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator from Connecticut permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. It is whether the same agents in this business of recruiting negroes in the South would not be as active and successful in the service of the United States as they would be in the service of Massachusetts?

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that some of these very men and the first troops raised in the rebel States we raised in the first place by raising $60,000 in Massachusetts and sending Major Stearns into the rebel States to organize them; and for these men Massachusetts has never got any credit, but our people did it in order to begin the work that they believe will break down this rebellion. I will say further in regard to it that while men will contribute money, of course they will do it more for themselves. I do not say that we are unselfish about it, but I say the great motive is to get men to break down the rebellion.

Mr. FOSTER. After the explanation of the Senator from Kentucky, my remarks will be shorter even than I intended them to be at first, and I intended them to be very short. I wish to say, however, that so far as the feeling of the State of Connecticut is concerned in this matter, I think she agrees most heartily in the policy of going into these States for the purpose of recruiting the Army. She does not do it with any view to herself personally, for it so happens that she has furnished so many men more than have been called for, that if there be now an additional call of three hundred thousand men, she will not be called upon to furnish over two hundred, if she will indeed so many. I believe on a full adjustment of the men furnished from the State three hundred thousand men may be called and we shall not be asked to furnish a single man. We are in advance to such an extent that such a force may be called for and we have our men in the field, so that Connecticut certainly is not claiming that this policy be pursued out of any regard to her own citizens personally. She has put in the field and has in the field nearly if not quite four thousand more than have been called for from her.

One word only in regard to the policy. It is said, the honorable Senator from Indiana said, that the evil was illustrated by what occurred at a former stage of the war when different States in the Union were authorized to procure arms and the United States would pay the States who thus procured them, making of course competition in the market for arms and raising the price, and the consequence here he thought would be the same; by going into these States seeking recruits, different States offering different bounties, competition would raise the price so that there would be large amounts of money expended, and the rich States, as he seemed to indicate, would get the men and the poorer States would not. I submit to him that if that policy in regard to arms could be tried in the rebel forces to-day, it would be excellent policy, and the honorable Senator from Indiana would say so. Suppose we could get into General Robert E. Lee's army to-day and purchase arms, would it not by all means be well, even although we paid two or three prices for them? If we could disarm the soldiers of that army by purchasing those arms would it be worth while to higgie about the price? If the different States could go there and get them, would not the United States pay the expenses and pay the bills, although by sending different States we made the competition great and made the prices high? Should we not weaken and disband the army of the enemy if we succeeded in the measure? Clearly we should.

The same thing will occur now if we go into the rebel States and take able-bodied men out of those States. It is true we do not take them directly from the rebel army, but we take them under such circumstances that we weaken the enemy almost as much as though we took the men directly out of the rebel service. We take the men who are engaged in raising the bread and meat which supply that army; and if we take away those men we take away the foundation on which this rebellion rests. If the men who are now engaged in procuring the food, the provisions, for the army maintained by the rebels now in the field are taken away, we destroy that army almost as entirely as though we took the muskets out of their hands, their artillery, their swords, their bayonets, all from them. We take their lives when we take the means whereby they live. This policy does it; and although Yankees are charged generally with being somewhat greedy, and looking to make a good bargain, I, a thoroughbred Yankee and proud of my origin, am not disposed very much to stand on the price it may cost us to put soldiers in the field when we take the men who are themselves the life-blood of this rebellion. I am willing to pay large bounties. Why? These men, the honorable Senator says, are not equal to intelligent white men. Grant it; but when we take a man from the rebel ranks, although he may not be equal to one of ours, we take from the enemy one at the same time. If he be equal to ourselves, we get two men. For every one man that is thus obtained we get two by a law of mathematics. For every man half equal to an intelligent white man we get a full man, as counted against the rebels.

Under these circumstances I think it is policy to send all the loyal States and all the agents of those States into these rebel States and deplete them if possible, get every man that can be got, and pay the highest bounties that will tempt the men to go. We can scarcely lay out our money better. I trust, Mr. President, we shall accede to the report of the committee of conference, and that we shall have no further trouble on this question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There would be force in the argument of the Senator who has just taken his seat were it not for one difficulty, that we cannot go within the lines of the enemy to recruit. If Massachusetts or the Senator's own State sends agents down to North Carolina or South Carolina or any other State in insurrection, they will have to stop in their operations within the territory which is occupied by the Union army; and the negroes that are employed within that scope of country, if employed in industrial pursuits under the present policy of the Treasury Department, if it amounts to a policy at all, are engaged in supplying the Union Army instead of the rebel army. It is the negroes within the rebel lines that feed the rebel army; and if the Treasury Department policy rises to the dignity of a policy at all, as I have said, the negroes employed by the Union men within the Union lines are employed to feed the Union Army. Now the Senator's argument stops just at the line dividing the two forces. If he could carry his agents as he carries his argument, beyond that line, there would be force in it; but inasmuch as he cannot go within the enemy's lines where the negroes are employed in raising products to feed the rebel army, the argument falls short of convincing any person, I should think.

Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this measure. It is not a measure to strengthen the Army. It is a measure to allow certain favored States, (which in the House of Representatives will not allow the bill to pass, and which say to the Senate it shall not pass except they are heard according to their particular wish,) instead of furnishing white soldiers, to furnish negro mercenaries to fill up their places in the Army, mercenaries that for a year, according to the admission in debate of the Senator from Massachusetts, will not be valuable to the public service. When a man is enrolled in Massachusetts he is allowed under the provisions of this bill to stay at home to make his profits in contracts and manufacturing pursuits, and in his stead the agent of his State goes to North Carolina or South Carolina and brings a negro and hands him over to General Grant, and General Grant can make no use of him. Can he place that negro alongside of a veteran? He cannot do it without producing revolution in General Grant's army, I undertake to say. You may force the negroes into the cars in the District of Columbia, into personal and social equality with white men; but there is one thing you cannot do, if I properly appreciate the courage, gallantry, and valor of the white race that now compose the Army: you cannot place the negro in the same tent to sleep and eat with the white soldier; you cannot place him alongside the white soldier in the regiments without a revolution in your Army. Is the Senator from Connecticut willing to risk it? Is he willing to risk taking the raw recruit from a South Carolina plantation with his peculiar habits as a slave? Is he willing to risk a revolution in the Army by placing these negro recruits in veteran regiments? It cannot be done; but you can bring the white soldier from Connecticut and put him alongside the white soldier in the Army, and the next day that white soldier is equal to a veteran and is valuable to General Grant.

This is not a proposition to strengthen the Army; it is a proposition to weaken the Army and to make a very large portion of the force unavailable to the generals that are now in the field. You say that for a year the white men of Connecticut and Massachusetts may remain at home if they will only supply to the army of General Grant a negro. You take a valuable man from the service, a man that you have all said owed service to the country, a man that ought not to be allowed to pay money, but you allow him to pay a negro. With $300, as experience has shown, you can procure a volunteer for a year; you can have a white man; but this policy is, instead of allowing the white men of the North to pay their money which up to this time has furnished volunteers, they shall pay the negroes in their stead and hand them over, though they are not valuable to the service, not strengthening General Grant in his campaign against Richmond. Is this not plain? What Senator can question it? I think the eastern States, and I call upon Senators to witness that I have not made sectional arguments on this question, have had advantages enough already. They had the commutation when they were drafted, and each $300 under this bill, as I understand it, will stand as part of their quota up to this time. When $300 have been paid in the eastern States where the draft has been enforced that stands as the discharge of a man; but in Indiana and the western States where the draft has not been enforced, where it was not needed to be enforced, where men came up and volunteered, you require that the men shall respond, and how? Do you say that we have an equal privilege in going down the river and securing negroes to pay the commutation with the negro instead of $300? I say no, for your bill excludes Tennessee; it excludes Arkansas; it excludes Louisiana, and leaves us alone the northern portion of Alabama, and where are we to go? When the young farmer of Indiana is drafted where is he to go for his negro? It is very easy for Massachusetts to send down the coast and land in North or South Carolina or in the occupied portions of Florida, if there be any now occupied, and there to buy up negroes and come up to General Grant and tell him, "We pay you for our white men with these negroes; use them."

I say this bill is not right, and it is not as efficient for the Government as the old law. The old law brings men or it brings money. If it brings money that brings a volunteer. As the Secretary said in his report to Congress last winter, the commutation money had been used to procure volunteers. Now I ask Senators how they can say that we oppose the Government. I oppose paying a commutation in negroes if we are not allowed in the Northwest to pay a commutation in money. The right policy is, as I believe, to encourage volunteering, and the last policy is to pay off in a negro instead of money or instead of a soldier.

Mr. President, I am not responsible for this measure, nor is the Senate. The Senate said the other day by a very large vote that this was not right. What new argument has shown that it is right? What statement of facts not known to the Senate before has convinced us that it is right? By three votes to one the Senate the other day said they would not sanction such a proposition; and now the Senator from Massachusetts tells the Senate that the bill is lost, and why? Because Massachusetts in the House of Representatives will not vote for it; because Massachusetts in the House of Representatives says, "We will pay off for our white men in negroes, or the bill shall not pass," and Senators turn around against their judgment and yield to the dictation of the other House under such circumstances. For one, I do not propose to do it. If the other House chooses to defeat the bill, if Massachusetts in the other House chooses to defeat it, let her take the responsibility. I do not think there is any public loss in its defeat; I do not think the Army will be weakened by it; I do not look for the filling up of the Army under this bill; but I look for fun when Massachusetts agents get up from South Carolina with their field hands and bring them to General Grant in new regiments already organized and tell him to take Richmond with those regiments.

Senators know that he cannot use them efficiently. They know, and it is admitted by the chairman, who is very conversant with this subject, that even white men for the first months of their enlistment are not valuable; they do not know how to fight; they do not know how to take care of themselves in war. They are good to make a charge. Everybody says they are desperate in a charge; but in the deliberate and long fight, and in the strategic movements that are necessary, they are not the valuable soldiers that the veterans are. But on the other hand let these agents bring their field hands up from South Carolina and hand them not organized into regiments over to General Grant and tell him to incorporate them into the old regiments; it would be an interesting spectacle about that period of time. It cannot be done. This bill is not right. If Senators choose they may pass it, and get down before the other House, for the chairman of the committee says it must be so, because the House will not agree to what the Senate thinks is right. Be it so. It is an affirmative proposition. It is commutation in negroes. The Senate says, "No commutation in money," and the House says, "We will agree to that, but we will have commutation in negroes."

Mr. CONNESS. That is a gain.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not a bit of gain. You leave a valuable man in Massachusetts who could be placed in a veteran regiment and is equal to a veteran, and you bring a man into the field in his stead that is not his equal or half his equal, as the Senator must know. If you organize them in new regiments you know they are not valuable, and you cannot put them in with the veterans, as the Senator said the other day in debate was the useful mode of incorporating new men. That is what was the purpose, he said, of an early draft, not for the new regiments but to fill up the old ones. That is what he wants. He says they are skeletons now, and he wants to put flesh upon the skeleton, but how? Not by black flesh. You cannot do it. You will disorganize, you will disrupt the Army by the policy. It cannot be done. It is not right, in my judgment.

Mr. WILSON. I wish simply to say to the Senator from Indiana that Massachusetts has three regiments of colored men in the field besides a brigade raised through the money and influence of Massachusetts for which she never had any credit whatever, and which were never counted to her quota. I hardly think Massachusetts will raise enough men in all the rebel States to keep full the three regiments of colored troops she has raised and the veteran troops now in the field. She will hardly raise enough in Carolina and in Florida to fill up the ranks of the fifty-fourth regiment that has been decimated in those States. It is proposed to put the men raised there in the old regiments, but I have not an idea that she can raise one man in twenty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator if under this bill Massachusetts will not be entitled to that credit. Is not the bill so framed as to give her that credit?

Mr. WILSON. For the men that she raises now.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Has the Senator from Indiana forgotten that when under the old bill $300 commutation is paid the Government can take that $300, and pay colored soldiers? It is no change in the principle at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Willey—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, and Willey—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Grimes, Harding, Hicks, Howard, Johnson, Nesmith, Richardson, Sprague, Ten Eyck, and Wright—14.

So the report was concurred in.

PASSENGERS ON STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up House bill No. 244.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe there is a pending question which was passed over by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from California to take up House bill No. 510, upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I think I can withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and the Senate will take up the bill now. It will save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call may be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 510) further to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senator from California, I wish to move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. CONNESS. This will not take long.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no desire to detain the Senate in connection with this bill; but I have a letter from our consul at Aspinwall on the subject which I will ask to have read.

Several SENATORS. No. Let us pass the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senate is disposed to pass the bill without having anything read, I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up House bill No. 244.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take a recess until seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order while another motion is pending, except by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WADE. I object.

The motion of Mr. WADE was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the bill of the House.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will ask the Senator from Ohio to allow us to move now that we take a recess, and come back at half past seven. I move that we take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is now past five o'clock, and I think it would be better that we should take a recess and have an hour or so of interval.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from California that that motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent, and consent being refused it is not debatable.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am aware of it, but I make the suggestion to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the motion that the Senate take a recess?

Mr. SUMNER, and Mr. LANE of Kansas, objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be debated.

Mr. POMEROY. Is the bill of the Senator from Ohio up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. POMEROY. Then by unanimous consent we can take up the concurrent resolution and agree to adjourn to-night at some time. ["No, no."] There is objection made. Then we will take this vote first.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. So soon as this bill is concurred in I propose to move an adjournment resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to suspend prior orders and that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock. ["Seven."] I will say seven o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 14, nays 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill before the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Willey—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Hicks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Willey, and Wright—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I now move to take up the concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives on the subject of the final adjournment.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. I do not think the time has come to decide that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it has.

Mr. HENDERSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The concurrent resolution which the Senator from Kansas calls up proposes to adjourn on Monday at twelve o'clock. I do not know of anything that we cannot dispose of in that time. We have the evening before us. Nearly all the important bills of the session are either disposed of or in committees of conference, and it is necessary to fix a future time for adjournment in order to allow the clerks to enroll the bill. I will state that all the appropriation bills are passed; the enrollment bill is now passed so far as the Senate is concerned; and if the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference that will be disposed of. There is no bill that I am aware of of any very great importance yet to be acted upon, unless it may be probably one or two bills that may come from the House of Representatives that we can dispose of to-night. I see no reason why we may not fix the hour of adjournment at noon on Monday.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Davis, Foster, Hale, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Willey—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Harlan, Harris, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Harding, Hicks, Howard, Grimes, Johnson, Nesmith, Richardson, and Wright—12.

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses for the present session on Thursday, the 30th instant, at twelve o'clock meridian.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. At the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until nine o'clock to-night, and be made the special order for that hour.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Allow me to ask a question, being somewhat ignorant about these things, and yet thinking I have some knowledge. That resolution has been exhausted and is not the subject of action, as Thursday the 30th of June has passed.

Mr. POMEROY. It can be changed to Monday.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I say it is not the subject of amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can put in a day that has not passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe in a motion of this kind the question first in order is on the longest time named. I will therefore move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will first be put on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 6th ultimo, a report from the Secretary of State upon the subject of the African slave trade, with accompanying papers; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

The bill from the House of Representatives (No. 573) making an appropriation to carry into effect an act to prevent smuggling was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the consent of the Senate to put that bill on its passage. It only makes a small appropriation.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates the sum of $15,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect an act entitled "An act to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," passed at the present session of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR N. S. BRENTON.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (No. 328) for the relief of Major N. S. Brenton, a paymaster in the United States Army, which was to add at the end of the bill the following:

If on examining the evidence by the Paymaster General, he, the said Paymaster General, shall deem him justly entitled to said credit, but such credit shall not be allowed without the said Paymaster General shall certify his approval thereof.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho, which was to add at the end of section three the following words, "whenever so directed by the sender thereof;" so that the section will read:

And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid company is authorized by this act to send and receive dispatches on payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches over any line that may now or hereafter be constructed by the authority or aid of Congress, to connect with any line or lines authorized or erected by the Russian or English Government, and that all dispatches received by said line or lines shall be transmitted in the order of their reception, and the answers thereto shall be delivered to said United States Telegraph Company for transmission over their lines to the office whence the original message was sent whenever so directed by the sender thereof.

The amendment was concurred in.

PROFESSORS OF WEST POINT ACADEMY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 58) in relation to the professors of the Military Academy at West Point; which was, after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-three" to insert the words "or the eleventh section of an act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes;" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, &c., That the thirty-first section of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, or the eleventh section of "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes," shall not be construed to abridge the privileges usually allowed to the professors of the Military Academy of being absent during the suspension of the ordinary academic studies in that institution.

The amendment was concurred in.

CAPTAIN DANIEL HEBARD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard of the United States volunteers; which was to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And that the like principle of allowance and payment be observed in the settlement of the accounts of Major William M. Esty, Captain Maxwell, and V. Z. Woodruff, aids-de-camp on the staff of Major General Robert C. Schenck, from December 22, 1862, when they entered upon their duties on the staff of the commanding general of the Middle department and eighth Army corps, until the date when they respectively received and accepted their commissions as aids-de-camp, deducting only from the pay and allowance of Major Esty what he received in any part of that time as a lieutenant of the twenty-sixth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry.

Amend the title by adding the words, "and of other officers."

The amendment was concurred in.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (No. 151) relating to enlistments, and for other purposes; and,

On motion of Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

HORACE GATES.

Mr. FOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Horace Gates, to report it back without amendment and with the recommendation that it pass; and I ask for its present consideration. It is a bill from the House of Representatives granting a small pension to an aged invalid.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Horace Gates, of Franklin, in the State of Vermont, upon the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1862, and continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACADEMY OF LITERATURE AND ART.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a little bill which does not concern politics, or money, or slavery, and will take only a minute, which I ask the Senate to take up. It is Senate bill No. 341.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 341) to incorporate the National Academy of Literature and Art, and also to incorporate the National Academy of Moral and Political Sciences.

The bill proposes to declare S. Austin Allibone, Pennsylvania; William C. Bryant, New York; Frederick E. Church, New York; George W. Curtis, New York; Richard H. Dana, Massachusetts; John S. Marsh, Vermont; Hiram Powers, Ohio; William W. Story, Massachusetts; George Ticknor, Massachusetts; Henry T. Tuckerman, New York; Gulian C. Verplanck, New York; William D. Whitney, Connecticut; John G. Whittier, Massachusetts; Joseph E. Worcester, Massachusetts, their associates and successors duly chosen, to be a body corporate for the study and cultivation of the ancient and modern languages, letters, and the fine arts, by the name of the National Academy of Literature and Art.

It also proposes to declare George Bancroft, New York; Henry Ward Beecher, New York; Horace Binney, Pennsylvania; Robert J. Breckinridge, Kentucky; Edward Everett, Massachusetts; Thomas Ewing, Ohio; Henry W. Halleck,

Army of the United States, California; Samuel G. Howe, Massachusetts; Charles King, New York; Francis Lieber, New York; J. Lothrop Motley, Massachusetts; John G. Palfrey, Massachusetts; Wendell Phillips, Massachusetts; Alonzo Potter, Pennsylvania; Josiah Quincy, Massachusetts; Henry B. Smith, New York; Jared Sparks, Massachusetts; Robert J. Each of these national academies is to consist of not more than fifty ordinary members, of whom not more than ten are to be elected in any one year. Nominations are to be made and elections held at the regular annual meeting only, and no nomination for any kind of membership is to be acted upon until it shall have been before the academy for one year, and shall have been considered by a committee.

Each of these national academies is to have power to make its own organization, including its constitution, by-laws, and rules and regulations; to fill all vacancies created by death, resignation, or otherwise; to provide for the election of foreign and domestic members, what number shall be a quorum, the division into classes, and all other matters needful or usual in such institutions, and to report the same to Congress.

Each of these national academies is to hold an annual meeting at such place in the United States as may be designated, and whenever requested by any department of the Government is to investigate, examine, and report upon any subject within their respective provinces, it being understood that the actual expenses, if any, are to be paid from appropriations which may be made for the purpose, but the academies are to receive no compensation whatever for any services to the Government of the United States.

Mr. McDougall. A gentleman, an Englishman, established the foundation for an institution that was national in its character, and has been, and I trust for a long period of time will continue to be, of great value to our country; but I do not think it is the office of the Federal Government to establish the foundations of any of these societies. We have been at work here very industriously in aggregating to the Federal authority powers that properly belong to the States themselves, and powers not conferred upon the Federal Government either by the express terms of the Constitution or by any implication.

I should be glad to see established in this country that same system of academic institutions that now exists in France. I am to some extent an admirer of their academical arrangement, to as great an extent probably as the Senator from Massachusetts; but it is not within the limit of our power as Senators, Representatives, and President; it is an authority not conferred upon us by the Constitution of the United States. There is an intense tendency to accumulate power about the central Government, and I hold it to be my duty to resist that tendency for the public health. There is none who would be more pleased than myself to see such institutions established among us. The names recited in the proposed act of incorporation are names familiar to my ear, and I am aware that they are men who would do excellent service and reflect honor upon their respective departments, and be known well throughout the Republic and known abroad.

But, sir, that is not the question. We have not the pretense of the right to do this thing. The limit of our power to incorporate—and I have always made this distinction—is in and about the business of the Federal Government in the maintenance of the offices that belong to the Federal Government, and the incorporation of academical institutions for the promotion of art and science is foreign to those offices. I trust I take as earnest an interest in their promotion as does the gentleman who now proposes to take up this bill; I take as deep an interest as he in everything that belongs to the progress of civilization; but those things have to be done according to some form of rule or law, and by virtue of some competent authority. It does not exist in the Federal Government; and there is no one who has studied the Constitution of the Republic, and read the lessons of its commentators, and has heard the law as it has been expounded from the most conservative to the most latitudinarian that can justify legislation of this kind. If this can be done, if this legislation can be justified by the text of the Constitution or by its fair construction, we may embrace within the power of the concentrated Government all the powers now being exercised by the several States themselves; we can aggregate all their powers; we make a perfectly centralized Government, and lose all the force and vitality that may be expressed on my coast by my people in disposing of their institutions and home regulations advancing the progress of learning there—things that call out the force and action of the people upon subjects in which they are immediately concerned. We have established colleges, we have established universities, we have established academies of science on the coast of the Pacific. This attempt at aggregating all power in the General Government tends to destroy the positive exercise of the power of local institutions. That was a thing well known to our fathers when they framed our institutions and when they subdivided us into States and conferred upon the Federal Government only the powers granted by the Constitution, preserving other powers to the States themselves.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator from California will yield for a moment, I wish to ask the courtesy of the Senate to take up a bill which has come from the House of Representatives in relation to certain half-breeds of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, which we can dispose of without discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we shall dispose of this bill. I will only make one remark upon it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state to my honorable friend from Massachusetts that the bill to which I refer has come from the House of Representatives, and unless it is passed immediately these half-breeds may be crowded out of their lands.

Mr. SUMNER. I sympathize with the Senator, but let us act upon this question first. I will only make one word of reply.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It will create discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. I will only make one word of reply, which I hope will be satisfactory.

Mr. McDougall. I believe I am entitled to the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin temporarily for a moment.

Mr. President, these great questions of immense magnitude seem like trifling things to many, and Senators, Representatives, and citizens have almost forgotten to consider the weight and gravity of the principles involved in propositions like this. It may be true on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts that he has considered these things and proposes to aggregate in the central Government all the powers of Government, and he undertakes to present this and other contentious things as a policy, so as to wipe out the lines of the States and make one grand empire. That may be his policy. I have seen it indicated from various quarters. It is revolutionary. It is a trampling down upon the organic law that lies at the foundation of the Government. It is the establishment of a new policy foreign to our fundamental law.

Now, sir, while I would go as far as he who would go furthest to promote the objects the Senator proposes with the names that he presents, I say I have not the right to promote such a corporation; he has not the right to promote such a corporation; and if it received the form of law by the assent of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the sign-manual of the President, it would be no law, for the reason that it would not be consistent with the fundamental law under which we have undertaken to live, and which we have sworn to support.

Mr. SUMNER. The answer is very simple. I have in my hand the Statutes at Large containing what was done by the last Congress. Here is "An act to incorporate the National Academy of Sciences," approved March 3, 1863, setting forth the names of eminent, not to say illustrious men of science in our country, and constituting those gentlemen as an Academy of Sciences. It will be remembered by Senators that that very Academy during this winter met in this building; that one or more of our committee-rooms were set apart for them; and I know there were many Senators and gentlemen of the other House who took a great interest in their meetings. This Academy is devoted to the cultivation of the sciences properly so called.

Mr. McDougall. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. McDougall. There may be some questions about which the Senator and myself may not understand each other exactly. Of course we have the right to incorporate an institution in the District of Columbia that is local to the District by virtue of our general powers of legislation over it, but that is not within the sphere of this legislation as I understand.

Mr. SUMNER. The act of Congress to which I have referred is general in its terms; it is not limited to the District; it is a national act to create a National Academy; and the bill now before the Senate simply proposes to apply the same principle to gentlemen engaged in the cultivation of literature and art, and also to gentlemen engaged in the cultivation of history and those sciences which are connected with morals and government. In selecting those names I have followed mainly the usage of France, which is the country which has most excelled in academies of this kind. I believe the precedent to which I have referred is sufficient. I do not think there can be any constitutional objection, and I am sure that the association if once organized would give opportunities of activity and of influence which would be important to the literature of the country. I hope there will be no question about it.

Mr. HALE. I think, at this stage of the session—and I am sorry to make the remarks I do—it is a little too late to be engaged in making a close corporation of mutual admirers—and it seems to me this bill is nothing more nor less—while there are bills that relate to the public service that demand the attention of Congress. I hold in my hand a bill about which the Naval Committee have been besought by the Secretary of the Navy. He informs us that at this moment our Navy, which now must consist in a great degree of engineers and gunners, for those are the men that manage your steam vessels of war, is in such a situation that the engineers are sending in their resignations in great numbers, and that they hold them there by mere force, and he asks for some relief to that corps. The Committee on Naval Affairs have reported a bill, and they think it is due to the subject, to the Senate, and to the country that they should lay it before the Senate, and the Senate can act their pleasure upon it. I move to postpone this and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 534, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUMNER. This bill that I have presented, as I have said, is one which simply concerns the literature, art, and science of the country. It has nothing to do with politics or slavery; and I should like to make a personal request—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is no chance of its passing the House of Representatives. What then is the use of taking up time with it here?

Mr. SUMNER. The other act passed the Senate under precisely the same circumstances.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. JOHNSON. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) It is, to a limited extent. On a question of the order of business the merits of the question are not open for discussion; but the reasons, briefly assigned, why the one measure should be postponed and the other preferred are in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make an appeal to my friend from New Hampshire to allow me to introduce a bill. I shall vote for the postponement of the measure now before the Senate in order to enable me to introduce a bill to provide for an appropriation for the Washington aqueduct which by mistake or misapprehension between the two branches failed. It is absolutely necessary that the bill should be presented and considered at once in order that it may go to the House of Representatives. It is agreed to, I believe, on all hands. The chairman of the committee of conference on the civil appropriation bill, which contained this provision, tells me that it was not the design of the committee that the appropriation should fail; but as a matter of fact it has failed, and there is no appropriation either for repairs or to pay up the deficiencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will allow me to take up this bill.

Mr. HALE. Let this come up first.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Maine can take up his bill after this is disposed of. I desire to say that I have had frequent communications with the Department upon the absolute necessity of an increase of the pay of the engineers. I am informed by the Navy Department that a very large portion of the engineers now in the service are held there by force, because the Department has refused to accept their resignations. Their services are in so much demand without the Navy that they are constantly resigning; and their pay now is less, considerably less, than that of the mechanics who work on the engines in the vessels.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present order is postponed; and the bill indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire is before the Senate.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

Mr. MORRILL. I now appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire, as that is a House bill and when passed here will be disposed of, to allow me to present this bill for the consideration of the Senate at the present time. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let us go on with the bill before us. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill without previous notice.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 348) to provide for the supervision, repairs, liabilities, and completion of the Washington aqueduct; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $150,000 for the purpose of constructing the dam of solid masonry across the Maryland branch of the Potomac river near the Great Falls, and for constructing the conduit around the receiving reservoir and for paying existing liabilities and expenses for engineering, superintendence, and repairs of the work.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARMACK AND RAMSEY.

Mr. WADE. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey, to report that the committee having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree; and further that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution. I am further directed to move the indefinite postponement of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question will be on concurring in the report of the committee of conference, which proposes to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject.

The report was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio now moves the indefinite postponement of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator agree simply to postpone it to the next session of Congress?

Mr. WADE. Oh, no; let it be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask leave to offer a joint resolution of which no previous notice has been given, which will lead to no debate, and which, I think, will meet the unanimous assent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are now two questions undisposed of: one is the bill which was taken up on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and the other is the motion of the Senator from Ohio to indefinitely postpone the subject connected with the report just made. It would accumulate questions very inconveniently to have any more subjects introduced until these are disposed of. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the subject alluded to by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to say a word on that subject. This resolution was examined before a committee of which I am a member early in the session. It passed when I was absent from the Senate. It has now been to one committee of conference, but my idea is that it should go to another committee, and that some compromise should be made between the two Houses on the subject-matter to which the resolution relates. It is an old case, and one of some difficulty, involving a very considerable amount of money. I apprehend that another committee of conference might be more fortunate than the one that has already had this subject in charge, and might adjust the differences between the two Houses upon this subject. If the motion to indefinitely postpone this subject should not prevail, I will move the appointment of another committee, in the hope that upon an additional meeting some agreement can be come to.

Mr. WADE. The committee, after conferring together a long time, came to the conclusion that there was no hope of any agreement on the subject; and the committee of the Senate instructed me to move its indefinite postponement. It is a private claim; and it was the opinion of the committee that that would be the best way to dispose of it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This claim involves about $100,000. As the gentleman says, it is a private claim, but it is one of a very unusual magnitude, and I think before it is decided—because the postponement decides it—it should be considered by another committee of conference. I am content with my point of view that there should be an adjustment or compromise of the question between the two Houses, and I think it ought to be attempted in all reason and fairness. I hope the motion to postpone indefinitely will not prevail, and that another committee will be appointed and a reasonable effort made to adjust the difficulty between the two Houses. If that should fail it will then be time enough to postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. POMEROY. This resolution has been before this body for years. It has been before a committee of which I am a member for a long time, I know. I do not believe we shall ever get to any agreement about it. I have never seen any two men that could agree about it. I believe the committee of which I was a member agreed upon $25,000, but there have been reports made upon this claim all the way up from $25,000 to $40,000, $80,000, and $120,000, and all sorts of amounts have been awarded at different times by different committees to these parties. I do not believe any committee can ever agree about it. I never saw a committee that could agree upon it. I think we might as well dispose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is on the indefinite postponement of the joint resolution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am reluctant to add any observations upon this bill, especially at this time of night, but it merits more attention than it is receiving. I shall make no allusion to the early history of this claim, nor to its position before a former Comptroller of the Treasury. It is unnecessary to enter upon that debate. I take the case in its more recent aspects; for, sir, the Postmaster General of the United States, being clearly persuaded that the Government ought not to pay this demand, obtained the taking of a mass of evidence in New York, which I have examined, and from the examination of which I am convinced, thoroughly convinced, profoundly convinced, that in the Court of Claims, to which it is proposed by the resolution of the House of Representatives that this subject shall be referred, the claim would not be allowed, would be rejected. There being, in my opinion, no legal obligation, I am agreed that the question between the two Houses shall be compromised, and that a sum shall be allowed to these parties, and a liberal allowance; but I am adverse, after the examination I have made, to the allowance of this large amount. I think it is excessive and inordinate.

In the month of January, 1853, certain capitalists in the city of New York organized themselves into a company under the name of the Mexican Ocean and Inland Company. The next month two of their officers obtained this contract from the Post Office Department, subject to the ratification of Congress, for carrying the mail across Mexico. Immediately after the contract was made it was assigned to the corporation by the person who made it. It was held by that company. The summer following that corporation, through its president, notified the Postmaster General that they would proceed to provide themselves with the necessary animals and conveyances for carrying the mail and for executing the agreement. The Postmaster General wrote to them that he was opposed to the contract. In December following, when Congress met, the Postmaster General recommended to the two Houses that the contract ought not to be confirmed, and it was not, and never has been.

The evidence taken in the city of New York proves at the instance of the Postmaster General recently most conclusively that every dollar of outlay for which this claim is presented was made by the corporation to which I have alluded, and not one dollar of it by these claimants. That corporation subsequently became insolvent, and its affairs went into the hands of a receiver. If the Government recognizes this claim it is of course to be paid to the corporation that has the legal and the real interest, or rather it ought to go through the course of settlement of the affairs of that corporation and eventually reach its creditors.

These parties, then, having no real interest, not having expended, as the proof shows, one dollar of their own money, propose going before the Comptroller, and under the reading of a former law, obtain an award for the sum of $100,000 or something like that. I am opposed to that. In my opinion, they are not entitled in point of law to a single dollar.

There was another feature in this case. By the records of this corporation it was shown that at one time they appropriated twenty thousand shares of stock for the purpose of procuring legislation in Congress; at another time fifteen thousand shares of stock to the same object; and at another time an appropriation of ten thousand shares. These facts appeared recently by an examination of the books of this company produced by Mr. Wakeman of the city of New York. Much to his credit, he exerted himself industriously and obtained this exhibition.

The postponement of this report is substantially a decision by the Senate that this claim shall be paid, and that the whole of it shall be paid without compromise, without mitigation, without deduction to the full extent to which a technical construction of the act of 1856 may carry the accounting officers of the Government. I might go on and show the case in a much stronger light upon other points. But, sir, I insist upon it that it should be sent, and upon this showing I think this Senate ought to send the subject to another committee, that it may be looked at before we charge the Government with the payment of this whole amount.

Mr. POMEROY. The motion is to postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator is mistaken. The indefinite postponement of this resolution leaves this case before the Comptroller of the Treasury, and according to the construction given by the claimants and the officer himself, he is bound to go on under the technical construction of the act of 1856 and assess the whole amount of damages. By postponing this report you decree that the whole sum shall be paid.

Mr. CARLILE. If the evidence be as conclusive as the Senator from Pennsylvania supposes it to be, and the Comptroller, to whom this subject is by law referred for settlement, be an honest man, of sufficient sagacity to understand the force of evidence, the object which the Senator has in view will be accomplished. I hold that this Government is estopped from going behind its own act in 1856. I think a solemn law of Congress should be as binding upon the Government as is a bond executed by an individual; and that bond we all know estops him from introducing evidence contradictory to it. In 1856—and I maintain that we are estopped from going behind it—Congress by law declared that this claim should be referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and his award should be paid. That is the claim as it now stands. In pursuance of that law this subject was before the Comptroller of the Treasury for settlement and adjudication under it; evidence, as the Senator says, has been taken in New York and elsewhere; and the decision would have been had but for the act of the present Postmaster General coming into this Congress and bringing the subject again before the representatives of the people, and getting through the House of Representatives the resolution which is now before the Senate. There is not a dollar appropriated under any provision here, and the Comptroller is limited in his action under that law to ascertain the actual expenditures and outlays of these parties, and his award, if favorable to them, cannot be beyond a reimbursement of those actual expenditures.

This contract with them was made prior to 1856, of course, or there could have been no legislation subsequent to it. It was made by the then incumbent of the Department. His successor was Mr. Campbell, of Pennsylvania, who took a very decided and active stand in opposition to these men. Congress, to get rid of the whole subject and in order that justice might be done between the Government and these parties, enacted the law of 1856; and this subject would not have been again before this body but for what I presume were the prejudices inherited from Mr. Campbell. If the Senate shall concur in the motion indefinitely postponing this subject, if nothing is due to these men, nothing will be obtained by them under the award that the Comptroller will make. If we should now interfere with that legislation, in my humble judgment it would be a repudiation on the part of this Government of its own solemn act, as well as an imputation upon the honesty and sagacity of the Comptroller before whom the subject now is.

Mr. CONNESS. This subject was before the committee of which I happen to be a member, and I entirely agree with the views of the Senator from Pennsylvania upon the subject. I can state in addition that that Senator gave the subject the most thorough examination, and unquestionably arrived at the most accurate conclusions in relation to it. I do not think that whatever action we may take here, if it should result in withdrawing the case from the examination of the Comptroller of the Treasury, can be construed as an imputation upon that officer or an expression of a want of confidence in him. The difficulty of the case as it is before that officer is this, that he is called upon to determine it in view of statutes difficult of construction. That is his difficulty, and that is the difficulty that the Government stands in, and the liability that there is for that officer to make an error against the Government in the determination of the question.

I think the true determination of the question is the mode pointed out by the Senator from Pennsylvania; and that is not to indefinitely postpone it, because, as he says, that leaves the question where it is, before the Comptroller of the Treasury, but to refuse to indefinitely postpone, discharge the committee of conference, recede from the Senate amendment, and let these parties go to the Court of Claims, and let them get whatever they are entitled to. I will not express any opinion of my own as to what that sum should be, because if we pursue that course we shall send it to another tribunal to determine that question. My decided opinion is that that is the most just and correct course, and I hope the Senate will take it.

Mr. WADE. I am not, certainly at this stage of the session, going to enter into any very elaborate argument on this subject. I also was one of those who investigated this claim on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads some four or five years ago, and I think I know something about it. I know that some seven or eight or nine years ago this whole matter was referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury to investigate and report upon; he proceeded with it, and it is now in his hands; and he is as perfectly competent to render a just judgment upon it as any court in Christendom.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator will allow me to correct him. Mr. Whittlesey was then Comptroller of the Treasury. Great confidence was placed in his capacity and integrity. This claim was sent to him, not to report upon, but to determine, and upon his award the amount was to be paid out of the Treasury. He went out of office before he decided it. His successor, Governor Medill, took it up and decided that the parties were not entitled to receive anything.

Mr. WADE. I understand all about that. Mr. Medill availed himself of the technicality, perhaps, of the opinion of the Attorney-General, but did not go into the equities of the case and did not investigate it. Mr. Taylor, the present Comptroller, is as honest a man as any court we have got, and as capable of making an investigation of this kind as any court in the country, and will be as likely to make a report that will be equitable and just between the Government and these claimants as anybody else.

The reason that induces me to insist upon the indefinite postponement of this joint resolution and permit the Comptroller to go on with it is this: the Comptroller being as competent as anybody to determine it, a very large amount of evidence having been taken before him, the case having been adjudicated for some seven, eight, or nine years, it seems to me that to turn around upon these claimants now and tell them to go into a court to commence a new suit on this subject would not be treating them fairly. I think we should postpone this resolution and let the Comptroller go on with his investigation until he gets through. I hope, therefore, that we shall postpone it and leave the matter in his hands. He is just as competent to decide it as any court to which you could refer it. I think that will be much more just, right, and equitable to the claimants. After selecting a tribunal to make this investigation, and after the parties have proceeded a long time before him, now to turn them over to a new tribunal I do not think would be right or just.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Foot, Hale, Harris, Hicks, McDougall, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, and Sainsbury—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, and Wright—19.

So the joint resolution was indefinitely postponed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill that is regularly before the Senate be read.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow the joint resolution that I have sent to the Chair to be taken up. It will lead to no debate and will not take a minute of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware desires the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him. Is there any objection?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to postpone all prior orders to take up a resolution that I will indicate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that is done I hope the Senator will allow me to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. McDUGALL. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 411) to encourage immigration, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

They recommend that the Senate recede from their amendment, and agree to the bill of the House with the following amendments:

Strike out of said bill section three and add at the end of section four the following: "unless such immigrant shall voluntarily renounce, under oath, his allegiance to the country of his birth and declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States."

And strike out all of section six of said bill, and the House agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,
H. B. ANTHONY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. B. WASHBURN,
WILLIAM WINDOM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that the result of the conference was to leave the bill about as it passed the Senate, with very little alteration.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that report. I do not think the Government of the United States have any power over the subject.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, but two Senators rising to second the call.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SIDNEY PERHAM of Maine, Mr. MOSES F. ODELL of New York, and Mr. EPHRAIM R. ECKLEY of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate (No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES F. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. THOMAS T. DAVIS of New York, and Mr. EZRA WHEELER of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 460) for the relief of the estate of Hon. John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 564) for the relief of Eliza Cass Woodbridge; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata.

MONARCHICAL GOVERNMENTS IN AMERICA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on postponing the bill before the Senate, House bill No. 534, to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by the Senator from California, which will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any European power to overthrow by force, or to supplant by fraud, the institutions of any republican Government on the western continent; and that they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the people and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such Power to obtain any footholds for monarchical Governments sustained by foreign military force in near proximity to the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator from California allow me to appeal to him? If we are going to have any steam navy at all we must pass the bill, and it must go to the House of Representatives, because we propose to offer some amendments to it. I hope he will allow the bill to be passed. I do not believe it will give rise to five minutes' debate.

Mr. McDUGALL. It is now since January last that I have sought to express some opinions that I have to the Senate, and which I thought of value to the Senate by way of counsel. I have not been allowed the opportunity. I have quietly and modestly bided my time until the Senate is about to adjourn. I am not going to occupy any great length of time. I am not in the habit of doing it without it is for some special obligation. If, however, the Senator from Rhode Island says that this bill is a matter that can be disposed of in a few minutes, I will agree to allow this resolution to pass by informally for a brief time, I reserving my right to my place on the floor. I do not wish to interrupt the course of business, but I do wish to express my opinion.

Mr. SUMNER. I will inquire of the Senator if the resolution which he now proposes to take up is not one which has already been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will answer. I had occasion to refer one resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations which they buried five fathoms deep, and deeper. I have two resolutions on the table that have never been put into the tomb of the Capulets; and this is one of them. I have not made a speech, or what you call a speech, on the floor of the Senate during this long session of Congress. I have desired to express my opinions upon what I call the gravest thing next to this war that is presented for the consideration of the Senate, the Government, and the American people. I now ask the opportunity to present some few remarks. I have been circumscribed, circumscribed, surrounded by the Committee on Foreign Relations, it is true; but as I stand now, I am independent of that power, and I can appeal to the just sense of my fellow Senators to allow me the simple privilege of saying what I think upon what I as a Senator believe to be a grave subject worthy of public consideration.

SEAMEN OF WRECKED VESSELS.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a report from a committee of conference.

There being no objection, the report was received and read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, have met, and after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to said bill, with the following amendments, namely:

In line four of section one, strike out the word "officers."

In the same line between the words "others" and "borne" insert the words "not officers."

In line four of section two, strike out the word "officers" where it first occurs.

In the same line between the words "others" and "on" insert the words "not officers."

In section two, between the words "person" in the nineteenth line and "employed" in the twentieth line insert the following words: "not an officer."

In line two of section three, strike out the word "officer" where it first occurs.

In line three of section three, between the words "person" and "such" insert the following words: "not an officer."

That the House concur in the above amendments to their amendment to said bill.

JOHN P. HALE,
J. B. HENDERSON,
ALEXANDER RAMSEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ALEXANDER H. RICE,
JOHN A. GRISWOLD,
WILLIAM D. KELLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPORT FROM A COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 194) for the benefit of half-breeds and mixed-bloods of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, reported it without amendment.

MONARCHICAL GOVERNMENTS IN AMERICA.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 32.

Mr. McDUGALL. I believe I have the floor. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from California is entitled to the floor, he having yielded it temporarily merely for the purpose of receiving a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. HARRIS. I supposed the Senator had got through.

Mr. McDUGALL. I was willing to yield to the ordinary formal business.

Mr. HARRIS. This is a short resolution that I want to get through.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order; and that is, that the Senator from California can only state the reasons why his resolution should be taken up, but cannot discuss the resolution itself on a motion to take up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such question of order can as yet be raised, because the Senator has not commenced his speech.

Mr. McDUGALL. I certainly cannot undertake to discuss the subject-matter I propose to present in detail until I have the privilege of the Senate. I will try and conform myself to the rules with what I would call a strict observance, and when I am ignorant I always desire to be informed by any Senator that I have erred in my understanding of it.

I have tried to express my opinions, as I remarked before, upon some grave matters I think of great importance to the public. From the opening of this year until now almost past the summer solstice I have sought that opportunity. I am not specially favored with opportunities to possess the floor, nor am I so bold as to demand it or to fight for it except it be conceded to me by the courtesy of my fellow Senators. I would be pleased to be permitted to proceed with such remarks as I have to make in favor of the proposition that I have offered and offered again and which is now pending before the Senate. I ask that it may be considered. I shall speak briefly, and I trust I shall speak to the point.

Mr. CONNESS. I simply desire to explain my vote on this subject. I should like to accommodate my colleague by voting with him to take up this resolution; but I am satisfied, in the first place, that the management of the affairs comprehended by it should be at the present time best left to the executive branch of the Government. Again, I am satisfied that the subject cannot have the discussion and consideration that it deserves if the Congress of the United States undertake to express an opinion upon it at the present time.

Mr. McDUGALL. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I deem it my duty simply to say that here is a bill which, if we intend to have a Navy, we ought to consider at once. The most important naval officers at the present time are engineers and gunners under the new order of things. The Secretary of the Navy has informed the committee again and again that he cannot run the Navy unless some such measure is passed; that the engineers find so much more profitable employment in private shops and establishments than they do in the Navy that they are tendering their resignations, and those he has there he holds there by mere force, refusing to accept their resignations. This is a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, been before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body, and they propose some amendments to it. It is of no interest to us; it is for the benefit of the country. It is for the Senate to say whether they will consider it or not.

Mr. McDUGALL. There are many grave matters yet to be considered, and I am willing to remain here to consider them. The subject that I presented at an early day was a grave matter, more grave, in my judgment, than the business now brought forward by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. There are undoubtedly among Senators differences of opinion. It happens to be unfortunate for me—where that misfortune is chargeable I do not exactly understand—that my seat is so situated that I am not able usually to command the ear of the person in charge of the administrative business of the Senate; it is seldom that even I catch the corner of his eye; but I have the privilege at this present time of addressing the Senate, and I ask a vote. Probably it will not happen again that I may have the privilege of asking the vote of the Senate. Senators will bear me witness that I have not been disposed to engage in elaborate discussions; I have not been disposed to occupy the time of the Senate. Whatever I have said has been for advice and counsel on every and all occasions, and there is no Senator but will be compelled to recognize that statement as being the exact truth.

I have thought this question possessed more dignity and was of more real importance and should command more attention than did many of my fellow Senators, and I have sought an opportunity to give them the reasons why. I have sought from the winter to the summer solstice the opportunity to give them the reasons why I thought this subject should engage their attention. I have been by various reasons and by many causes denied the opportunity. I have now the right to ask Senators whether I may be permitted to say what I think upon what I regard as the next gravest question to the rebellion against this Republic. I trust I may have the privilege. If I am denied I am to understand the spirit in which that denial is expressed.

Mr. ANTHONY. The question is whether we shall proceed to the consideration of a bill which in the opinion of the Navy Department is almost necessary to the existence of the Navy, or whether we shall listen to a speech, which I know will be a very good one, from the Senator from California on our foreign affairs. I desire to say that no Senator has a higher respect for the Senator from California than I have. I know the great ability and the very great information that he brings to the discussion of every subject on which he speaks, and I know how much attention he has paid to this particular subject; but I submit that at this stage of the session we shall be recreant to our duty if we allow anything to interpose to prevent the consideration of the bill which the Senator from New Hampshire has brought up.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to add one word. The question, as the Senator from Rhode Island has said, is not on the resolution itself, but it is simply on taking it up. It is whether the Senate now, when it is nearly nine o'clock of probably our last night here, will take up a resolution on which the Senator from California announces that he wishes to make an elaborate speech, and that speech is to consist of a review of the foreign relations of our country. I doubt not the ability with which they would be displayed by the Senator from California; but allow me to say that this is not the time for any such discussion. There is a time for all things. There is time for an elaborate speech from the Senator; but he will allow me to say that this evening is not that time. I will say no more.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["Oh, no!"] There are nineteen messages on the table.

Mr. McDUGALL. I feel very much like yielding to the appeal made by the Committee on Naval Affairs for the immediate consideration of their business, and I should have yielded to that appeal only that I desired to take the first opportunity to say on this floor in my place what I thought, and ask the judgment of the Senate on the question I have submitted.

But I have a word to say now to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who says it is not wise to consider this subject. If I remember history aright, and I am not exactly certain that I do, Fabius would never have been a general if Marcellus had not been in the field. The Roman authorities never approved of Fabius except as a check under special and very special circumstances; and to-day, among the old Romans whose names are remembered as worthy of having borne arms, Marcellus stands far ahead of Fabius. This thing of fearing to do what is right is the evidence of a weak boy; and if I had a boy of mine and he feared to maintain the right I would say that same bar sinister would establish his condition. I hold that it is so with boys and men and States and nations. They who do not dare to maintain the right are weak from their ankles to the last insertion of the column that supports the brain. I object to the Fabian policy which has been conducted with such extreme deference to Louis Napoleon and the French Government, the Government and Power both antagonizing us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from California to take up the resolution which has been read, and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McDUGALL. For the purpose of saving time I am willing to waive my motion for the present in order to take up the naval business, with the understanding that I am to have the floor after the naval business is disposed of, and allowing this resolution to be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and must be taken, unless withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will ask that the call be withdrawn by unanimous consent, if it is understood that I can have the floor afterwards.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the Senator by allowing this bill to come forward will lose no rights that he now has.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have the floor now, and I believe I will take the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call will proceed.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Hendricks, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Kiddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wilkinson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Howard, Nesmith, and Wright—11.

So the Senate refused to take up the resolution.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls up the special order for this hour, being the resolution in regard to the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to postpone its further consideration until eleven o'clock to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before that vote is taken, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the time fixed, and inserting "the 4th day of July at twelve o'clock."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to postpone, in the opinion of the Chair, has precedence.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope it will not be postponed until the amendment can be made; and I should like to inquire why it is that we cannot fix the day of adjournment at this stage of the session. It seems to me we might as well fix it now, and then have our business prepared with reference to it. I am quite sure from the character of the bills that lie on the table and are liable to be called up when members are exhausted, as they are now, that we shall be quite as likely to pass bills that should not pass as those which ought to pass. I have never before been a member of the first session of any Congress that we have not fixed the day of adjournment always days before the time when we expected to adjourn. I believe it is the general understanding that we are to adjourn in the course of a few days, and I think we had better fix it so that the clerks and the Executive and all may understand when it is, and do our business in reference to it. The idea that we are to continue in session so long as there is anything on the Calendar would lead to a perpetual session. More business will come in if we pursue that course than will be disposed of. I do not know why we cannot fix the hour of adjournment now as well as at eleven o'clock, and why we should not have fixed it this afternoon as well as now. If we are to continue on in this way, it renders the whole thing uncertain and inconvenient, and no one can make his arrangements with reference to the adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one important bill now pending in the House of Representatives which I hope will pass this evening. It is indispensable that it be passed. It is the only bill that I know of that ought to detain us—a bill to provide for an income tax. I am told it is now being considered by the House of Representatives; and as soon as that comes over, I suppose there will be no objection to fixing the time of adjournment. It is the only important bill I know of that is pending between the two Houses. It is very important that that should be acted upon before the hour of adjournment is fixed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague has said that it has been the uniform practice of Congress to fix a day some two or three weeks beforehand, and there is a reason for it. In the House of Representatives some days before the final adjournment members can move to suspend the rules. Before the day of adjournment is fixed upon, that motion cannot be made except on particular days. If Congress ought not to adjourn on Monday, fix some day next week. Let us have a day fixed. I am for the majority here taking whatever time they want, but I am also for fixing the day of adjournment and fixing it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the resolution until eleven o'clock, and make it the special order for that hour.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes twenty-two, noes not counted.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAW.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted upon by the House; and

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. HENDRICKS, and Mr. HARLAN.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 339) to repeal a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 438) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (No. 575) to correct a clerical error in the law of June 30, 1864, relating to the Post Office Department; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho;

A bill (S. No. 232) in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of fraud in States declared in insurrection;

A bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Major N. S. Brenton, a paymaster in the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard, of the United States volunteers; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 58) in relation to the professors of the Military Academy at West Point.

ENGINEERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the bill that the Senator from New Hampshire has named be now taken up. It is necessary that it should be passed.

Mr. HALE and others. It is up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment was in section one, line eight, after the word "purpose" to insert the words "to be styled cadet engineers;" so that the section will read:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to provide, by regulations to be issued by him, for the education of such midshipmen or others at the Naval Academy as show a peculiar aptitude therefor as naval constructors, or civil and steam engineers, and may form a separate class for this purpose, to be styled cadet engineers, or otherwise afford to such persons all proper facilities for such a scientific mechanical education as will fit them for such professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four, section two, to strike out the word "commissioned" and insert "appointed;" so that the section will read:

That upon the recommendation of the academic board such persons connected with the scientific and mechanical class as graduate therein with credit may be immediately appointed as assistant naval constructors or warranted as engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. It is hardly necessary to read the rest of the bill, as the committee propose to strike it all out and insert a substitute.

The Secretary read the following amendment proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs in lieu of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh sections of the bill:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That cadet engineers, not to exceed fifty in number, shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That no person, other than midshipmen, shall be eligible for such appointment who shall not produce satisfactory evidence of mechanical skill and proficiency, and that he has been employed at least two years in the actual fabrication of steam machinery.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That cadet engineers, when appointed, shall be under eighteen years of age, and shall have passed a mental and physical examination. They shall be admitted to the Naval Academy, where they shall be examined from time to time, according to the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy; and if found deficient at any examination, or dismissed for misconduct, they shall not be continued in the Academy, or in the service, except upon recommendation of the academic board.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the academic course of cadet engineers shall be two years, and their pay the same as that of midshipmen.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the number of chief engineers shall not exceed one for each first and second rate vessel in the Navy, with such first, second, and third assistant engineers, or those acting as such, as the wants of the service actually require. And that from and after the passage of this act the annual pay of the engineer officers of the Navy, on the active list, shall be as follows: every chief engineer on duty, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $2,200; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $2,500; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $2,800; after fifteen years after the date of his commission, $3,000. Every chief engineer on leave or waiting orders, for the first five years after the date of his commission, $1,500; for the second five years after the date of his commission, $1,600; for the third five years after the date of his commission, $1,700; after fifteen years after the date of his commission, $1,800. Every first assistant engineer on duty, $1,500; while on leave or waiting orders, $1,100. Every second assistant engineer on duty, $1,200; while on leave or waiting orders, $900. Every third assistant engineer on duty, $1,000; while on leave or waiting orders, $800.

Mr. HALE. I will explain to the Senate the amendment that the committee have made. The bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives made an additional class of engineers. The committee do not concur in that, for the reason that there is now an existing law by which the President is allowed to detail a fleet engineer and a fleet surgeon and a fleet paymaster to do duty while he is on that service, and when he comes home he returns to his crew as he was before, and it does not make a distinct office. The bill as it came from the House made that a distinct office and paid him as fleet engineer all the time whether on the fleet or not. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommend that we do no such thing; the law they think is sufficient leaving all fleet engineers the same as fleet paymasters and fleet surgeons.

Then the House bill as it came to the Senate had this provision, "that the pay of engineer officers shall be equal to that of medical officers." The grades are different. There are five grades of engineers, chief engineer, and first, second, and third assistant engineers, and cadet engineers. In surgeons there are but three grades, surgeons, assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons; so that it was impossible to make an understandable bill with that provision. The committee, instead of saying that, have taken the pay of surgeons and made that of engineers as near to it as they could, carrying out the analogy as far as possible considering the different number of grades. It raises their pay about twenty per cent. That is all that the committee have done.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That section two of joint resolution "authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the equitable claims of contractors for naval supplies and regulating contracts with the Navy Department," approved March 3, 1863, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to the same the following proviso, viz: "Provided, That where articles are advertised and bid for in classes, and, in the judgment of the head of the Department, any one or more articles appear to be bid for at excessive or unreasonable prices, exceeding ten per cent. above their fair market value, he shall be authorized to reject such bid."

Mr. HALE. That amendment is substantially what was recommended by the select committee on naval supplies. I have no objection to it, and hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD G. MURPHY.

Mr. HOWE. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 346, for the relief of Richard G. Murphy.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Major Richard G. Murphy $1,800 in full for that amount charged to and paid by him as agent for the Sioux Indians upon false vouchers transmitted to the Indian Bureau by Willis A. Gorman, late superintendent of Indian affairs for the northwestern superintendency. It also directs the Solicitor of the Treasury forthwith to cause to be commenced against Willis A. Gorman such suits as he may deem proper for the recovery of any money which Gorman may have wrongfully obtained from the Treasury.

Mr. HARLAN. Has this bill been before a committee?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; it is reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is not Mr. Gorman a brigadier general in the Army?

Mr. HOWE. He was a brigadier general, I believe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUBMARINE INVENTIONS.

Mr. HALE. I have a short bill from the Naval Committee, and I will state to the Senate what it is and I think they will consider it. The Navy Department are bothered by a great many gentlemen coming with important inventions for submarine explosions, and the Department would be glad to experiment with them but have no funds, and the committee have reported a bill to make an appropriation for that purpose. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 343, making an appropriation for testing submarine inventions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am opposed to taking up that bill. I hope no such bill as that will be taken up at this late hour, appropriating $25,000 for experimental purposes. I hope the Chair will learn that there are some other States represented here besides New England.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will come to order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is in order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will take his seat. The Senator will come to order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is in order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"6. If any member in speaking or otherwise transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any member may, call to order; and when a member shall be called to order by the President or a Senator, he shall sit down and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate; and every question of order shall be decided by the President without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate; and the President may call for the sense of the Senate on any question of order."

Mr. WILKINSON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no decision of the Chair except a request to the Senator from Michigan to take his seat.

Mr. WILKINSON. It is a call to order by the President, and I appeal from it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator from Michigan in order, sir?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan may proceed with the leave of the Senate. The Chair makes no objection to the Senator proceeding in order.

Mr. FOOT. I move, according to the rule of the Senate, that the Senator from Michigan proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been trying for the last hour to get the ear of the Chair to call up a little bill sanctioning an act of the Legislature of Michigan authorizing the deepening of the channel of a river. In my own opinion the Legislature of Michigan had a right to pass that act, but it leads to a large expenditure of money, and the corporators under the act of the Legislature desire the sanction of Congress for fear they might violate that clause of the Constitution which says that no tonnage duty shall be laid without the consent of Congress. The bill does not appropriate one farthing. It simply legalizes an act of the Legislature of Michigan which in my opinion is legal now; and, as I said before, I have been trying for the last hour to get the ear of the Chair in order to call up that bill.

Now, I hope that no bill will be taken up at this late hour, half past nine o'clock at night on the last day of the session, authorizing the use of a large amount of money for experimental purposes. I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition, and that they will permit me to proceed with the bill to which I have referred. It does not involve the expenditure of a single shilling; it will greatly promote the mercantile interests not only of Michigan, but of all the States bordering on the lakes, and I may say of all the United States, and solely at the expense of the citizens of the State of Michigan. I hope the Senate will vote down this motion, and that then the Chair will recognize me and permit me to move to take up that bill.

Mr. HALE. I have no personal interest in this bill nor has the State I represent. There have been several applications made to the Naval Committee to examine curious inventions of submarine batteries, &c. We have told the inventors that we had nothing to do with them, and we finally sent several of them to the Secretary of the Navy and asked his opinion. The Secretary submitted some of them to a board, and they recommended them, but the Secretary said he had no money to spend upon them, and requested us to make an appropriation; and this bill is reported in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CONNESS. Is it a House bill?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; it has just been reported. It is very brief, and I think it can be passed in a minute or two if the Senate will take it up.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes eleven—

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Harlan, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, and Ten Eyck—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Richardson, Sherman, Wade, and Wright—15.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (S.

No. 243) making an appropriation for testing submarine inventions was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILKINSON. I should like to inquire of the Chair what became of the appeal which I took from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator to withdraw his appeal on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Michigan be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. WILKINSON. The Chair will understand that one motion cannot be withdrawn on the motion of another Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator to withdraw the appeal and to yield to the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Michigan proceed in order.

Mr. WILKINSON. I do not know what the Senator from Vermont said, but when the Chair decided the Senator from Michigan to be out of order and ordered him to take his seat, I took an appeal from that decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. WILKINSON. And I have not said a word from that time to this, and the Chair went on with the proceedings of the Senate without any regard to it whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator to withdraw it upon the motion made by the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Michigan be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. WILKINSON. I did not hear what the Senator from Vermont said.

Mr. FOOT. I made the usual motion under the rule, that the Senator from Michigan, having been called to order by the Chair, have leave to proceed in order. I made the motion under the rule, and that motion was carried.

Mr. WILKINSON. I do not know much about the rules, but the Senator from Vermont does, and if he says that it is all right I have nothing to say about it.

Mr. FOOT. I made that motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Vermont is incorrect. The Senator from Michigan was not called to order by the Chair. The Senator from Michigan was ordered to take his seat by the Chair, but was not called to order. The Chair had a right to call the Senator from Michigan to order, but he had no more right to order the Senator from Michigan to take his seat than the Senator from Michigan had to order the Chair to take his seat. The Chair was out of order, and I shall insist upon that appeal on account of the Chair being out of order. Had the Chair called the Senator from Michigan to order, he would have been right and the Senator from Michigan would have taken his seat; but the Chair did not—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Michigan that he is entirely out of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was simply discussing the fact; that was all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is out of order both in discussing the fact and in addressing the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit that it is too late to raise this question now. Other business has intervened.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the bill, which proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of testing submarine batteries and other inventions, to be applied under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy to experiments upon such devices for submarine operations as may be recommended as worthy of practical test by a commission of competent naval officers and scientific men, now or hereafter to be organized for their examination.

Mr. HALE. I will state a single fact to the Senate. I am told that some submarine batteries which the rebels have that have destroyed several of our vessels are the result of inventions offered to our Government and not experimented with by our Government for want of a fund, and they want a fund to be at their disposal to make practical experiments in this way.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire by whom they were offered to our Government?

Mr. HALE. I do not know. I say I have been so informed. I have seen it in the public papers. I cannot affirm that it is true.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time.

Mr. McDougall. Is the bill open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Harlan, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Sprague—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Richardson, Sherman, and Wright—13.

So the bill was passed.

MISSOURI MILITIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the consent of the Senate to introduce a bill based on facts which have just come to my knowledge.

There being no objection leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 348½) to pay a certain militia force called into service in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILKINSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made it cannot be considered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his objection. I desire before this matter passes off to read the order of General Rosecrans in my State so that he may understand the condition of affairs there. I am satisfied he does not understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is objection to the present consideration of the bill withdrawn?

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope it will be done until I can read the order.

Mr. WILKINSON. I will withdraw it long enough to hear what the Senator from Missouri wishes to read.

Mr. CONNESS. That cannot be done.

Mr. WILKINSON. Then I refuse to withdraw the objection. I am told I cannot withdraw it unless I do so unconditionally.

ARMY MEDICAL CORPS.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 543) to increase the efficiency of the medical corps of the Army, have had the same under consideration and have instructed me to report in favor of it without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. POWELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 185) to establish a branch of the Mint of the United States at Dallas City, in the State of Oregon.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAW.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives requested the return to the House of the bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of correcting an error in the message announcing to the Senate the action of the House upon the said bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia; and it was Ordered, That the said bill be returned to the House of Representatives agreeably to its request.

POST OFFICE LAWS.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 575, just received from the House of Representatives. It is simply an act to correct a clerical error.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 575) to correct a clerical error in the law of June 30, 1864, relating to the Post Office Department was read twice by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the reading of this letter. ["No, no."]

The bill provides that so much of the act of the 30th of June, 1864, as repeals the seventeenth, eighteenth, thirty-fifth, thirty-ninth, and forty-first sections of the act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to the Post Office Department," be repealed.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I feel a good deal of reluctance to consider a bill of this sort in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It seems to affect previous laws.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the reading of the letter.

Mr. McDUGALL. It is not necessary. There is no objection to the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Let it be read. Let the Senate understand it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I should like to have the letter read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the following letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, July 1, 1864.

SIR: I herewith send you the draft of a law for the correction of a clerical error in the post office bill of 30th June, 1864. This act, as originally drawn, contained substitute provisions for the sections of the act of 1863 which are repealed. These substitute provisions were stricken out by the committee, and the provision repealing the sections of the act of 1863 was inadvertently left in the act of 30th June.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. BLAIR,

Postmaster General.

Hon. J. B. AILEY, House Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 305. It is a bill providing for paying for quartermaster's and commissary's stores that were taken and used by our Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 305) to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill has been before the Senate and read at length, and some amendments were made on the motion of the Senator from Maryland. I move now to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and substitute the two sections on the same subject which were reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate as Senate bill No. 259.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

That all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion, for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion, for subsistence actually furnished to said Army and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Commissary General of Subsistence, accompanied with such proof as each claimant may have to offer; and it shall be the duty of the Commissary General of Subsistence to cause each claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case for payment to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As this bill seems to alarm some Senators, I am quite sure it is not understood. It is the duty of the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General to pay these accounts now. If Senators will give me their attention a moment, I will state that it is not a bill to pay damages which have been done by our armies in their marches. That was the character of the original Senate bill. The Judiciary Committee struck out the whole of that bill and put in these two sections. Now, what are the two sections? The two sections require the quartermaster and commissary departments to pay for property, not which the Army destroyed, but which the officers took and which was used by the Army. The property must have been taken by the proper officer—that is the language of the bill—and used by the Army in States not in rebellion, in loyal States, and the property of loyal citizens, and we require the loyalty of the citizen to be proven to the quartermaster and the commissary. Can any one say that such a claim as that should not be paid? If a quartermaster went and took the property and the Army used it, why should it not be paid for? It is no matter if he did take it, if the Army did not use it, according to the provision we have reported it is not to be paid for; but where the property of a loyal citizen in a loyal State has been taken and the Army has used it, can anybody say that that is a claim which should not be paid? It seems to me it ought to be paid on presentation. The quartermasters and commissaries are doing this thing every day. They come and take one hundred bushels of oats from me or one hundred bales of hay and they pay me for it. That is all that there is in this bill, nothing else, and there are no hundreds of millions of dollars of damages to be claimed under it. If your Quartermaster General and Commissary General are satisfied that the proper officer took the property and that the Army used it, do you not think you ought to pay the man what is reasonable and proper? That is all there is to it.

Mr. WILKINSON. How does it operate down South?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is confined entirely to the loyal States.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Why do you discriminate against loyal men in disloyal States?

Mr. TRUMBULL. We discriminate against them because of the difficulty of arriving at the facts in that unsettled portion of the country, but loyal men in the disloyal States ought to be paid, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, whenever there is a settled condition of the country; but to open that door now we thought was going too far. I was willing to do something for the people in the loyal States whose property has been taken by the proper officer and used by the Army, but I was not ready to go into the disloyal States to do that for fear there would be abuses and a difficulty in proving it. It is true there may be hardships, but we all have to suffer hardships. Where the country has been in a state of insurrection, to open the door for men to prove their loyalty, would be, I fear, dangerous at this time. I thought something ought to be done, and was willing as one of the committee to go this far; but this is as far as I can go. That is my answer.

Mr. JOHNSON. When our armies were in Maryland on two occasions, when the battle of Antietam and the accompanying battles of that invasion and the subsequent battle of Gettysburg were fought, the armies were fed almost entirely by the citizens of Maryland. Their property was taken. They would have had no option to refuse; but they did not refuse. They tendered all that they had, and all that they had was appropriated to the support of the Army; and all that this bill says is that a Maryland citizen who upon that occasion fed with his stores or supplied the Army in another way with commissariat stores shall be paid, unless it shall turn out that he was disloyal. The amount is very large to them, but nothing to the United States. But irrespective of the amount, there is an obligation, a moral, a national obligation, it seems to me, that appeals with commanding force to the judgment, and to the honesty, I am almost inclined to say, of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Illinois by adding at its close:

And it shall be the duty of the Third Auditor to reexamine the said claims both in the quartermaster and commissary departments, and if they are found to be just to fix the amount and recommend the same for payment, or otherwise reject the same.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no sort of objection to that. It is another safeguard; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor.) It is competent for the Senator from Illinois to accept it as a part of his own amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It requires the Third Auditor to examine after the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General shall have examined. I have no desire that anybody shall be paid anything but what is justly due; and I have no sort of objection to any checks that do not make the bill so cumbersome that it will not operate. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It becomes part of the amendment moved by the Senator from Illinois, and the question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. CLARK. I think something like this bill, perhaps this very bill, should pass. A great many claims of this character have been the past session before the Court of Claims, and it seems sometimes a matter of some surprise to the Committee on Claims that the bills were not paid. The amount had evidently been furnished. We passed a little bill here last night, I think, for twenty-five cords of wood. The proof of furnishing the wood was clear, but, on inquiry why it was not paid, it turned out that one regiment had used half of it and moved off the ground and another regiment had come on and used the other half, and so no proper voucher was furnished in regard to the wood. There are a great many of these cases that ought to be provided for, and I do not see any better way than this to have them examined in the proper departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The motion which I made was to strike out the whole of the House bill; but on looking at the first section there is no objection to it. The first section of the bill is—

That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or appropriation of or damage to property by the Army or Navy, or any part of the Army or Navy, engaged in the suppression of the rebellion, from the commencement to the close thereof.

I do not think there is any objection to that. I understand the Court of Claims does not take jurisdiction of these cases.

Mr. CLARK. There have been some rumors that they had or would.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand they are not doing it; but I do not want them to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit to the honorable member from Illinois that he had better leave that section in, because the House of Representatives are under the impression that the court takes jurisdiction of such cases.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; I have no objection. Let my amendment come in striking out all of the bill after the first section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified if no objection be interposed, the amendment having been agreed to by the Senate. There is no objection, and it will be so modified.

Mr. McDUGALL. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That $250,000 be paid to the order of the representative of the Government of Mexico now recognized by the Government of the United States, as indemnity to the Government and people of the republic of Mexico for the failure of this Government to maintain its faith pledged by its executive officers as extended to the people and the Government of Mexico, and to the people and States of North, South, and Central America, and as declared to the States of Europe, and as was acknowledged as having the force of contract as well as of law on both sides of the Atlantic.

Mr. JOHNSON rose.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have the floor.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor, but will he allow me to say a word to him through the Chair? I ask the Senator to allow me to say one word.

Mr. McDUGALL. Through me to the Chair.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from California certainly would not embarrass a bill of this kind with extraneous matter. I am sure he will not insist on his amendment when he considers how anxious some of these poor persons are to get their money, people whose all—not amounting perhaps to a great deal, but yet everything to them—has been taken in many instances by the proper officers of the Government, but they have had no pay for it. I trust he will withdraw the amendment and not embarrass this bill at this hour with it. Just let this little bill go through and offer his as an independent proposition or in any way that he pleases afterward.

Mr. McDUGALL. The amendment I offer may not be considered as one pertinent to the pending measure, but I believe it is within the rules governing the business of the Senate. In moving this amendment in this place I feel it due to myself to say the subject embraced in the amendment was brought by me before the Senate in January last. From the winter to the summer solstice, both in committee and on this floor, I have urged consideration of the subject. That conduct which is governed by the counsel of its fears has persistently denied me the opportunity of even expressing my opinions upon the relations existing between this Government and France, Mexico, and Maximilian. It seems strange that this should be so. I can only relate this policy to the timorousness of imbecility.

This amendment is a just and proper provision. I do not hope for its acceptance. I have rather introduced it that I might enjoy the opportunity of expressing my profound indignation of and concerning the cowardly crowd of politicians that with one voice fiercely affirm a policy and in the following moment, in a trembling terror, say it will not do officially to say the same thing. Men of such conduct cannot govern any people. I wish to advise Senators that this subject shall not be ignored so long as I have a place here, and that will be for some years, as I can assure gentlemen I have no apprehension of death from disease or enemies. I will employ every opportunity to maintain what I hold to be an essential policy the strategy of opportunity may afford, and this is not a promise for to-day, but a promise for years.

The questions involved in our French-Mexican relations are only second to those involved in the present war, and should be examined firmly and sternly in the face. Mr. President, I have said to you, sir, and I desire to say to Senators, that for one half year I have sought the opportunity to state what I knew and to reason according to my convictions on this subject in my place here. The opportunity has been denied me; the power to express this denial has been with the Presiding Officer and the majority of the Senate. I have been compelled to regard this denial as an outrage upon my rights.

In this matter the coast to which I belong is deeply concerned. I understand and know this, and I will not permit it to be altogether ignored while I have a voice here, whatever may be the policy of the Secretary, who I think belongs more to Napoleon III than to the American Republic, or whatever may be the disposition of the majority of this body.

Mr. President, I am conscious that I know that had Mr. Secretary Seward given the proper warning to France, had he directed our minister resident to say to the French Emperor, "Sir, the Government of the United States will regard the occupation of Mexico by a French army for political results as an act unfriendly to the Government of the United States of America," French forces would not have advanced beyond the Gulf ports. Mr. President, I state a query—Senators may take time to resolve it: is the foreign Secretary in league with Napoleon III, his wife Eugenie, and Pius IX? If the question stated could be truly solved I am well convinced it would throw much light upon American, Spanish, and Italian policy.

Mr. Adams, a man of talent, a man of force, a true and firm-spirited American, secured from England a sound policy so far as this question was concerned. With great respect for the representative of our Government at the court of France, I fear he was not equal to the accomplishment of the same result; at the same time I feel bound to say the major fault must have been with our Secretary at home.

There are some underlying truths that belong to all of our recent foreign diplomacy. Whether or not it would be well that any person should now undertake to exhumate them is a question about which I entertain grave doubts. The time is coming when the truth will be valuable and when the truth will be demanded, and when that time shall come I can say, without assuming the warning voice of a prophet, "Ministers of evil, beware!"

Mr. President, I did not rise to engage in argument. I have not attempted to array facts; feelings deeper than the outlying things that ordinarily command discourse have compelled me to give to my instincts expression. To-night I stand here as did the elder Cato in the Roman senate when day after day he denounced, Delenda est Carthago! I have said and shall continue to say here, let the legions of France and Austria, now usurping power in Mexico, be destroyed! The wings of our own eagle over Mexico! Mexican independence shall be maintained!

Mr. President, so long as I shall live and have a voice to speak and have strength to give full utterance to my thoughts, convictions, and fixed determinations, I shall cry war against the monarchical European invaders of our continent, be they from France, Austria, or any other part of inhabited Europe.

The infirm, weak, and seemingly sick policy of this Government in the management of its foreign relations has mantled the cheeks of our citizens with shame; "the fearful commentating" of our Secretary has not only mantled cheeks but made hearts to ache. I trust the disease is not so incurable as that which afflicted the wife of Macbeth, and that yet some wise physician may be able to "cast the water of this land."

Mr. President, there is terrible apprehension of foreign war. It may seem like the statement of a paradox, but I am confident that a foreign war with France, Spain, or Austria, or with the entire Holy Alliance, would do us infinite good, and would tend more to the reestablishment of a united Confederacy than any scheme ever devised by our Secretary of War or the late Secretary of the Treasury.

The privations of the South have increased their strength; the lavish extravagance of the North has furnished the silken cords which have bound and do now bind the limbs of the northern giant.

What have we to fear from European arms? Their fiercest war assault would not endanger us or strengthen the States in rebellion. I am not now disposed to reason at length upon this proposition. The patience of the Senate would at this time be overtaxed, but permit me to assure Senators that in my opinion I am not in want of sufficient facts and just deductions sufficient for the establishment of the position I now affirm. I look for no war with England; we can never have a serious war with Great Britain; but I cannot help but think and I please to say that I think that a good, honest war with France would be to us a present advantage and would prove a blessing to the world.

Mr. President, I would that I had the opportunity as I have the disposition to discuss the whole question of France in Mexico. I cannot now so far intrude upon the order of business, but in conclusion let me again affirm in the spirit of a strong conviction that no European dynasty can or shall establish itself within the borders of the republic of Mexico. No European policies can or shall be permitted to interfere with the condition or policies of the free States of America, whether they be North, Central, or South. I now withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HICKS. I desire only to say a word, Mr. President. I trust that this just and righteous bill is not to be defeated by irrelevant amendments—

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Very well. I will say nothing as I am anxious to have the bill passed.

Mr. POWELL. I hope that the Senate will pass this bill as it is amended. I very deeply regret that they have not passed something better for those States which have been subject to invasion. I prepared Senate bill No. 259, and it was sent to the Judiciary Committee, and I thought it fully met the entire case. The committee, however, in the exercise of a sound discretion as they supposed, struck all of it out and inserted two sections which the Senator from Illinois has proposed as an amendment to this House bill. These two sections are a kind of dilutions of the first two sections of my bill. These sections as far as they go are very well, but I really can see no reason why a loyal citizen who lives in a rebellious State and whose property is taken, should be deprived of payment.

I had provided another provision in the bill to have a commission to take proof for the purpose of perpetuating the testimony of damages done by our armies in those States where they have been, and also fixing a limitation when the claims should be presented, which I thought was very well guarded; and I had intended, if this bill were taken up, at the proper time to press the entire bill as introduced by me. I know now at this late stage of the session we can get nothing but this thin, diluted whey that the committee have given us, about a tithe of what I wish, and so I shall offer no amendment.

All the border States have been subject to very great losses. Their property has been taken frequently without any voucher for the purpose of feeding and supplying our armies. A great deal of property has been taken the value of which is a just claim against the Government; but Senators who live without that region do not seem to appreciate our condition. We have been trying for two years to get some legislation on this subject. While we think this is inadequate, yet as it will do some good to some meritorious persons who have been made utterly penniless by taking everything they had to feed our armies, and I know at this late stage of the session we can get nothing else, I hope the Senate will promptly pass the bill, and at another session, if I live, I will try to get the rest of my bill through.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN POLICY.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized during the recess of the Senate to inquire into and report upon, at the next session of Congress, the policy of providing by general law so as to relieve the public domain of the United States of the possessory titles thereto of the several Indian tribes, and to authorize the executive department, from time to time, to assign to the respective tribes such reservations as may be deemed essential, and to provide for their protection or care; and that in the investigation the committee be instructed to inform themselves with regard to the policy of the imperial and colonial authorities of Great Britain toward the Indians within their North American domain.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILKINSON. Is there any provision there for paying the expenses of that session of the committee?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is not contemplated that they will be at any expense.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

PENSION LAWS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1863; and

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FOOT, Mr. HARLAN, and Mr. VAN WINKLE.

COURTS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to take up House bill No. 32, to regulate the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York shall be held at the following times and places: at the city of Albany on the third Tuesday of January; at the city of Utica on the third Tuesday in March; at the city of Rochester on the second Tuesday in May; at the city of Buffalo on the third Tuesday in August; at the city of Auburn on the third Tuesday in November; and, in the discretion of the judge, one term annually at such time and in such place within the counties of Saint Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, or Franklin, as he shall from time to time appoint, by a notice of at least twenty days, to be published in the State paper of the State of New York, and also in one newspaper published at the place where the court is to be held, which term shall be held only for the trial of issues of fact arising within the counties named. The judge may hold special terms at the places specified or at any other places in the district, in addition to the regular terms, when he shall deem it necessary. Hereafter the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of New York is to be held at the times and places following: at the village of Canandaigua on the third Tuesday in June; at the city of Albany on the second Tuesday in October; and the term appointed to be held at Albany in October shall, when it is adjourned, be adjourned to meet in Albany the third Tuesday of January, and at the adjournment of the adjourned term shall be further adjourned to meet at the city of Utica on the third Tuesday of March. These adjourned terms are to be held for the transaction of civil business only, and no jury is to be drawn for service therein exclusively, but the jury drawn to serve in the district court at the same time and place with the adjourned terms of the circuit court, is to be used for the trial of issues of fact arising in civil causes in the circuit court.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out the fourth section, which is as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in place and in lieu of the salary now paid to the judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York, there shall be allowed and paid quarterly to said judge, out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $3,500 per year.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite aware that I have fallen upon a very unpropitious time to have this bill considered. It has not been my fault, however, that it has not been called to the consideration of the Senate before. I have been struggling all day, and indeed for a week, to get this bill before the attention of the Senate.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL'S STAFF.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from New York to allow me to take up a joint resolution from the House of Representatives in regard to General Grant's staff. It will take but a moment. If the Senator will allow me to report it from the Committee on Military Affairs and put it on its passage, I shall be much obliged.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) explanatory of a joint resolution relative to pay of staff officers of the Lieutenant General.

It provides that the joint resolution "relative to the pay of staff officers of the Lieutenant General," approved May 20, 1864, shall be so construed as to entitle all the staff officers on the staff of the Lieutenant General to receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 32) to regulate the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. The fourth section of this bill provides for increasing the salary of the judge of the northern district of New York. That salary now is $2,750. The fourth section of the bill proposes to increase it to $3,500, to add to his salary $750; but a majority of the Judiciary Committee have reported against that increase. I desire that the Senate should disagree to that amendment; and although I bring the subject to the attention of the Senate under very unpropitious circumstances, I believe that if I can have the attention of the Senate for a few moments, I can satisfy them that this section ought to pass.

The northern district of New York contains a population according to the census of 1860 of 2,461,000 inhabitants, more than the State of Ohio, and yet that State has two districts with two judges who receive $5,000 salary together, $2,500 each. The northern district of New York has a population larger than the entire population of the State of Illinois and the State of Michigan put together; and yet Illinois has two districts, the judges of which receive salaries amounting to $6,000, and Michigan has two districts and two judges who receive salaries of $6,000 more. Illinois and Michigan together receive salaries for their judges of $12,000, while the northern district of New York with a population larger than those two States receives only $2,750. The State of Missouri, with a population less than half that of the northern district of New York, has two districts, the judges of which receive salaries to the amount of $5,500.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the mere statement of the case shows that we are entitled to have this salary increased. There are in the northern district of New York twenty-five judges of the supreme court of the State, each of whom receives $3,500; and yet the United States district judge of that district is receiving only $2,750. If I knew of any way in which this salary could be charged upon the State, I would not bring it here; but with the amount of business that is being transacted in that northern district of New York, $2,750 is not at all adequate. The salary ought to be increased. We are fairly entitled to it.

Mr. WADE. Where does the district run?

Mr. HARRIS. It runs from Pennsylvania around to Vermont, with a frontier of nearly five hundred miles, including Buffalo, Rochester, Oswego, and all that northern frontier. The salary that we ask for the judge of that district is no more than the salary of the judge at Chicago, in the northern district of Illinois; precisely the same. If, under the circumstances, this decision of the Judiciary Committee cannot be reversed, I have nothing further to say. I submit it to the Senate upon just this state of facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. This raises a very embarrassing question. The judge of the southern district of Ohio has applied for an increase of his salary, which is but $2,500. He is an eminent and very able man, and although his district may not be so large and populous as the northern district of New York, he lives in a city containing one hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants, where there is an expensive mode of living; and probably his labors are as great and arduous as those of the judge of the northern district of New York. So with the judge of the northern district of Ohio. I think it would be very irksome and unpleasant indeed to raise this salary without increasing the others. I prefer myself to have the matter go over until there can be a general revision of these salaries.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state one further fact to show the character and amount of business of this district. At a recent term held in the city of Rochester there were in attendance six hundred witnesses; the grand jury found nearly one hundred and fifty indictments; and the amount of fines received by the district attorney was nearly twelve thousand dollars, showing that really that district was doing pretty well in the way of collecting fines. There were six hundred witnesses in attendance at a single term of the court.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am really sorry that they commit so many offenses in western New York that we have to resort, as a means of raising revenue, to fining the good people in that section of our Union; but if they are really guilty I suppose it is proper they should be punished. But in the Judiciary Committee we have acted upon a principle in regard to these salaries. There is scarcely a district judge in the United States court in the Union that has not applied for an increase of salary. Many of them have shown by their statements, which I have no doubt are strictly true, that the salaries they receive are inadequate to support them; and really I am not able to meet the argument that is made in favor of the increase of their salaries. I think the salaries of the United States judges ought to be increased, or at least a great many of them. The case of Judge Shipman of Connecticut is a peculiar one: he holds courts in New York city; and there are several other cases that have been brought to the notice of the committee where we thought the salaries were too low. But if we commence raising the salaries we shall have to revise the salaries of all the judges; and we thought that in this time of sacrifice, in this time of war, when men are not only giving up their property but their lives for the maintenance of constitutional liberty and of the Government, even the judges of the courts must make some sacrifices also, and that it would not do to go into this system of raising salaries. The committee acted upon that principle. I cannot meet the argument of the Senator from New York and say that Judge Hall's salary ought not to be more. I should be glad to vote to make it more; but if I were to cast that vote I could not resist voting to raise the salaries of numerous other judges. So that on the whole the committee reluctantly came to the conclusion that it would not be best to touch the salaries of these officers at the present session of Congress. I hope the time will soon come when the currency in which judges and other officers are paid will be better, and when the country will be in a better condition to raise the salaries to what they ought to be to command the talent which is requisite and which we ought to have to fill these high judicial stations.

These are in short the reasons why the committee came to the conclusion that we ought to strike out the provision in this bill which raises the salary of Judge Hall. If this were the only case, if it did not establish a principle, perhaps the Senate would agree to raise this salary; but as this case is not peculiar, as it is that of hundreds of other officers in the land, we think it best to leave them all as they are at present.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise merely for the purpose of saying what is perhaps not as yet known to the Senate, that the Judiciary Committee were not unanimous, and that the want of unanimity did not consist in the mere fact that the honorable member from New York was in favor of the increase of this salary. I was one of the minority, and I came to the conclusion that the salary ought to be raised from personal knowledge in a great measure of the very arduous duties of this judge. It is necessary, by the extent of his district and the number of terms that he is obliged to hold in different places, for him to travel from twenty-one to thirty-two hundred miles a year at very heavy expense. You give him but $2,750, and the district contains a population, as the Senate have heard, of 2,461,000, when the New England States in the mass, excluding Massachusetts, have a population only of 1,904,000, and the United States judges in those States get $10,000. Massachusetts has only 1,231,000 population, and the judge there gets $3,000. Illinois has 1,711,753, and we pay the judges there $6,000. Michigan has a population of 749,112, and we pay $6,000. Missouri 1,182,317, and we pay $5,500. The population of this judicial district, therefore, is greater than the population of either of the districts to which I have adverted, and we are paying less. I hope that the amendment of the committee will not be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very certain that if we raise the salary of Judge Hall it will not equalize the pay of our district judges; there will be as great inequalities then as now; and there will be more dissatisfaction, for it will be said that we have heard one case and decided it, and we are therefore bound to hear others and decide them. Now, sir, I think this salary is too small; I have no doubt that it ought to be raised; I have no doubt that it ought to be raised to the amount named by the honorable Senator from New York, $3,500. I think that the Government of the United States should pay a district judge an amount at least equal to the amount paid by the State to judges of their supreme courts. I think the dignity of a judge of the United States requires that he should at least receive a salary equal to that paid to their judges by the State in which he lives. While I yield all that, and while I grant that Judge Hall is eminently worthy of receiving a competent support and a liberal support from the Government, I still must vote against an increase of this salary now. It will not, as the honorable Senator from Ohio has suggested, do to raise this salary without raising others, and at the present time we are not prepared, and although I would speak modestly in regard to what we can and cannot do, it seems to me that we cannot raise the salaries of these judges to the point that perhaps were it not for our peculiar condition we ought to raise them. I hope, therefore, that the amendment reported by the committee will be concurred in and that this section will be stricken out.

Allusion has been made to the different States and populations, and allusion has been made to New England. I may say in regard to the district judge of my own State, he has a salary of $2,000 only. He performs as much duty, I may be allowed to say, as any judge of any district in the United States. He holds courts as many days and sits as many hours as any judge in the whole United States; and I will add to that, without disparaging certainly any other judge, he performs his duties as well as any other judge, for no decision of his has ever been overruled by a higher tribunal since he has been upon the bench. That is pretty good evidence that he performs his duties well. Now, sir, if we raise the salary of Judge Hall we must raise the salary of Judge Shipman and of a large number of others, perhaps of all the judges in the country. At the present time I think we cannot and ought not attempt to do it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think we ought to consider what the judge in Connecticut or any other State ought to have in connection with this bill. If all the judges were now equal, there would be force in that argument; but they are not now equal; and when Congress is regulating the duties of this judge the question is what ought he to have. Is any Senator prepared to say that $3,500 ought not to be paid for such services as are described in this bill by a judge having to hold courts at a number of very important points and adjudge cases of the greatest magnitude that can arise in the commerce of the country? The judge in Indiana gets $2,500. He holds court at but one place, the capital of the State; it is a pleasant visit to go up there and spend a few weeks. His duties are not arduous, and although that is not a very high salary, still it is an easy office. But it is hard work to hold such courts as are described in this bill; it is an expensive office. The difference between the expenses of the judge in Indiana and the judge that discharges these duties must be $1,000 in money paid out, I should think, in going to these different places twice a year. It is a mere matter of compensation, dollars and cents. He ought to have that much, I cannot think any Senator can doubt who reflects on it.

Mr. FOSTER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Howe, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Davis, Doollittle, Foot, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Van Winkle—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Howard, Nesmith, Richardson, Willey, and Wright—11.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the salary of the district judge of the State of Connecticut be $3,500.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the district judge of Kansas be placed at $2,500. I hope the Senator from Illinois will accept it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President—

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The hour has arrived for the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour has arrived for the special order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that that be informally passed over for five or ten minutes until we get a vote on this bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I demand the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say, by unanimous consent, that this bill is not a bill simply about the salary of this judge; it regulates all the courts in New York. It has passed the House of Representatives, and if we amend the bill we will kill it. I voted against amending it for that reason.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to postpone the special order for half an hour.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope that will not be done.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to—ayes ten, noes not counted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill; which was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 339) to repeal a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department," and for other purposes.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate, being the resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to amend the resolution by inserting—

Mr. SUMNER. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House adjourn their respective Houses for the present session on Thursday, the 30th of June instant, at twelve o'clock m.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to concur in the resolution with an amendment fixing it at Monday, the 4th of July, at twelve o'clock m.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. In determining when to adjourn we may be guided somewhat by the experience of the past. If earlier Congresses, having less to do—ininitely less—than the present Congress, have found it necessary to continue their sessions through the summer, we may ask ourselves if we should be less industrious and less persevering.

I have in my hand a memorandum of the dates of the adjournments of Congress at the long session during the last twenty years. It is most suggestive at least, even if it be not a warning to us.

The first session of the Twenty-Ninth Congress adjourned August 10, 1846. The war with Mexico had just begun. The first session of the Thirtieth Congress adjourned August 14, 1848. The main discussion of this year was on the Wilmot proviso. The first session of the Thirty-First Congress adjourned September 30, 1850. This was the session of compromise. The fugitive slave act bears date September 18 of this year. The first session of the Thirty-Second Congress adjourned August 31, 1852. During this session the compromise measures were much discussed, and Congress was occupied by the presidential question and the platforms of the two great parties. It was as late as 26th August of this session that I had the honor of moving the repeal of the fugitive slave act passed by the previous Congress. The first session of the Thirty-Third Congress adjourned August 7, 1854. This was early for those times. The first session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress adjourned August 30, 1856. Kansas was the constant order of the day during this session. Down to this period there was no adjournment before August, and one Congress sat as late as the 30th September. But a change took place.

In 1856 the old per diem of eight dollars as compensation of Senators and Representatives was transmuted into the present system of compensation by an annual salary of $3,000, be the session long or short. See now what ensued. The first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, which sat immediately after the change of pay, adjourned June 14, 1858; and yet the question of Kansas and the Lecompton constitution occupied this Congress. The first session of the Thirty-Sixth Congress adjourned June 28, 1860. This was on the eve of the presidential election, and Congress was much occupied by the crisis of that historic conflict. Then came the long session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, which adjourned July 17, 1862. This was a remarkable Congress, which has stored the statute-book with monuments of its industry and patriotism. Such is the record of the past, and now it is proposed to adjourn on the 4th of July.

But there are two suggestions with regard to this record of the past, which you will pardon me for making. First, so long as Congress was paid at the rate of eight dollars a day, so that salary depended upon the duration of the session, Congress sat late in the season. It is humiliating to think that a consideration apparently so trivial could have had such an influence, but these are the facts. The other suggestion is of a different character. It appears that while the pretensions of slavery were to be upheld, Congress was willing to give up the whole summer, even into autumn, to the odious theme. For the sake of an execrable fugitive slave act and other kindred measures it bore all these heats which are now so unbearable.

Sir, long ago I began the cry that we of the free States must be as earnest and positive for freedom as our opponents have always been for slavery. Why not imitate their example? Business did not draw them away, heat did not drive them away when slavery was in question. But freedom in every form is now in question. There is your Army, it must be sustained; there are your finances, must they not be sustained also? I might allude also to the great ideas of freedom involved in this war. Much has been done to uphold these, but more remains to be done.

But the question of finances at this moment assumes a practical form. Unless I am misinformed, it is now under discussion in the other House. While they debate an increased taxation we are sitting here at eleven o'clock at night considering how to put an end to the session. That subject, which of all others is the most difficult and delicate, which touches all the great interests of the country, which ought not to be treated in any hasty or perfunctory style, which should be handled always with supremest caution, and which, at the present moment, is almost a question of life and death, is still to be considered by the Senate, and yet Senators are willing, by fixing the hour of adjournment, to "crib and cabin" this most important debate to the limits of a few hours; I would almost say minutes. Why, sir, it has not yet been finally acted on in the other House, and we know not when it can reach us. But we know well that whenever it does reach the Senate the whole vast subject of taxation will be open again. It is understood that the proposition now pending in the other House is for an increased income tax. In other times, when Senators had not such uncontrollable longings for home, such a proposition would have been approached with becoming care. But this is not the only question involved. It has been proposed to tax tobacco in the leaf, and thus add millions to the revenue. And then we have again the perpetually recurring question of a tax of whisky on hand, destined to bring into our exchequer yet other millions.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Have we not considered that?

Mr. SUMNER. That, I understand, at this moment is under consideration in the other House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has it not been under consideration for months?

Mr. SUMNER. Of course it has; but it is under consideration still. The two Houses, as the Senator knows well, have differed on the question. The other House has been for the tax of whisky on hand. The Senate has steadfastly resisted the tax. But it is not too late for the Senate to yield, especially when the necessity of more money is apparent, and the distinguished head of the Treasury—or, let me say, the late head—has, in a formal communication, recommended this very tax. There is no way in which so much money can be got so easily, so justly. Let Congress stay together until the tax is laid. At all events, do not leave without considering it again in the new light. This is my answer to the Senator from Illinois.

But if you are unwilling to tax whisky on hand or tobacco, then find something else to tax. But tax you must. Tax, because of the necessity of the case. Tax, because the people ask to be taxed. For the first time in history the phenomenon has occurred that the people rise up as one man and demand to be taxed. Unless I err greatly, this is the cry from every quarter. I know it is the cry from my part of the country. It is a patriotic cry, because the people believe further taxation to be essential to the national credit and the safety of the country. All honor to the people for this invitation to Congress!

And now Congress is about to leave—to flee away—without performing this essential duty. A tax bill has been passed, which, already before going into operation, is pronounced inadequate by Mr. Chase in an official communication. And yet in the face of this declaration Senators are willing to go home. It is said we need some hundred million dollars more; and yet, in the face of this asserted necessity, and in the face of that generous demand from every part of the country which Congress ought not to hesitate to gratify, it is now proposed that we should abdicate and go home.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator says that there is urgent demand throughout the country for additional taxation. Certainly he must apply those remarks to the northern States, for I have heard no demand in the West to put a tax on leaf tobacco. I believe there is no such demand; I am satisfied there is none. If there is a demand in the northern States for increased taxation, I desire to ask him why he did not vote for the additional tax proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on manufactures?

Mr. SUMNER. I answer, because at the time when it was proposed I thought it was not practicable.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. Let me finish. I will give the Senator from Kentucky a fair opportunity in one moment.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I will answer it.

Mr. DAVIS. The question I ask the honorable Senator is, whether he is not mistaken as to the subject of this great demand of the country; whether instead of being taxed it is not to have slavery abolished everywhere? [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. Unquestionably there is a great demand to have slavery abolished everywhere, thank God; I present petitions daily with this prayer; but another demand of the country at this moment is to make the war practical and efficient by all needed supplies; and, as I have said, the people for the first time in history ask to be taxed.

Mr. DAVIS. Where are your petitions from the people for it?

Mr. SUMNER. Petitions! They will be found in the public press, and in the communications of constituents. Petitions are not needed. Gentlemen have arrived here to-night fresh from the people, who are in themselves more than "petitions." They insist that there must be more taxation. But this is not all. Here is a telegraphic dispatch which I have received this evening, signed by the first business men of Massachusetts, in these words:

To Hon. CHARLES SUMNER:

It will be simply an act of madness for Congress to adjourn without passing bills for large additional taxes, and such other measures as the existing financial crisis demands.

Language could not be stronger. Surely I do not err when I say that Congress ought not to turn a deaf ear to this unprecedented prayer. At least it ought to be considered. For myself, I wish not only to consider it, but to supply the desired taxation, and I ask that Congress shall continue in these seats until the good work is done. Nay, more, sir, I protest against any desertion of these seats until the good work is done.

The great contest in which we are now engaged depends not only upon General Grant in the field, but upon Congress also. If Congress fails to supply the needed means vain is victory, vain are all the toils of many hard-fought fields. It is through these means supplied by Congress that the future is to be made secure. Do not deceive yourselves by saying that you have already taxed the country. The late distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, in an authoritative communication, insists that more means are needed. Do not set him aside without at least considering his recommendation. On such an occasion, when perhaps the life of the country is in question—when surely the national credit is at stake—err, if err you must, on the side of prudence.

Mr. President, it is natural that Senators who have been engaged for months in the labors of an anxious session should be glad to escape from the confinement and heat of Washington. I sympathize with them. I long to go away. I wish to leave Washington. Did I allow myself to take counsel of personal inclinations I should be among the most earnest of those who now cry out for an adjournment. Born on the sea-shore, accustomed to the sea air, I am less prepared than many of my friends to endure the climate here. I feel perceptibly its sultry heats, and I long for the taste of salt in the atmosphere. Nor am I insensible to other influences. What little remains to me of home and friendship is far away from here, where I was born. But home, friendship, and sea-shore must not tempt me at this hour. Lord Bacon tells us in striking and most suggestive phrase, "the duties of life are more than life." But if ever there was a time when the duties of a Senator were supreme above all other things, so that temptation of all kinds should be trampled under foot, it is now.

Mr. WADE. I am satisfied that we ought not at this time to fix a time for the final adjournment. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have a short executive session. We have quite a number of executive messages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. Let us vote on the resolution for adjournment and fix a day. I think it is time we did it.

Mr. POMEROY. We have put it off three or four times. I hope we shall now have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 15, noes 20.

Mr. WILKINSON. What is the question now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the resolution in regard to the final adjournment.

Mr. WILSON. What is the time proposed to be fixed?

Mr. WILKINSON. Twelve o'clock on Monday.

Mr. WILSON. I move to substitute Tuesday. I would not think of adjourning on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend the resolution by striking out "Thursday, the 30th of June, instant," and inserting "Monday, the 4th of July." The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the amendment by striking out "Monday, the 4th," and inserting "Tuesday, the 5th of July."

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WILKINSON. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I do not think that Congress ought to be in haste to adjourn. In my opinion the information we have received during the last two or three days should admonish Congress that there is something yet to be done before it adjourns. It is evident that sufficient, adequate means to carry on the Government have not yet been devised by this Congress. I received a letter only this morning from a collector of internal revenue, who informed me that if the tax upon whisky on hand was not laid by this Congress there would not be a dollar collected for the next thirty months; that there was now a stock on hand sufficient to last thirty months; and in my humble judgment that is true. The question, the simple question, and the only question is, whether the Government of the United States shall have the revenue that can be derived from the increased taxation that is laid upon whisky, or whether this immense amount of money shall go into the pockets of a few speculators who have gathered up the whisky. Formerly I followed the Committee on Finance on this question; but I am satisfied that I have been wrong in this regard; and, in my humble judgment, it would be criminal in the Congress of the United States in this emergency, the greatest emergency that ever visited any nation, to adjourn at this time without providing the ways and means for the suppression of this rebellion. That is my impression.

I should like to get home; I am as anxious to get home as any Senator here; I do not wish to stay here; but, in my humble judgment, it is wrong for Senators, when they have a fixed salary, to adjourn and go home without discharging their full duty to their country, merely because it is a little cheaper to live at home than to live here, or a little more pleasant to be at home than to be here. I have no doubt that the Senate is against me on this proposition, but still I felt it to be my duty to say this much upon this question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I merely rise for the purpose of expressing the hope that the Senate will fix some time of adjournment. If the House of Representatives is engaged at present in the preparation of an additional tax bill, founded upon the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury, most assuredly, if they intend to pass it, they can pass it to-night and send it here, and by Monday at twelve o'clock we can act upon it definitely. Whether it be important for us to remain here for the passage of a bill of that sort is another question. In my judgment it is not important at all.

If we do not act upon this resolution to-night and call it up on Monday at twelve o'clock, gentlemen will oppose fixing a day of adjournment then, and we may remain here for a month longer, business will crowd upon our hands, and we shall have just as much to do then apparently as we have now. Unless we fix some time now, in my honest judgment we shall not adjourn for the next month; we shall never get ready; we shall never come to a point at which we can fix some moment in our own estimation.

Now, upon what is all this matter based in the House of Representatives? My understanding is—and gentlemen can correct me if I am wrong—that one of the collectors in the city of New York suggested to Mr. Chase, the Secretary of the Treasury, after the Congress of the United States have acted upon a tax bill, that that tax bill will not produce as much revenue as was supposed. Am I not correct, that one of the collectors of the city of New York suggested to the Secretary of the Treasury that the tax bill would not produce sufficient revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is not correct. The proposition for an additional income tax was introduced solely for the purpose of meeting the bounties provided for by recent legislation—bounties not contemplated by previous legislation. What the action of the House of Representatives is in regard to other matters I cannot say.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am not talking of the matter that he is talking about. He misunderstands me. The two Houses of Congress came to the conclusion that the tax bill would raise a certain amount of revenue, and a collector in the city of New York takes it upon himself to say that it will not produce as much revenue as was contemplated by the two branches of the national Legislature. He says it will produce only $220,000,000; another officer here connected with the internal revenue says $223,000,000; and upon that, I understand, the Secretary of the Treasury makes his recommendation to increase the tax upon various articles. Who has given this extreme wisdom to the collector of the city of New York? Mr. President, if the two branches of Congress and the members of the two Houses would rely upon their own judgment and rely less upon the judgment of interested officials throughout the country we should do infinitely better. We cannot undertake to impose a tax upon a single article here that we are not beset by individuals who know more about it; and why? Because they are deeply interested in the products upon which we are imposing a tax. Individuals go and speculate in whisky, in tobacco, and in all these articles, and then come to Congress and ask an increase of the tax. The assessors throughout the country—an interested body—meet in Cleveland and they make various suggestions. I am perfectly willing to listen to those suggestions when they are founded on reason and common sense; but they make thousands of suggestions designed and intended simply to increase their own salaries under the law; and so it is with the various collectors all over the country.

Why, sir, a Senator rises and tells us that a collector has informed him that unless a tax be imposed on whisky on hand—about which I care not one fig if the Senate desires to do so—there will not be any revenue collected from the manufacture of whisky for the next thirty months. Do we believe any such thing as that? I assure the Senator there is too much whisky being used in this country to imagine for a moment that the stock on hand will last for thirty months. These interested collectors in various parts of the country, expecting to derive large revenues from their own business, send messages to Congress asking us to do so and so in reference to the taxes of the country, and we, not relying upon our own judgment, listen to the interested suggestions of these men.

Mr. WILKINSON. If the Senator will permit me, the collector to whom I referred collects from eight to nine hundred thousand dollars annually, so that his salary is not enhanced one dime by the increased amount of his collection. The amount already collected by him far exceeds the maximum upon which he is allowed a percentage.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is he a collector in the Senator's own State?

Mr. WILKINSON. No, sir; in the city of New York.

Mr. HENDERSON. In all probability if I could know exactly the situation occupied by this disinterested collector I might find some reason to give for his kind suggestions to Congress.

Mr. President, I care nothing about this tax on whisky on hand. You may levy it. I have been indifferent about it from the beginning. God knows I have never been interested in whisky. I have never in my life owned any more than I could drink, and I drink precious little of it. I know nothing and care nothing about it; but I am not prepared to listen at this hour to the suggestions of every collector throughout the country who may be interested in the dealings of the country.

Sir, I say we have been here long enough. I do not desire any increase of taxation upon the various articles suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury at all. There are other difficulties in the way of our finances besides this. I have suggested those difficulties, and I do not want to repeat them. If we adopt a different system from the system we have been adopting, if we curtail the currency of the country, we shall collect revenue enough under our present tax bill. Let us collect what we can under the present tax laws of the country, and if we can reduce this inflation of the currency we shall raise enough to carry on this war for all time to come. That is the difficulty in our way. It is the difficulty which is growing upon us. We are doing something now, and I hope we may do more, looking forward to a better state of affairs. But, sir, it is not alone in this taxation, it is not alone in suggesting an increase of the tax upon this, that, or the other article that the difficulty is to be remedied.

I desire to fix some time for adjournment. If we cannot fix Monday, let us fix Tuesday. I am indifferent about the day. I would rather fix Monday at twelve o'clock. That will give us time enough. I have heard it stated that probably on Monday morning there would not be a quorum in the House of Representatives; and yet they have got up this evening a new and important tax bill founded upon suggestions sent to us by the Secretary of the Treasury, and those suggestions perhaps founded upon the suggestion of an interested tax collector in the city of New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will correct the Senator again. The bill pending in the House of Representatives is not according to the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury; it is not founded upon the statement of any collector; it is not founded upon any basis that the Senator has argued. It is simply a proposition to levy a tax of five per cent. on incomes to meet the proposed bounties to soldiers under the new enrollment law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand they have added to that also a tax upon whisky on hand.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not in the measure as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means. That has been offered in the form of an amendment, as I understand, by a member who does not belong to that committee. The bill proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means—I saw the bill—is simply a bill to provide for the bounties provided for by the law we have passed to-day. That is the only purpose, the only object of it. It did not raise the points now raised by the Senator from Missouri. They have been put on in the form of amendments proposed by other members from time to time this evening.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not my business at all. I am not responsible for the House of Representatives getting up a different bill from what my friend from Ohio would get up. I have no idea that he would add other articles of taxation to the bill if he had the management of it; but such I understand to be the fact. How does he know that the House of Representatives will not add a tax on leaf tobacco? My friend from Massachusetts suggests that. How does he know that they will add a tax on other articles? The Secretary of the Treasury suggests various articles that should be taxed additionally; and I do not know that the House of Representatives will not do that.

I say, let us adopt a time for adjournment, and if the House of Representatives desire to send us a bill increasing the tax either upon income or upon the products of the soil or upon manufactures, let them get it up at once and send it here. The thing has been discussed and is thoroughly understood. But every moment or two now we take up a new measure, something bringing up a new discussion and something calculated to keep us here in this heat. I say we ought to get through; and it will take us six, eight, or ten days to consider a measure of this sort. I am prepared to vote upon it the very moment the House of Representatives send it to us.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose there is any Senator here who, if his public duties required him to remain, would think of leaving here if he supposed that by being here he could serve the country. Certainly no person is fit to be here who would shirk the responsibility upon him and run away, to the detriment of the public interest. But, sir, what are we doing? At the very time when this resolution came up, we were not discussing a measure to raise money, but we were voting to raise salaries. That is what we were doing—not getting money into the Treasury but getting money out of the Treasury; and we are engaged in the passage of bills, and have been most of the time for several days, that will take large amounts of money out of the Treasury; and you will have other bills of the same sort if you remain here.

Sir, we are doing business in a different way from what I have ever seen it done before near the close of a session. We are refusing to fix any day for adjournment. Gentlemen are protesting against fixing a day; and they say—the Senator from Massachusetts particularly—that a tax measure is pending; the people are clamorous to be taxed. We have been engaged for weeks, perhaps I may say for months, upon this tax question, and now the question of taxing whisky on hand is to be brought up again. Why, sir, I voted steadily for that from the very commencement; I have always been in favor of it; but I was voted down. The House of Representatives has repeatedly passed bills imposing a tax upon whisky on hand and sent them here, and the very Senators who are talking about holding on here for the purpose of putting a tax upon whisky on hand were the very ones that voted not to do it.

Mr. SUMNER. I was not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts was not; but there was a very large and decided majority of the Senate opposed to it; and now you will sit here, forsooth, to see if the House of Representatives will not send you another bill to tax whisky on hand that you may again vote it down. Is anybody proposing to change his vote on that subject?

Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the Senator from Minnesota voted with us when it was last here. His vote was overruled. We would only have his vote again. We were not able to carry it before and will not be again.

Mr. SUMNER. We shall have more the next time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know about that. Where are the recruits? Let us see somebody who voted against taxing whisky on hand who is now going to vote for it.

Mr. CONNESS. I am one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If we can get enough we can put the tax on in a few minutes. I am glad we are getting converts to the true doctrine; but I am sorry they should want to hold Congress through this hot weather to be converted. I hope it is not the terror of hot places that has brought about this change of opinion, but cool and deliberate consideration.

Mr. CONNESS. I never knew that preachers abused their converts after making them. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not at all. I am praising the converts. I hope we may have more of them.

But really it does seem to me that we had better fix upon some day for adjournment, because I do not think we are doing any good by the legislation that is going on. The very business that we are engaged in is not to raise money, but rather to expend money and to appropriate it. We have passed several such bills to-night, and hundreds of thousands of dollars will be taken out of the Treasury by the legislation of this very day. I hope we may have a vote and agree to a day of adjournment.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Massachusetts gives as a reason for a postponement of the day for adjournment that the House of Representatives is putting a tax upon whisky on hand and on leaf tobacco.

Mr. SUMNER. I said the House was now considering the tax on income, and besides that I understood it had under consideration the question of taxing leaf tobacco and whisky on hand. Those questions, I have been informed by gentlemen who have come in from the House of Representatives this evening, are actually under consideration. Whether the House will adopt the tax on those articles or not, I know not; but it is sufficient that they are now under consideration, and I think the Senate ought to take them into consideration also, especially when we have a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury saying that additional means are needed. I am unwilling to go home in the face of that communication without doing all that I can to supply them.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken in his recitation of facts. The House have determined, as I understand, to send the income tax bill here as a naked proposition. Certainly, that being the case, there is nothing to prevent our adjourning on Monday at twelve o'clock. I am the last Senator—I presume my brother Senators would concede that to me—the very last Senator who would leave my post. But, sir, I believe that every moment we remain here now is pregnant with mischief; that we are doing legislation that is really mischievous. The business is increasing; new bills have been introduced here to-night, and they will continue to be introduced. There is no Senator here but will bear witness to the fact that more business is done within the few hours preceding an adjournment after the adjournment is fixed, than in weeks and months previous. That is my experience. You cannot get members down to their work until the day for adjournment is fixed, and they can see that day close at hand.

Nine months is a long time to be away from one's home and family, and it is especially injurious, I think, to the country to keep us here doing mischievous legislation when there are a presidential election and senatorial elections pending. I am frank about this. I want to get home. I want to get home because my work is done here.

Mr. HOWE. Is it done at home?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. No; it is yet to be done there.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall adjourn to-night without fixing any time for the final adjournment; but if we are to fix a time, I hope that we shall fix it at least as late as Tuesday next.

The Senator from Kansas tells us that we are not accustomed to engage in the business that we are here to transact until we fix and know the time we are to adjourn. Well, sir, we have been at work here for two months, night and day. I think this Congress for the last two or three months has labored as diligently as any Congress in the history of the Republic. It is now nearly twelve o'clock on Saturday night. The House of Representatives is considering a tax bill to meet the demands of a measure we have passed to-day for calling soldiers into the field. When are we to act upon it here? Are we to meet here on Monday morning at eleven o'clock and settle a great question of that kind before twelve o'clock on that day? It is an impossibility; it cannot be done.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Why not meet at nine o'clock or seven o'clock on Monday? I am willing to sit here all night.

Mr. WILSON. I do not believe the Senate will do that. Besides, we ought to go into executive session to-night.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I want to go into executive session to-night.

Mr. WILSON. If Senators desire to sit here through the night and wait until we get that tax bill and act upon it, then, when we have acted upon that measure, I am ready to fix the hour for adjournment; but while that measure is pending I am opposed to fixing any hour; at any rate, to fixing an hour so early as twelve o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Why adjourn at all? Why not continue in session?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that we are crowded to that extent. We have been here a great deal of time during the last few weeks; and I know that we are all anxious to get home.

The Senator tells us that a presidential election is pending. I think the less we have to do with the presidential election for the next two months the better; and the less we have had to do with this last winter and spring the better it was for us. We are told the country is to take care of all that. It will do very well for me to go into the presidential election about the 1st of September. When our armies are in the field and all thoughts and hearts are upon them, I do not want to see a long, drizzling presidential contest; I have no heart for it at all.

Now, sir, I believe candidly that this hot haste we have here to adjourn and go home—

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose we fix Monday at twelve o'clock for an adjournment, and the House of Representatives do not get through with the measure they have now under consideration, will not the House be equally patriotic as ourselves? Will they not refuse to accept our amendment to this resolution? This resolution must go back to the House; we cannot adjourn without their action; and we can trust something to the House of Representatives. They will be as patriotic as ourselves.

Mr. WILSON. We have any quantity of messages hurrying us up; we have been told that after such hours of this very day we would not have a quorum; but I believe there is still one left. There is no security, however, that there will be a quorum there on Monday at twelve o'clock if we now fix that hour for the final adjournment. Everybody understands that fixing the hour of adjournment at twelve o'clock on Monday next means that nothing shall be done on Monday next. Senators acquainted with the mode of doing business here will know that to be so.

If we had that tax bill before us and it was acted upon, I would hasten away from here as soon as anybody else; but I believe that our duty is here and now, and to stand here and remain in Congress until that tax measure is settled by the vote of the House of Representatives, and, if favorably, until we settle it here. In spite of all the estimates that have been made in regard to the amount of revenue to be derived from the internal tax bill in Congress and out of it the people of this country have come to the conclusion that it will not raise the money which the exigencies of the country require. Every practical man in the country believes it, and men of intelligence and character are telegraphing and writing to us to pass immediate legislation on the subject. The Secretary of the Treasury proposed a tax of eighty or ninety million dollars. We do not touch that, but we passed a bounty bill that is to cost us before we meet again from twenty-five to sixty million dollars at least, and now it is proposed to lay a tax to pay these additional expenses that we have put upon the country.

I do not believe our people want to see us at home until we have settled these things. I know that I shall meet no welcome if we hasten away from here and go home and leave a question of that kind undone. The public press of the country is unanimous against this hasty adjournment of Congress, and the public press of the country expresses the deep-settled sentiment of this country; for say what we may about failures since this war commenced, there has been more failure in the Thirty-Eighth Congress than anywhere else since the war commenced. These tax measures, that we all admit are now inadequate, everybody says ought to have been passed some four or five months ago. I do not wish to say this to put any blame upon anybody; but there is a feeling in the country that we have not done what ought to have been done, and we did not do it when it ought to have been done. The public voice of the country, as expressed by the public press of the country, is not very flattering to the action of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. I have no doubt there is a great deal of injustice done us; for with the exception of the Thirty-Seventh Congress—a Congress that sat more hours and did more work and did more great acts for the country and for the cause of mankind than any Congress since the Congress that made the Declaration of Independence—I say, with the exception of that Congress, no Congress has worked so many hours as this; but it has not been quite so fortunate as it ought to have been in timing all its measures.

Now, sir, I am opposed to this adjournment on Monday next. I am opposed to fixing to-night the hour of adjournment until I know what we are to do with that tax bill; but if we are to fix the hour, I hope it will be, at any rate, as late as Tuesday at twelve o'clock, so that we will have Monday to work for the country if need be.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall support the proposition to adjourn on Monday, and I do not know what authority Senators have to say that we are adjourning in hot haste. This is the second or third resolution for adjournment that the House of Representatives have sent to this body. No response has been made to the House. The resolutions of the House from time to time have been allowed to lie on the table unnoticed and uncared for, so far as this body is concerned, until the present time. Who says this is hot haste? The committees have made their reports and are ready to close up their business to-night.

Mr. President, I think the real interests of the country require the adjournment of Congress; and I say it with the very greatest respect to the Senators who have charge of the policy of the Government. When we met here last December there was something like stability in trade; there was something like uniformity of prices; the commercial world knew something of what it was up to. I ask any Senator if that is the case now? When we met gold was worth 160; it is now from 200 to 270. No man can tell what it is worth. No man can tell the value of anything in the country; and why? Because there has been no stability in the legislation of Congress. As I had occasion to say some weeks ago, the commercial world is afraid to see the American Congress in session; and why? Because we do not stand by any policy.

We have passed, I believe, two internal revenue bills: one was confined to whisky, I admit, and the other was the general internal tax bill. We have passed two tariff bills: one a bill increasing the tariff fifty per cent. for sixty days; the other was the general tariff law. We have passed two laws to regulate the price of gold, under both of which gold went up and went down according to accidents. I ask Senators if to-day the commerce of the country is not in a worse condition because of this action of Congress, if the entire trade of the country is not deranged because of the instability of our legislation? And at this late hour, when it was expected that we would adjourn, a revenue bill is introduced into the House of Representatives, and it is expected that we will take up the third revenue measure and pass it.

Senators say we must have money to support the war. True, we must; but if we have this war supported and the Government maintained we must have a healthy trade at home; we must have commerce pursuing its channels undisturbed by uncertain legislation. Does the manufacturer know to-day what to rely upon? Does the producer of any of the great commodities know to-day what to rely upon? He acts upon legislation which bears upon his interest, supposing it is to remain for some time, and before he has exhausted the stock with which he has supplied himself the policy of the Government is changed. When we met here the tax upon whisky was twenty cents, and men were carrying on that great interest amounting to millions of dollars every month with the understanding that there would be a reasonable increase. Then Congress raised it to sixty cents a gallon, and the traders of the country supposed that that was to be the policy of the country. They had a right to suppose it was to be the policy of the Government. They had a right to suppose that the committees having charge especially of the revenue had considered the question before they threw out upon the country the new measure. Then the House of Representatives says it shall be a dollar, and the Senate says from a dollar to a dollar and a half. A committee of conference is appointed, and that committee says it shall be a dollar and a half to two dollars. The trade is going on. There is no regularity, no stability in our trade.

I ask Senators if this is for the good of the country, if it is for the support of the Government? This Government in its finances has got to rest upon firm trade at home. If you break up men by instability of legislation you withdraw from the Government that firm support which it must have if this war is to be prosecuted any great length of time. Do Senators doubt this? My judgment is that the earliest adjournment is for the good of the country. If we would adopt a policy and stand by it, it is not so important what that policy shall be. It is not so important whether the tax upon manufactures shall be five or seven or ten per cent., or whether the tax upon whisky shall be fifty cents or $1 50; it is not so important what it shall be, but what it is to be ought to be permanent and stable, that the trade of the country may not continually be disturbed in this way. I am in favor of an immediate adjournment.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not agree with my friend from Indiana. I am myself disposed to look all our necessities carefully in the face and view all that belongs to legislation in aid of administration required by the present emergency. I do not again agree with the gentlemen who are adverse in opinion altogether, as to the necessity of this proposed increase of taxation. I do not believe that it is necessary to assess the extraordinary tax asked for by the letter of the late Secretary of the Treasury. I have never believed in the philosophy of his policy, able man as he has been and is. In my judgment we are really rather unnecessarily overtaxing ourselves; and in affirming this proposition of course I shall have to assert something like a plausible reason for it or be held to use language improperly.

A condition of war in any country may be called an abnormal condition as against the condition of peace, calling that normal, and using these words as applicable to the condition of the Republic. There are rules that belong to one condition and rules that belong to the other. In a healthy, natural, and legitimate growth and conduct of the Republic our expenses as a Government should not exceed at the present day over $80,000,000. Properly and economically administered, this Government, war aside, should not exceed the charge of $80,000,000 of appropriation per annum. We are in a state of war, which involves our drawing upon our internal and extraordinary resources to the extent of the immediate exigency. How shall it be done? There are various ways in which it may be done; but it may be best summed up, without going into any lengthy argument, in the sum of the regular interest the Government is able to pay upon a given liability; that is, her present capacity to pay the interest upon the debt with which she seeks to charge herself, the Government, having relation to the money and the credit of the world. We now at this present day stand charged with less than $75,000,000 per annum responsible for $80,000,000 per annum on interest account. The securities that this Government could afford would command par at Hamburg, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and the places where money is exchanged in Europe.

Mr. CONNESS. Will my colleague give way to allow me to make a motion that when we adjourn it be to meet at a certain hour on Monday morning?

Mr. McDUGALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-night it be to meet at half past nine o'clock on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to considering the motion of the Senator from California?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object until we settle the other question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered at the present time.

Mr. McDUGALL. With the known capacity of this Government to pay an interest account of $150,000,000—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him; but I desire to make an appeal to my friend from Illinois to withdraw his objection to the motion of the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS.] It is now twelve o'clock, the beginning of Sunday; and I hope he will allow us to fix an earlier hour for meeting on Monday than usual. If we do not now fix the time at half past nine o'clock or some other time we will adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; let us meet at eleven. That is the usual hour.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think it is worth while, so long as the Senate refuses to fix any day for an adjournment, to be meeting here at nine o'clock in the morning. I am opposed to any such thing until we fix a day for adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from California will resume his remarks.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have been bold enough within my internal consciousness to differ with the policy of the late Secretary of the Treasury, the policy that has been administered here with us, in this, that we have not, in undertaking to handle our finances, related ourselves to the capital of the moneyed and commercial world. We can afford to pay interest not only for $80,000,000 but twice $80,000,000, pay it in gold and silver, and deliver it at the banking-houses on the Continent and in London. We can do more than is required by the present taxes that are assessed on our people. We have taxes that will answer our interest account; we have taxes that will pay our legitimate normal expenses, and we have taxes then to make a large sinking fund to meet ultimate results. When we can put $100,000,000, as the present taxes show, as a sinking fund, with our present indebtedness, and perhaps $75,000,000 on what may be called ultimate indebtedness, pay our interest, pay our normal expenses, and then have a sinking fund equivalent to $75,000,000, we are not in any unhealthy condition. We are overtaxing our people without any necessity in the philosophy of politico-economical science, or by any rule of economical finance.

I wish to produce these things not so much that they will involve a conclusion on the part of Senators; but I desire to say that when our revenue pays our interest and a large surplus of our interest, and we derive an income over and above our normal expenditures and a surplus of $100,000,000 to meet accidents or to meet the contingencies in the period of time to take up the burden that has been suddenly thrust upon us, we are in a more healthy condition than England ever was in any time of war.

I am disposed to sympathize with the remarks made by the Senator from Ohio not long since on the floor of the Senate. We do not know our strength, and we have not measured it by the rules and laws that determine the strength of a people. But if we do not administer that strength properly, if we administer it unwisely, if we tax when taxation is not necessary, we paralyze our people. This extraordinary addition of taxation tends toward the disease called paralysis. There is no occasion for it, so that we are able to pay the interest upon our debt, so that we stand upon the basis of normal expenditure, and then have a reasonable surplus which tends toward the extinguishment of indebtedness as soon as we are relieved from our abnormal condition.

We are not to be forever at war. Some time the angel will descend upon us breathing peace. It must come soon, or else there will be long and continuous war; but we must assume in the philosophy of administration and in the philosophy of legislation that peace is something to be achieved, and there must be an end of this great expenditure. In the estimates that have been presented from the various Departments of the Government this has been assumed and calculations have been made upon it. The trouble has been that in this assumption they have related themselves to their present contingencies and not to the true law of relations between the property resources of the country and the facilities that the moneyed and commercial world afford. When this is done, whenever the time comes that it can be done by some sufficient person, we shall have but little trouble about our finances, and the currency of the United States issued by authority of law can be soon made gold and silver.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Will the Senator from California give way to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. McDUGALL. No, sir; I will not. I am on the floor and shall occupy but a short time.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It is after twelve o'clock.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am speaking in a good cause, and I am not violating the Sabbath.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. McDUGALL. I will not.

Mr. RAMSEY. Let us adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. McDUGALL. I think no better service can be rendered to the great Master of us all, even on the Sabbath day, than the maintenance of the truth, particularly with regard to the great questions that involve the interest of our nation.

I say these things for the reason that I hold it is not important that we add to the taxation already imposed; and having said this much, and yielding now to the over-anxiety and the undue anxiety of persons who, if in office, do not, in my judgment, feel the responsibility of office, I shall close my remarks in a very brief observation without extending my argument to its ultimate conclusion.

I know that it is valueless to undertake to engage in counsel with those who will not listen to counsel. When Senators against me offer counsel my ears are open. I will listen to them from morning until high noon, from noon until midnight, and then again from midnight until high noon, if it be for the interest or tends to subserve the interest of the country which I have undertaken to take, in part, charge of.

I repeat that the present tax bills are sufficient, administered with a wise economy, with a sound policy, and with a just understanding of our resources, our capabilities, and our material to the commercial and moneyed influences of the world.

But, sir, I must say this thing of hurrying an adjournment and casting over the legitimate business of legislation because men are anxious to get home, because men are anxious to escape from the place where the Government convenes, is a wrong on the part of the representatives in this Hall and in the other Hall, and every other place where men have official duties. As long as there was business to be done I would rather sit here every day of the three hundred and sixty-five days and a fraction and do what should be done. My own opinion is that to close up our business properly we should sit here longer than the time denominated. I think we cannot well dispose of our present business carefully before some time on Wednesday morning. I shall vote for the latest hour denominated, not moving one myself; but it will not be because I think we need to add to our present taxation, for I am confident in the opinion that we are now already overtaxing ourselves beyond the necessities demanded by a well-considered administration of our finances.

Mr. SUMNER. It is now Sunday morning, a quarter of an hour after midnight. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. Let us settle this question.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE.]

Mr. SUMNER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Before the vote is taken I desire to say that I have just been informed that the tax bill, as it is called, in the House of Representatives has been defeated by four majority, and there can, therefore, be no reason for us remaining longer than Monday.

Mr. CONNESS. It appears to me that if there was no reason before there is a great reason now for not fixing the time for adjournment at noon on Monday. Senators talk here as if adjourning were the main question, and legislation, the providing by taxation for the support of the Government, the mere incident. It is not my office nor my disposition to lecture the Senate nor to assume any such manner; but I do plead with and implore Senators, if they must fix a time for adjournment, to put it so distant that this great problem can be grappled even at this late period and mastered successfully.

I hope that the desire of the Senator from Kansas to engage in presidential elections or senatorial elections will not control him nor control the Senate. It is apparent to us that some Senators are not disposed to pass any more tax bills. There are Senators here who have not voted for any tax bills during the session. There was always a reason good enough to them to withhold their votes from bills providing for the support of the Government. Surely Senators charged with carrying on this Government and with sustaining the Administration that carry it on will not vote with them to adjourn this Congress with the confession made that there has been insufficient provision for sustaining the great war that is upon us.

I hope, Mr. President, that we shall adjourn to-night without fixing any time for the final adjournment. There is not a Senator here so anxious as I am myself to go from this city. I have not been out of the city, nor out of the Senate any considerable part of a day, since the session began. But, sir, I would wait here and forego every desire to reach home or friends or to transact private business until the demands the country makes upon us are first met. It is for the performance of those duties in this way and manner that we are here. It was with the pledge, either direct or implied, that we would thus perform those duties, irrespective of our own personal considerations, that we sought the great offices we hold and accepted them. Sir, we cannot retreat from this city at this time upon the plea of personal comfort or personal consideration with credit to ourselves or with the highest performance of duty, in my opinion. I hope, therefore, that we shall adjourn until Monday, that we may have an opportunity to meet and to deliberate upon the views of the recent Secretary of the Treasury, and the views of the present, or prospective, head of that Department, and that we shall in a manful manner remain here for a week or two weeks longer, if it shall be necessary.

It is not true, in my opinion, that we have done nothing. It never happens that any popular deliberative body, made up of two Houses, if you please, coacting with each other, proceed with exact regularity and complete wisdom during the whole period of their sessions. I believe this Congress has done much, but I believe that if it leaves this work uncompleted by an immediate adjournment it will do less than it might have done and less than it should do. What is a week of our time? We are paid for it; we are compensated for being here; the country is entitled to all our time. But we are met by being told that we are doing mischief. What is the mischief that we have done?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the Senator that we have to-day done some mischief by providing for the payment of $60,000,000 of bounty, and now the House of Representatives refuse to provide the means to pay the very bounties they have said by law should be paid.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator from Ohio was it mischief to pass an act by which our armies shall be replenished?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all; but I answer that in my judgment the time has come when every Senator should have been willing to meet a plain and imperative draft, without evasion or equivocation, without the payment of bounties, or throwing the burden upon other communities or portions of the people—a plain, positive draft, by which our people from every portion of the country might have been compelled to enter the military service and render military service in this time of need without the payment of bounties and without any of these evasions that have been incorporated on the enrollment law. I say now that in my deliberate judgment the law we passed to-day is much worse for this country than any failure in Congress to pass any measures whatever of a financial character. It seems to me the saddest thing that could possibly happen at the close of this session that we should to-day have provided for the payment of $60,000,000 of bounties within the next sixty or seventy days under our law, and yet that we should refuse now to provide a small tax to pay for those bounties, and thus throw this burden with the accumulation of other burdens upon the Treasury of the United States at a time when we are told by the recent Secretary of the Treasury that our present system of taxation is totally insufficient.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator and myself, I believe, have agreed upon the exact statement of facts that he has made of policy. I have said from the beginning that it was the duty of the Government, it was its right, to demand the services of as many of its people as it required for its defense. But, sir, we have not all been able to take that view of the case, and finally an act has been passed, as acts are always passed by legislative bodies, being a compromise of views, which involves, as the Senator from Ohio says, many millions of dollars as bounties. It were better that we agreed to give those bounties and that this Congress should even adjourn without making the provision that I am told one branch has to-night refused, than that this Army of ours down here with the eyes of the world upon it should be depleted and have to retreat before the foe of the country. The alternative, on the other hand, if we had not passed that act was terrible to contemplate.

Mr. President, I took occasion in some remarks in the Senate not long ago, in referring to the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to use this language: "It appears to me that the Senator from Massachusetts is endeavoring to reason away the courage of the people." I thought so then; I think so now; not that that was the Senator's intention; far from it; but I think the policy really was that in effect. When I heard that Senator and others talk about making the draft easy, about the people not standing it here and the people not standing it there, I began to feel that if it were true the people were undeserving of a country, or else, if it were not true, the Senator who spoke the words performed an act that was a crime against the country.

But, sir, although the act to which the Senator from Ohio refers was not acceptable to me in many respects, I gave it my vote reluctantly, and yet gladly, because some act repealing the commutation clause appeared to be a necessity if we are to maintain ourselves in this great struggle. It finally carried bounties with it, making an indebtedness of additional millions; and now I appeal to the Senator from Ohio, and to all other Senators who are charged with the conducting of this Administration, whether they will agree to go away from here without provision being made for that indebtedness. It is not fair to conclude because the House of Representatives have refused to adopt an additional tax in one form that they will not adopt it in another. Let the members of that body who feel charged with the burden and responsibility of this Government meet in caucus; let them meet in counsel—that is the better word—and let them determine what they will do, and then let them stay here and perform that important work.

Why, sir, I hold in my hand a bill for the survey and sale of the mineral lands which, if this Congress remains in session for a week, or even for two days, I shall ask them to pass. I consent to it as the representative of a great mining region where the policy is not a popular policy. I consent to it for two reasons, and shall ask its passage if you, Senators, remain here. The two reasons are these: first, that within a year it will bring in millions of dollars into your Treasury; and, next, because I believe that the greatest happiness of a people connects itself with the ownership of the soil. There can be no happiness, no society, no education, no true freedom in any country where its population are not owners of the soil.

There are ways and means that we can provide; there are ways and means that we can originate; there is ability enough in this Congress; and I think, if you will permit me to say so, that the path of duty is plain. But Senators talk of going away from here. "When shall we get away?" is the word. "Why do you keep us here?" is the word. Why, sir, there is not a Senator who was not glad of the opportunity when his State sent him here to receive the commission. There is no work or labor here, no matter what the circumstances may be, that should oppress or burden a manly spirit while the country requires service. Why, sir, what we do is not labor compared to what those gallant men belonging to the poor, burdened, common masses of the people are now doing before Petersburg and Richmond.

Mr. President, I am sometimes led to think that all the effort that is made by society to elevate all mankind up to the highest scale of intellectual ability and culture is really questionable in its policy; and why? Because your men of intellect and refinement will not make the sacrifices necessary to great ends. As I stood in yonder street about a month ago and saw Burnside's column passing, tens of thousands of whom would never return, as I marked their countenances and passed through them I could not help thinking it was a God's blessing that we had common people in the land; I could not help thinking that the moral and intellectual inequalities of mankind were as plainly necessary to great and noble ends as the physical inequalities of the earth's surface are to the maintenance of proper conditions there.

I tell you, sir, that when we talk of making sacrifices by staying here we talk words that are not serious and are not truths. No man makes a sacrifice by staying here, and no man should think of leaving this place while there is any work to be done. I suggest, I advise, I entreat the Senators who must stand together and maintain each other in maintaining this Administration not to divide and subdivide and vote to leave here until they shall meet in council and adjourn in order when their work shall be done. I, indeed, feel backward in making these suggestions and remarks; but, sir, in addition to the disposition to remain here to do this work, it would be no great amount of credit to us if we each of us felt that when our work was done here our place was in the front and before the enemy. But, as I before observed, intellectual and moral training and culture seem not to fit mankind for great deeds; they seem not to make up the great, the bold, and the true; but they seem rather to seek places of distinction and personal comfort and ease where they shall be looked upon with consideration, that too often, I fear, they do not deserve.

Mr. CHANDLER obtained the floor.
Mr. McDOUGALL. I hope the Senator will allow me to say a word.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield for a moment. I trust the Senator will take no time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to make but one remark. I had thought myself that there was an office for a Senator and for every Senator. My colleague has advised me that I have no office here, and that the business of the administration, of the conduct of this body, should be determined in a council, which he uses as the complement of a caucus of certain persons belonging to this body, and I am afraid I am not one of them; consequently, it will be as well that I should adjourn immediately at the present moment and take no part or place in the consideration that belongs to the deliberations of this Senate Chamber. That may be good law in its way, but I am compelled to say I think it is a very bad way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] and likewise with the Senator from California, and trust that no day will now be fixed for the final adjournment of this body. The conscription law which has been passed, in my judgment, is one of the worst laws ever gotten up by Congress. It pays bounties and is called an easy law. Mr. President, there can be no conscription law that is an easy law. War is rough; it is hard; it is hard to bear in all its portions; and when Senators and Representatives undertake to make conscription easy they undertake to do an impossible thing. They have voted many millions of dollars upon the Treasury at a time when the Treasury cannot afford to bear those millions. Gold, I am happy to inform you, has fallen one hundred per cent. within twenty-four hours.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a mistake.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; it was 290 yesterday and is 192 to-day. Gold has fallen nearly one hundred per cent. within twenty-four hours; and if we, the Congress of the United States, meet this crisis as men, you will see gold fall within the next ten days from 192, where it stands to-day, to a very low figure.

Now, sir, what do we propose to do? To fix a day to adjourn the Congress of the United States; and what is our present position? Our armies are facing the enemy; our armies are prepared, in my judgment, to crush that enemy, to grind him to powder. If they fail, what then? If they fail the Congress of the United States should be in session, and, if necessary to put down this accursed rebellion, order out the number of men required to do it, and, if it be necessary, order a levy en masse to accomplish it, and let Senators and Representatives lead the van; and I am prepared to shoulder my musket and march into the front ranks. Sir, this is no time for Congress to adjourn. We should meet the responsibilities of the day and of the hour, meet them like men, and meet them like brave men whether we are brave or not.

Mr. President, we are in a financial crisis. We know not to-day, while we propose to fix the hour of adjournment, whether we have a Secretary of the Treasury or not. We know not to-day, and the country knows not, whether we may not be called upon within the next twenty-four hours to confirm another Secretary of the Treasury. I trust in God the man whom we have confirmed will accept. The country has confidence in him; the Senate has confidence in him; and I hope he will accept the portfolio; but he may not; we know not; he was not prepared to-night to say what his action would be.

Why should we adjourn at this time? We are paid by the year, an annual salary, and are supposed to be in session from one end of the year to the other; and yet we are here in great haste to adjourn. There is not a member of this body as anxious as I am to leave this city; there is not a man in this body who makes as great financial and personal sacrifices to remain here as I do; but I consider it my duty to remain, and to remain until the business that the country has sent us here to perform is completed, wholly completed, and as long as the demands of the country keep us here, and no longer; for I will not stay one hour after that.

I trust we may be able to leave here next week, and early next week. I shall be glad to vote to adjourn next week. But, sir, the late Secretary of the Treasury has informed us that the taxes are not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Treasury. I believe they are not, and I believe that it is our duty to hold the other House until they will meet the requirements of the hour. If they will not meet them to-day, let them meet them next week; if they will not meet them next week, let them meet them next month; and if they will not meet them next month, hold them until the 4th of March, 1865. That is what I would do, and I would stay here in perpetual session until they met the requirements of the hour.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There will not be a quorum there soon.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; let them send the Sergeant-at-Arms after the absentees and bring a quorum by force. Let there be no shirkers in either House.

Mr. President, the life of this nation is at stake to-day. The enemies of this Government believe that the Government is lost; the friends of the Government believe that it cannot be lost. I believe, and I think every member of this body believes, that this great nation is to be saved regardless of expense and regardless of sacrifices of any kind whatever. Sir, much blood has been shed in this cruel war; it may be necessary to shed much more; and it is for this Congress to decide whether the thinned ranks of our armies shall be filled and filled with soldiers, or whether they shall be left thinned and be compelled to retire before the traitorous foe. I trust, sir, that this Senate will meet the emergencies of the hour.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall not adjourn to-night until we have fixed a day for the final adjournment. Evidently here is talking against time and to take up time. I hope we shall sit it out and see whether we can fix a day of adjournment or not.

Mr. CONNESS. The statement of the honorable Senator from Illinois that there is talking against time is entirely gratuitous on his part.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know what the Senator from California made his speech for unless it was talking against time.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not make it for the edification of the honorable Senator.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to make one remark. It is now Sabbath morning. There is no public emergency that I am aware of that requires us to sit on the Sabbath, and I therefore hope that the motion to adjourn until Monday will be carried. If there was a public emergency requiring it, I of course would consent to sit, but I know of none.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Sherman, Sumner, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. As I think we shall wait until we hear the decision of the House of Representatives on the vote that is now going on, I propose to occupy the attention of the Senate for a few moments.

The criticisms of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from California I think very unkind toward the gentlemen who are desirous to fix a day of adjournment. There is no disposition on the part of any Senator that I know of to adjourn this body while there is a hope of passing a bill to supply the money for the payment of the bounties called for by the new enrollment bill. We made the motion to take up this resolution early in the day, postponed it until nine o'clock this evening, and then again postponed it until eleven, and we are not pressing it now; we are awaiting the action of the House. The idea of Senators assailing their brother Senators for a want of patriotism because in their opinion it is best for the public interest that a day should be fixed for the adjournment, seems to me to be very unkind. We claim to be as patriotic as the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from California, as willing to make as many sacrifices as either of them, as bold to meet the enemies of the country as they dare be. The idea of Senators claiming all the patriotism and all the courage does not seem to me to be very kind toward their brother Senators.

I said that my experience was that the business of a legislative body was hastened by fixing a day of adjournment. That has been my experience, and I suppose there is no Senator on this floor who will deny the proposition. It is not to neglect the business of the country, but to prevent mischievous results. I believe it would be beneficial to the country if this Congress was adjourned, for it is embarrassing to the Administration. We are visiting these Departments, claiming their attention day by day and hour by hour, when, in my opinion, they could devote themselves much more usefully to the country. We go into the War Department for appointments and beset the President for places.

At the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] I will close my speech here, and move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I second that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope we shall not adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope I may be allowed to state that I understand they are taking the yeas and nays in the House of Representatives on the passage of the joint resolution for an additional income tax, and it will be here in five minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object to discussion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Foot, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Sherman, Sumner, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howe, Howard, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I now renew my motion for an executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. Let us have a vote on the final adjournment.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I suppose I can finish my speech.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course you can; but I hope the Senator from Kansas is not taking up time. Let us fix a day for adjournment and then go into executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose we mean to wait here until that joint resolution comes from the House of Representatives, and then we can fix an hour for the adjournment. In the mean time I would just as lief hear some Senator make a pleasant speech about literature or the adjournment or anything else. If that joint resolution should come to us to-night I suppose we can pass it at once, as we have already acted on the subject-matter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Just by this way of making speeches we have been kept here three or four hours by gentlemen who insist that Congress shall remain here, and are making speeches to take up the time. I think we had better get a vote and fix the day of adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I renew the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the question of whether the adjournment shall be on Tuesday or Monday, I am opposed at the present time to changing it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was advised of that by the President a moment since. It is unnecessary that it should be suggested again, my memory not being very infirm. I have not been able to see the impinging importance of going into the consideration of executive business. I am sure that the mover assigns no particular reason for having made the motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator will allow me I will give the reason. I made the motion in perfect good faith. There is on the table some executive business that must be disposed of before we adjourn. I beg the Senator to let us have a vote upon the motion.

Mr. MORRILL. There are some messages there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am inclined to think that is what they call an "artful dodge," and that there is really no grave occasion for embarking in executive session.

Mr. President, it is said that in a multitude of counsels there is safety; but I have rather been inclined to think that in the multitude of counselors there is confusion, and that is the better text of the two. My friends who are about me, many of them, advise me to go into executive session, and many of them say no. I am very much disposed to do as I please and take my own counsel, and about that there will be very little confusion, because I will do very much as I please as long as I have the floor and I am permitted by the President of the Senate. We have some business here that might as well be transacted without the labor of going into executive session for the simple purpose of coming out again, and I am inclined to think that we might as well go along and transact our business without any great regard for the dodges that are practiced most successfully in the House of Representatives and that I do not think ought to obtain and be really an established law in the Senate Chamber. I am informed that some important business will probably be delivered to us in a moment or two. My information comes from a person of high authority; he is chief of the Indian Committee of this body, and the Indians are full of high instincts, and instinct is known to be higher than reason. What the Senator from Wisconsin says is so I must admit to be true, on the ground both of instinct and reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of proceeding to the consideration of executive business debate is indulged in only to a limited extent.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am alleging reasons why we should not go into executive session, the greatest reasons I can conceive of. It is very difficult at the present time to conceive of any reasons which would lift the Capitol out of its firm seat on the hill; but still proximate considerations are within the limit of debate. I am inclined to think it is not worth our while to go into executive session, and that rather than do that we had better sit down and take a smoke.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Sherman, Sumner, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the further consideration of the resolution fixing the day of adjournment be postponed for half an hour. ["No, no."] I desire to state to the Senate this fact, that the House of Representatives has just passed a joint resolution in regard to the income tax and we had better dispose of that.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator from Kansas give way for a moment that I may call up a little bill from the House of Representatives in favor of a widow, a pension bill which has been reported from our Committee on Pensions, and ought to be passed?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. With great pleasure.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I feel compelled to object. In view of the course pursued, I must insist that we hold on to the adjournment resolution until we dispose of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Senator from Illinois will bear witness that I have not participated in anything which he can consider reprehensible. This is the case of a widow; the bill has been passed by the House of Representatives, and will be lost if we do not pass it promptly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We will pass it as soon as we get through with the resolution.

Mr. POWELL. As we have five minutes to spare, I ask the Senate to take up the following resolution which I offered some time since:

Resolved, That the conduct of the executive authority of the Government in recently closing the offices and suppressing the publication of the World and Journal of Commerce newspapers, in the city of New York, under circumstances which have been placed before the public, was an act unwarranted in itself, dangerous to the cause of the Union, in violation of the Constitution, and subversive of the principles of civil liberty, and as such is hereby censured by the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object to its introduction.

Mr. POWELL. I move to take up the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not move to postpone the measure on which we have been engaged four hours in order to get in this resolution of his. Let us get a vote on the proposition before the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. I understand the Senate is not ready to vote on that yet.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is not the Senator ready? I am.

Mr. POWELL. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] to the resolution fixing the day of adjournment.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I told the gentleman having the income tax bill in charge—it only binds myself, of course—that in all human probability if the other House took a definite course and sent us a tax bill there would be no difficulty in adjourning on Monday. I feel bound, therefore, now to vote for the resolution to adjourn on Monday; but I shall not ask any other Senator to be influenced by my action. The House of Representatives have deliberately acted on the proposition in regard to petroleum, leaf tobacco, and whisky, and concluded not to change the existing law on those subjects. Consequently we cannot hope to have a bill including them from the other House, and that House has already informed us that we cannot originate such a bill. The only tax bill that can be passed here is the one which they are now passing. They have kept it free from all amendments, made it simply an income tax to provide for the bounties under the enrollment bill.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The adjournment resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I ask the Senate by unanimous consent to take up the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. Let us fix the day of adjournment and then I shall be willing to take it up; but after four hours have been occupied here on this question, I cannot consent to yield it.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to postpone the consideration of the question now pending, which is the resolution in regard to the adjournment, and all other prior orders, and to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I may as well inform the Senator from California that if necessary I shall object to its being read. That joint resolution cannot be passed to-night unless we have some action on the question before the Senate. If he wishes to persist in his course he can do so. I do not know that I can persist as long as he can, but I have the power by myself alone to prevent the passage of that joint resolution from the House of Representatives to-night, and I shall exercise it unless we can have some action on the pending question.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President—

Mr. COWAN. Let us vote on the adjournment.

Mr. CARLILE. We could have passed both resolutions by this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from California will allow the resolution in regard to the adjournment to be passed, and we can then pass the other resolution; but if we fail to do it we can move to reconsider the vote on the adjournment resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. I will not persist against the wish of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate is very thin; those who are in favor of remaining in session until the public business is done have gone home. I move, therefore, a call of the Senate, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The Chair thinks it is not in order to move a call of the Senate until the fact is developed that there is not a quorum present; as there is no evidence that a quorum is not present, the motion is not in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is to fix the day of final adjournment at Tuesday, the 5th day of July, at twelve o'clock, and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Morgan, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LANE] to fix the adjournment at Monday, the 4th of July, at twelve o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. (at twenty minutes past one o'clock, a. m., July 3.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Foot, Harlan, Morgan, Morrill, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wilson—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WILSON. I move to postpone the consideration of the resolution and all other subjects to take up the joint resolution of the House of Representatives in regard to a special income tax. If we pass that we can then pass this resolution and close it up in ten minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow this resolution to pass we can then take up the other joint resolution and act on it in ten minutes. You have persisted in this course for four hours and persist still.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Illinois has persisted in fixing a time for adjournment without knowing what the action of the House of Representatives would be. I am for the House joint resolution relative to the income tax first, and then the adjournment. I ask for a vote on my proposition by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule, as advised, that the joint resolution from the House of Representatives cannot be considered except by unanimous consent. It can have its first reading, however.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. That bill cannot pass to-night if we fix the adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan surely will not object to a bill of this kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will object. If the motion to adjourn at twelve o'clock on Monday be carried, that bill will not pass to-night.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe that precedent has already been set by the Senator from Illinois, and I do not see that the Senator from Michigan is blamable for following it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I am perfectly good-humored about this matter. A majority of the Senate, I think, manifestly have determined that we can adjourn and ought to adjourn on Monday. It seems to me every Senator ought to yield to that. I believe it is the unanimous willingness of the Senate without a single objection to pass the income tax bill from the House of Representatives; and I ask now whether there is any Senator here who will use his parliamentary privilege to prevent the passage of that important measure. If there is, it is due from him in fairness and honor now to say so.

Several Senators. Nobody.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can pass both measures; and as the adjournment resolution was first under consideration, I hope we shall act upon that and fix our adjournment at twelve o'clock on Monday, and then pass the tax bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I feel it due to say that I will object to the consideration of the tax bill until Monday morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. There will be no action on that bill to-night.

Mr. McDUGALL obtained the floor.

Mr. POWELL. With the permission of the Senator from California, I desire to say a word. There seems to be an apprehension that some Senator on our side will take advantage of parliamentary tactics to defeat the bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio. I am authorized to say that we will not. Fix the day of adjournment, and so far as we are concerned you may take up that bill and pass it to-night: all we shall do is to vote against it.

Mr. CONNESS. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that he will vote for the bill?

Mr. POWELL. No; but I say I am willing it shall be voted upon and will take no advantage of parliamentary tactics.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire whether the Senator's associates who are voting with him for an adjournment on Monday at twelve o'clock will all pledge themselves to do the same thing?

Mr. POWELL. They have already done so.

Mr. CARLILE. That assurance has been given over and over again during the last two hours.

Mr. COWAN. If this Senate can assume any other more ridiculous or absurd position than it now presents, I should like to see it assume it and then go home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LANE] to the resolution relative to the adjournment of the two Houses. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary commenced the call of the roll, and Mr. ANTHONY responded to his name.

Mr. McDUGALL. I was on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call will be continued.

Mr. McDUGALL. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the point of order.

Mr. McDUGALL. I had risen, addressed the Chair, and been recognized by the Chair before the call commenced; I stood in my place and did not resign it. I am not disposed to surrender any of my known rights. If the Chair will not admit the facts to be as I have just stated them, I shall submit; but such being the facts, I have a right to the floor without the call of the roll being commenced while I was standing on the floor. Gentlemen got up and addressed the Chair immediately, I know, and I was not rude enough to ask them to take their seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator was not recognized.

Mr. POMEROY. I will make a single statement, as I was the occupant of the chair. The Senator from California addressed the Chair and was recognized. He yielded the floor, however, to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. POWELL], and I recognized that Senator. When he concluded I recognized the other Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS], and he made some remarks. I supposed the Senator [Mr. McDUGALL] in yielding the floor yielded it unreservedly.

Mr. McDUGALL. Then courtesy is very expensive.

The call of the roll was concluded, and the result announced—yeas 22, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doollittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Sausbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Foster, Harlan, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Sumner, and Wilson—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. HARLAN. How does it read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as amended will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House adjourn their respective Houses for the present session on Monday the 4th of July instant at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER, (at fifteen minutes before two o'clock, a. m., July 3.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Harlan, McDougall, Morgan, Sumner, and Wilkinson—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doollittle, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Sausbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no disposition to delay the passage of this resolution, but I shall vote against it. I have steadily voted against fixing the hour for an adjournment of the Senate until it was obvious that the Senate could adjourn in safety to the country, and we have been voting here, as I think, for an adjournment at twelve o'clock on Monday, when it was not obvious that it could be done with safety to the country. That is my judgment. Other Senators think otherwise, and I have no right to say that they are not as honest and as conscientious in their convictions on that subject as I am, and I do not stand here to complain of that particularly, but I am not willing to allow it to be understood and go to the country, that for that exercise of my judgment I am to be denounced here as standing in a faction because I happen to be in a minority; and I tell my honorable friend from Illinois, with all the respect I entertain for him, that he is both unparliamentary and unjust when he stands in the Senate and says to the country, or to the Senate to go to the country, that that portion of this body are factious who are reluctant to adjourn until they can see that the measure which those who have charge of the finances of this Government believe to be essential is secured, who feel that we are not in a condition to adjourn. I say till that is made certain the Senators who cooperate to that end and who are honestly opposed to fixing the hour for adjournment until that object is secured, are not factious, and their action is open to no such objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator, I presume, does not mean to place me in a different position from that in which I designed to place myself. I did not denounce anybody as factious who did not agree with me. Those whom I spoke of as factious were those who entered into a combination in the presence of Senators for the purpose of delay; those persons who avowed their object to be delay and who consulted together to bring it about. The Senator from Maine, I apprehend, was not one of those.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator from Maine permit me a single word? The Senator from Maine is exonerated by the Senator from Illinois from this aspersion. I am willing that the Senator from Illinois shall claim to be exempt from faction while the record shows his company.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to make a remark by the courtesy of the Senator from Maine. I do not consider it dishonorable or improper in a Senator who stands with the minority to use fair parliamentary law to prevent the action of the body which he thinks will be deleterious to the country; and I wish to remind my friend from Illinois that he has done so repeatedly, and has formed combinations to do so when he thought the interests of the country required it; and if Senators here to-night think that it is unsafe to the country to adjourn without the passage of certain measures that have not yet passed, and on that account are not willing to fix an hour of adjournment definitely, they are doing precisely what the honorable Senator from Illinois has done repeatedly to my personal knowledge, and for the same reason.

I have felt it due to myself that I should make this statement, because I suppose I am one of those referred to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will my honorable friend from Maine allow me to make a statement?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My statement is this: the only question about which we felt a great deal of anxiety was the bill lately pending in the House of Representatives. Inasmuch as by the law they had passed additional bounties were provided, it was a question whether additional revenue should not be raised. They have passed that bill. So far as the House is concerned, I understand that the important business is completed. That bill is lying on our table; it is completely in the power of the Senate. This resolution of the House asking us to join with them in fixing a day of adjournment has been upon our table for a long time, and certainly there is no reason now why we cannot respond to the House and inform them now that we shall be ready to adjourn on Monday; and I really hope that this matter of controversy among our friends here will not proceed further.

Mr. HARLAN. Allow me to make a suggestion. That bill cannot pass in less than three days, if one Senator chooses to put it over so long. It must be read once on each separate day by the rules of the Senate if any one Senator chooses to put it over. Hence the impropriety, as it appears to me and other Senators, of fixing a day certain for adjournment short of three days.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We can pass it to-night.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is due to myself that I should say a word in reply to what has been said.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to know how I got cheated out of the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator gave the floor to the Senator from Iowa, and he made remarks relative to myself, and I ask an opportunity to reply.

Mr. MORRILL. I had not got quite through with my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to make a statement.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I made this motion. It is due to myself to say that during the entire period up to this time I have been in constant intercourse with the House of Representatives, and a portion of the time with the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and the rest of the period with the second on the Committee on Finance, keeping the resolution in hand and advising with them at every step, looking to not endangering the proposition of the House, and controlling the resolution in view of that.

Mr. MORRILL. I have said all that I care to say in regard to the charge of the Senator from Illinois that there was a faction. I think the honorable Senator probably on reflection will withdraw such a charge as that. There is a difference of opinion here in the Senate. A majority of the Senate were willing to adjourn on Monday without any reference to the bill which has now come to us from the House. A minority of the Senate were unwilling to fix the day of adjournment until they could see that that bill was within our power. On that question I think there is ample room for a very honest difference of opinion, and I submit to my honorable friend that it hardly becomes him to say that the men who were engaged in preventing the fixing of Monday were actuated by factious motives. I can conceive that they were actuated by the highest and most patriotic motives, and I think my honorable friend on reflection will accord to the Opposition those motives.

But now, sir, the point which I desire to submit is this: we have got the bill within our reach at last; the House of Representatives has passed it; it is now within our reach and we can pass it; and the question I wish to submit to the "faction" with which I have acted is—I do not mean that in any offensive sense to my friends, but I appeal to Senators on this side of the Chamber with whom I have acted steadily in resisting any attempt to adjourn until this bill came to us—whether this bill being now within our reach we should not accept it and act upon it, whether now the responsibility does not come upon us. We have held the Senate here until the bill has come. It being here and being within our reach, shall we not take it up and pass it and give the country the benefit of it, or shall we postpone it until Monday? I am frank to say that although I feel perfectly justified in the measures taken to postpone fixing the day of adjournment until the bill should reach us, the bill having reached us and Senators upon both sides of the Chamber pledging themselves when the hour is fixed for the adjournment they will take the vote on this question without opposition, now it seems to me the object is accomplished; and therefore, in order to stand entirely justified, we should take up the bill.

Mr. COWAN. I have a single remark to make. If the good people of the United States had sat in the galleries to-night and observed the ability with which we manage the affairs of the nation and the statesmanship displayed by us, I am very doubtful whether they would have invited us to stay here until Monday noon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have sought the floor several times for the purpose of replying to a personal remark made by the Senator from Iowa; but the Senator from Maine was not willing that I should reply to it at one time, and I will take but a moment to do so now. The Senator from Iowa says that I have entered into combinations to prevent the passage of measures in former times when I believed the public good would be prejudiced by their passage. Whenever I did so I took the responsibility, and never shirked any position that I took in regard to legislative matters. If I have undertaken to defeat them by parliamentary devices and delays, I have done it openly and above-board and taken the responsibility of my action in reference to them. If Senators think it consistent with propriety to pursue that course to-night, of course it is their right to do so, and I have no more to say in regard to it.

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose the Senator did not understand me as attributing to him then or now any improper motive.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Oh, no.

Mr. HARLAN. I did not intend anything of that kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have cooperated before with the Senator from Illinois in what he is pleased to term to-night "factious opposition." I did it then under a high sense of duty to my country. I do it now under a high sense of duty to my country. I then believed the majority were attempting to do that which would injure the best interests of my country; and I feel to-night that the Senator from Illinois and those who cooperate with him are acting against the best interests of my country. I believe they are violating the highest duties known to patriots and statesmen, without any offensive intent in that remark. I believe they are as honest in their views as I am in mine, but I believe now they are mistaken as I believed then that the majority was mistaken. I then took the responsibility as much as the Senator from Illinois did, and now take the responsibility as much as I did then, and I shirk no portion of it.

Sir, the measure which the Senate deems important may, as the Senator from Iowa has remarked, be defeated by one single man. I have given notice that that bill shall not pass to-night if my objection will prevent it from passing; nor shall it. I have not read that bill. I know nothing that is in that bill. I do not propose to have hasty legislation where my objection will prevent it. It shall not be passed to-night if my objection will prevent it. I am prepared to stay here until I believe it to be the duty of this body to adjourn, or until it has accomplished all that the nation sent it here to do. I will vote persistently against every motion to fix a day for adjournment until the business that we were sent here to accomplish is done.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has not stated all the objections that I have to fixing a day for the adjournment. There was a conscription bill sent here from the House of Representatives by four majority, as I am informed, that I believe to be a bad bill. I would hold these two bodies here until the House receded from the bad portions of that bill and consented to a more perfect bill. I would sit here until the House consent to levy a heavier tax than it has already levied upon the income of the people of the United States, a tax that would yield not ten or fifteen millions, as it is said this will yield, but a hundred millions; and the press, the public sentiment, the universal sentiment of this nation would compel that House within one week from to-day to levy such a tax as would send gold down fifty per cent, and relieve the Treasury from fifty per cent. of its present burdens and of its burdens during the coming year.

We have higher duties than to fix the day of adjournment, in my opinion. I believe to-night that if this body were full, if the Senate had ordered a call of the House, you could not pass your resolution to adjourn at twelve o'clock on Monday; but the majority of those present, under the lead of the Senator from Illinois, have decided that it shall be put through to-night, and I have no factious opposition to render further. I say again, as I said when I got up, that I take the responsibility of every act that I have performed to-night, and of every act that I ever perform. I shirk no responsibility. I take the responsibility of objecting to the consideration of that bill that some parties here deem important, and I give notice in advance that I will object, and if my objection will prevent its passage it shall not pass to-night. Now, sir, fix your adjournment on Monday and take the responsibility, for it does not rest on me. I take no portion of it. I oppose it; I have opposed it; I will oppose it; but I say to the Senate and the country that no portion of that responsibility, no iota of it, rests upon me, not a particle. Let the Senator from Illinois and his friends on the other side of the House fix the hour; adjourn now sine die if they please, and take the responsibility. I take none of it.

Mr. SUMNER. I take it, sir, that the proceedings to-night are utterly without precedent in the history of the Senate. It is now more than two hours into Sunday morning. The Senate has on former occasions sat on Sunday morning, but, as we all know, it was under the exigency of the Constitution which brought the session to a close on the 4th of March. There is no such exigency now, and this Sunday morning debate is instituted simply in order to secure an adjournment of Congress on Monday. That is the single object of all that you are doing here to-night—all these strange proceedings, making a sort of Walpurgis night of Sunday morning. But I say nothing of incidental matters. I bring home the fact that you now extend your session into Sunday morning merely that you may hasten away on Monday morning. It is not for any public exigency; it is not to pass any great measure; it is not to comply with any requirement of the Constitution, but simply to satisfy your own desires or predilections to leave Washington on Monday morning.

And now, sir, as to leaving Washington on Monday morning, we are told that the other House wish to leave, and that it has already disposed of the question of taxation by sending us a proposition for an income tax, and the Senator over the way, [Mr. LANE, of Kansas,] who tells us he has kept such a sharp lookout on the House to-night, announces that all other propositions are discarded, that there is to be no tax on tobacco, no tax upon whisky on hand, no tax on anything else, for the House has come to that conclusion. Does the Senator know that if Congress continues in session twenty-four hours longer, or forty-eight hours longer, the House will not be wiser and more patriotic? Does the Senator who has kept such a sharp lookout on the House know that the House will not rise at last to the requirements of the hour?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the Senator from Massachusetts to order.

Mr. SUMNER. Let the Senator state his point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order is that his remarks are reflecting on the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion the point of order is well taken. It has been practiced too often on the part of Senators to allude to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, sir. I bow to the correction of the Chair. I did not intend—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I insist upon the rules of the Senate being observed.

Mr. SUMNER. I said that I bowed to the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed unless there be objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the Chair decide that the Senator is entitled to proceed when he has been called to order and the point of order sustained, without permission of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, permission will be presumed to be granted. The Chair said that unless there were objection the Senator would proceed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope I shall proceed in order. I certainly did not intend to proceed out of order. I was not aware that I was making any reflection on the House of Representatives. We criticise very freely each other; the members of one House criticise the proceedings of another House, and we criticise the country, and the country criticises us.

Now, sir, we are told that the House has disposed of the question of taxation. I am in order when I allude to that. May we not hope, then, that if the session is extended a little longer they will see the necessity of increased taxation; may we not hope that they will give some answer to that communication from the late Secretary of the Treasury asking for an increase of taxation? May we not hope that they will do something further to sustain the army now before Richmond and something further to sustain the national credit? And let me say that the army before Richmond will be sustained by sustaining the national credit. And yet, sir, leaving all this mighty question of taxation absolutely unsettled, leaving the communication of your late Secretary of the Treasury unnoticed, avoiding action upon it, Congress is asked to separate and to mingle again with the people. Will they be welcome to the people? Sir, the people have sent us here to save this country by maintaining its armies in the field and by maintaining the national credit. Is this the way you maintain the armies in the field and the national credit? When your Secretary of the Treasury asks for increased taxation, when the people cry out for increased taxation, when even the press is clamorous for increased taxation, Congress votes to abandon these seats and go home! No, sir, not according to the dictates of patriotism can any such conduct be, unless I misread those dictates. Our duty is to be here until all these exigencies are completely and absolutely met and provided for. On other occasions, in other days I have known Congress occupied for days and weeks in the discussion of an appropriation of $500,000 or $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, and now we have a demand upon us for $100,000,000 and you do not deign even to notice it, although you are told that if you do not add that amount to your taxation the national credit itself will suffer.

Sir, already we have a national debt which I will not venture to estimate, to the payment of which the country is ultimately pledged, to the payment of the interest of which in gold it is also pledged. Are you willing that this national debt should suffer in its character; are you willing that the national currency which is now inaugurated shall suffer in its character? Surely you are not; but if you vote to abandon this whole question and go home it will be a blow at the national credit which will be felt in the national debt and in the national currency wherever they are to be found. Therefore, sir, again I make my appeal for the sake of the national credit and for the sake of the national currency even if you are willing to abandon the Army in the field; I plead with you not to leave this post of duty until you have completely met and dealt with that great question. It is not sufficient to say that the House of Representatives has not acted or has acted adversely on any proposition of taxation. I know not that to-morrow or the next day, if opportunity is afforded, that it will not see the way of duty otherwise.

But the Senate is not constrained to await even on a revenue bill the lead of the House. It may not originate such a bill, but it may amend it; so that if the House send us, as is announced, a bill for an income tax, we may amend it by a tax on tobacco and whisky, the two articles which I have already said should be made to support this Government. Therefore these questions will be open for consideration. And yet you propose to go home.

Sir, I differ from my friends here reluctantly. Believe me, I wish that I could unite with them, but I cannot. If the question were of minor importance I should gladly yield; but it concerns the safety of my country and the national credit; and when those are in question I cannot yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that in my short legislative experience I have never seen so extraordinary a scene as we have witnessed here to-night; nor have I ever heard two speeches so marked in their character as those just made by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Massachusetts. They are in a small minority. They profess to favor the measure now upon the table of the President. One at least would suppose from the declamations about taxation that they were in favor of that measure; and yet they are pursuing a course which threatens by their own individual veto the defeat of that important measure. I am willing for one to place upon them that responsibility. I will hold them to the bar of public judgment for that responsibility. Here the House of Representatives, at the last period of the session, have passed a bill, and have said to us by deliberate votes that it was all that they could pass in the way of taxation. The committee of the House of Representatives which is the organ of the House on financial measures has framed this bill and said it is all that can be passed at this stage of the session. The House of Representatives have so voted. By the Constitution of the United States they are the sole judges of taxes. That bill is sent to us, and now the Senator from Michigan tells us that he will defeat that bill, although every man of us feels that it is vital for the national credit, merely because he has the power to do it under the rules; and the Senator from Massachusetts, not making that broad declaration, substantially opposes and antagonizes that bill under a pretense that he is in favor of taxation. Now, Mr. President, we have had before this body tax bills, a number of them, and I will say here for myself that there is no man in Congress who has been in favor of larger taxation than I.

Mr. SUMNER. How have I antagonized that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say this to the Senator, that I made propositions over and over again when the general tax bill was pending to increase our system of taxation, and in some cases I had his support, but generally where it affected the interests of his constituents I had his determined opposition. He himself defeated the proposed increased tax on manufactures. When his colleague had already expressed himself in favor of that tax, the Senator's potent voice defeated it, though it would have yielded us $50,000,000 of revenue. And when a proposition was made to tax spirits on hand, a proposition that I have advocated from the very beginning, I do not know that the Senator voted with me.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly I did.

Mr. SHERMAN. But a majority was against me. Did I complain a great deal because they did not agree with me? Then was the time to impose taxes; we had then the general tax bill before us; we had power to impose taxes; we had power to make an end of the question. Did the Senator from Massachusetts then talk about these various amendments that he now speaks of?

Mr. SUMNER. I proposed a tax on tobacco in the leaf. I supported an increased income tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I ask the Senator whether then his mind was excited for the brave soldiers in the field, whether it was excited for the national credit? Why was not his voice heard then, when his voice might have been effective to increase taxation?

Now let me say that the whole framework of the internal revenue bill and of the bill laying duties on imports received the sanction of the present Secretary of the Treasury—the gentleman recently taken from his high position here and placed at the head of that Department, (Mr. Fessenden.) It is his deliberate conviction that we have imposed as much taxation on foreign imports and domestic productions as they will bear, and he does not ask anything further from this Congress except that which the House of Representatives has now given him. In his judgment, after having framed a system of taxation and spent five months on its details, it would be unwise now hastily, without reflection, without the corresponding consideration, to frame new tax bills. I will say also that the late Secretary of the Treasury has now submitted an estimate showing that the present bill will not yield enough; but did he not know that before? Did he not watch the progress of the bill from time to time as it went through Congress? Why was this communication so long delayed, or why not submitted to the constituted authority? The communication now referred to was sent to the Committee of Ways and Means some ten days ago; it was deliberated upon and considered, and they decided as the organ of the House of Representatives that it was not now wise to reopen this tax question, and the House of Representatives have sustained them in that decision.

Now, shall we here in the Senate hold the House of Representatives in perpetual session so as to compel them to impose new taxes on the people, when that House alone by the Constitution can devise taxes? Is that the position of the Senator from Massachusetts? Shall the Senate, that has not even the power to originate a tax bill, that cannot do anything with such bills except to propose amendments, after having acted on the House bill and proposed all the amendments it desired, hold the House of Representatives in perpetual session until that House shall impose taxes according to its dictation? Why, sir, it is an express violation not only of the spirit but of the letter of the Constitution. I am the representative of the highest taxation, because there is scarcely a proposition to tax the people that I have not been in favor of, for the reason that I believe that in time of war it is better for the people to pay largely in the form of taxes, to pay at least one half or two thirds of the expenses; but because the House of Representatives does not agree with our opinions shall we, therefore, in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, hold the House in perpetual session to compel them to do it? I say not. I wish to look on all these matters as practical questions.

Mr. President, let us look at the spectacle we have presented to-night. Here are resolutions on our table, passed some of them two months ago, from the House of Representatives fixing days for the adjournment. We passed them by; we did not treat them with even the ordinary civility with which messages of this kind between the two Houses have been accustomed to be treated. We kept the matter in our own power as if we doubted the patriotism or the wisdom of the House of Representatives. We kept the question here until to-night. We kept it here until we are told that every vital measure has been passed or is within our power. Every bill which is deemed of importance has been passed. The Senator from Massachusetts cannot point to a single measure that is now deemed vital which the other House has not acted upon according to its deliberate judgment. If there is one, I challenge him to name it. What measure is there now unacted upon by the House of Representatives, by reason of their failure to act, on which we should hold them here in perpetual session, away from their families and their constituents?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator uses language which he will pardon me for saying is rather exaggerated when he speaks of holding them in perpetual session. He draws upon his imagination for that idea. There is nothing that has fallen from my lips or from any Senator to whom I have had the honor of listening to-night that could suggest such an idea.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the Senator's position is this, that he will hold the House of Representatives in session until that House comes up and passes tax bills to suit him. I will say on behalf of that House that he has no business with taxes except to amend those proposed by the House.

Mr. SUMNER. My proposition is that I will give the House the opportunity of imposing such taxation as I think the country requires.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have had the opportunity during this long session; they have spent half their time in devising taxes; and this very night they have had the subject under consideration and given as the result of their judgment a bill now before us, precisely in the form and in the very words desired by the present Secretary of the Treasury. Now you would hold them in session until they pass some other bill that you demand, not that the organ of the Treasury Department, not that the organ of the House of Representatives, not that the House itself, not that the Senate desires, but that you here representing a very small minority on this question would say the House ought to pass. That is the precise position. I joined the Senator in saying at first that I would not place it in the power of the House of Representatives to adjourn Congress until they acted on this measure of finance, until they gave us means to pay the bounties to our soldiers. I acted with that Senator and voted against the proposition to take up this resolution of adjournment; but now the House has acted and sent us a proposition to levy taxes.

Look at the practical condition in which we have placed the House of Representatives. That House has evidently determined to adjourn on Monday. We can hold them here if we choose, but two thirds of the Senate are in favor of the House resolution. There is a bill lying on our table which is the only bill of importance we have yet to pass. Every opponent of the measure, every man who is going to vote against it, tells you he will not even debate it; he will not discuss it; he will take no time—

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me? As I have been somewhat interested on what I will call this side of the question the honorable Senator is discussing, I ask him now whether all the Senators opposed to him this evening have not offered to proceed to the consideration of that bill and pass it, and then to agree to fix any time for adjournment that the honorable Senator and his friends on that side of the Chamber might fix upon?

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the precise position: this resolution was pending in the body and the question was about to be put when the bill came from the House of Representatives, and then the minority asked the majority to postpone the resolution that was just about to be acted on until the bill could be passed. The very demand under all the circumstances implied a doubt of the honor and integrity of the men who said to you that they would not oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me one word again? I will not interrupt him any more.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope I shall be allowed to get through.

Mr. CONNESS. I will not interrupt the Senator again. I ask the Senator whether that minority, as he calls it, was not a majority of his friends; and whether they, joined with the other minority—if he will permit the language—do not constitute the majority that has passed during this session all the tax bills that have been passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt that proposition very much, for I think the minority at one time was reduced to seven votes. I do not think it was a majority even of the political party to which I belong. But here is the case: the opponents of the bill which we are so anxious to pass tell us that they will not cause delay, they will not make parliamentary objections, they will simply vote against it, and then a member on our own side says, "Unless you, the majority, will hold the House of Representatives who are determined to adjourn in session until they do so and so, I will defeat by my arbitrary veto the very bill that we are all in favor of."

Mr. CONNESS. I—

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not refer to the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. I know that; but I wish the Senator to be correct on the matter of fact. That was not stated by the Senator from Michigan until it had been first said by the Senator from Illinois, that unless we passed this resolution to adjourn his objection would prevent the passage of this tax bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. According to the statement of the Senator from California, here are two political friends, one from Illinois and the other from Michigan, endangering the passage of an important bill, the Senator from Illinois insisting that the adjournment resolution shall first be passed or he will kill the bill, the Senator from Michigan insisting that the bill shall first be passed or he will kill it; and we are all in favor of passing the bill. I appeal to Senators whether, under the circumstances, the best thing we can do is not to adopt the resolution fixing the time of adjournment on Monday next, and then take up the bill and pass it. I appeal to Senators not to let this matter go over to Monday. On Monday we may pass it; but I hope we may do it to-night without any feeling.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will explain what he meant by saying that I had antagonized the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope he will not. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I explained that sufficiently.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sure I did not understand the explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts that in my judgment his course tended to defeat the bill now lying on the table, although he no doubt is in favor of it and is willing to vote for it.

Mr. SUMNER. I have said nothing about it except in favor of it.

Mr. HARLAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that I have said here that I was not willing that any business should be done here to-night. There is some business pending that I can control. I have said to him that I felt it to be my duty to do so. I meant it. I shall control it if I have the strength to hold out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Your strength may give way.

Mr. HARLAN. That may be so, but I am not a very old man, and it never has given way during a session of the Senate. If it does give way I shall have discharged what is my duty, and that will be the end of it. So far as the other Senators are concerned, I consider it a question on their part of parliamentary form which business shall be done first. I do not want either to be done on the Sabbath day, unless there were a great public necessity or some question of humanity demanding it. So far as I have been informed, there is no such necessity, there is no such question of humanity. I believe that there is a Supreme Being that rules the universe, and that He has said to man to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; that six days he may labor, and in those six days do all his work; that he may not labor on the Sabbath day. I believe this. I do not believe we can hope that the blessing of that Supreme Ruler of the universe will rest on the action of a deliberative body when they are in the open and flagrant violation of one of the very first laws of man's existence here on earth. I do not regard this as a mere ecclesiastical law, but as a law that has its foundation in man's physical, mental, and moral organization; and especially at this time I think it would be fit for the Senate of the United States to regard laws of this kind. In my opinion a vast majority of the people of this nation believe that the existence of the present rebellion is an infliction of the Almighty on this nation in consequence of its flagrant violations of His law; that it is a just punishment on this nation for its transgressions of the laws of a just Being. That being, in my opinion, the conviction of a vast majority of this Christian people, I do not think it right for the Senate of a Christian nation to sit on the Sabbath day and openly violate those laws, as I have before remarked, unless there was a public necessity.

In making these remarks I do not intend to reflect on any Senator who may differ with me in opinion. There are those doubtless who take different views of this subject from those that I have taken and attempted to present. Of course they will act on their responsibility as Senators, on their conscientious convictions of their duty as such, and with their action I shall attempt to be content.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Ohio has delivered a lecture both on responsibility and propriety, and I suppose that young men like the Senator from Massachusetts and myself should receive that lecture thankfully. He tells us that we assume a responsibility that is frightful. Very well, sir; I have not asked that Senator to share any responsibility with me. I gave fair notice to that Senator and to the Senate that no ill-considered bill, no bill that had not been printed, that had not been read, that was not understood, should pass this body to-night without an objection from me; nor shall it. I do not know a single feature of that bill which he wants us to pass. I propose to know what is in that bill before it passes this body, if an objection from me will enable me to ascertain that fact. I do not know a single thing that is in that bill. I was told a moment ago that there was a tax on whisky in that bill. If there is, it would commend the bill to me very largely; but since then I have been informed there was not. I am told since that that whisky tax was struck out in the other House. By the way, that tax upon whisky on hand is an immense affair. The Senator, to be sure, has voted with me for that tax every time, I believe, it has come before this body, but it has failed. We have been told here to-night that there is a supply of whisky on hand that will last for thirty months, and that we shall not receive one dollar of revenue from the whisky tax for thirty months unless we tax the whisky on hand.

Now, sir, I believe that if the House of Representatives has ill-considered or has made a mistake on this point, the House will reconsider its vote and will put on a tax such as the necessities of the country demand. That is my judgment. At any rate, I ask no division of responsibility with the Senator from Ohio or with any other man. I say to that Senator that I deliberately stated that that bill should not pass to-night if an objection from me would prevent it, nor shall it; and I take the responsibility and go before my people on that responsibility, and I ask no division of it.

Mr. President, I do not like to be lectured in this way by the Senator from Ohio. He has no right to hold me up as preventing legislation. I have gone for this measure first and last and all the time, and I have demanded that this measure should pass before you fix your hour for adjournment. The Senator from Iowa has told you that a single objection will prevent its passage. Have you got the pledge of every man on this floor?

Mr. SHERMAN. Every man, I believe, is pledged except the honorable Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nearly one half the members of this body are away. Have you got their pledges?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are not here.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are not here, and you do not know that you can pass your bill without them, and you are responsible if the measure is defeated, and not me, for I have given notice that it shall not pass unconsidered to-night, and you have no assurance nor can you get an assurance that it can pass on Monday before twelve o'clock. Upon you and you alone rests the responsibility of the defeat of that measure, and not upon me. I take no iota of the responsibility. It shall not pass to-night if I can help it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator permit me to suggest to him that I think we can reconcile the difficulties very readily? Let us proceed to adopt the resolution in regard to adjournment; the House of Representatives asks it of us; and then if we fail to pass the other measure in which the Senator is so deeply interested—though I do not look upon it as a matter of any very great importance—can we not reconsider our action on the resolution to adjourn?

Mr. CHANDLER. What assurance have you that you can? Will you vote for it?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly. Unquestionably I will vote for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It requires the action of the two Houses.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no Senator here who will not vote for it to give Senators who desire to pass the other measure an opportunity of doing it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If every Senator here votes for it, it does not repeal the resolution; it is a joint resolution requiring the action of both Houses, and you propose to tie your hands so that you cannot pass that or any other measure. That is what you propose.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator loses sight of the fact that the House of Representatives may be just as patriotic as we. They have already passed the measure, by what majority I do not know, but surely the House will not accept our proposition here, they will not adjourn, they will not pass the amended resolution that we may adopt and which we are now considering, until we have acted on the other proposition. The House certainly will be as patriotic as ourselves.

Mr. WILSON. I move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet to-morrow at half past nine o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us get the other vote first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object until we dispose of what we are at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be received, then.

Mr. CHANDLER. We have a large amount of executive business. Why should we fix the hour of adjournment at twelve o'clock on Monday when we know, there is not a Senator on this floor who does not know, that it will be utterly impossible for us to transact the business we have to transact by that time? Why not occupy one, two, three, four, five, or any number of hours requisite to finish the business that the country sent us here to do?

I hope this motion will not prevail. I believe if the Senate was full it would not prevail. If the hour could be fixed at twelve o'clock on Tuesday or eight or nine o'clock on Monday evening, so as to give us time to finish our business, I certainly would raise no objection, but I know we cannot accomplish our business unless we sit here all day to-morrow, and my friend from Iowa objects to Sunday sessions, but if we pass the resolution we shall be compelled to sit here all day to-morrow and all night to-morrow, and I object to it in toto.

Mr. CONNESS. Would a motion be in order now to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. CONNESS. I make that motion and ask the Senate to vote for it. Then we can meet early on Monday morning.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Foster, Harlan, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wiley—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Ramsey, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the resolution as amended was concurred in.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second reading of the joint resolution—

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be read the second time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it in order to move to postpone all other business and take up that joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate, but no action can be had on it until it has been read the second time.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be the unfinished business on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet at nine o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. SUMNER. Does not that require an alteration of the rule? The habit of the Senate when it changes its hour of meeting from twelve o'clock to eleven has always been to adopt a resolution which lies on the table a day or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been the usual practice.

Mr. SUMNER. My impression is that the rule requires our meeting to be at noon, and that it cannot be at any other hour than at noon without a change of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no rule upon the subject; but the usual practice has been to give notice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday at nine o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF 25TH RULE.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the 25th rule of the Senate be amended by inserting after the word "otherwise" the following: "except on the last day of any session, when bills and joint resolutions may receive their several readings by the vote of the Senate."

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over, objection being made.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. FOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment striking out the ninth section of the bill, and agree to the same with the following amendment, to wit: In line ten of said section, after the word "disabled" insert "in consequence of wounds received in battle;" and the House agree to the same as amended.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the third amendment, and agree to the same with the following amendments, to wit: after the words "definite period," in line twelve of said amendment, insert "next preceding the soldier's enlistment." In line thirteen of said amendment, after the words "credible witnesses," insert the words "Provided, however, That such widows and children are free persons." Same line and section, after the word "provided" insert "further;" and the Senate agree to the same as amended.

SOLOMON FOOT,
JAMES HARLAN,
P. G. VAN WINKLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SIDNEY PERHAM,
E. R. ECKLEY,
M. F. ODELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after a few minutes spent therein the doors were reopened, at ten minutes past three o'clock, a. m., (Sunday, July 3,) and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 2, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal of yesterday. After some progress the further reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

APPLICATION FOR USE OF THE HALL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from Thomas B. Florence, chairman of a committee of arrangements, stating that citizens, residents, and sojourners in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and vicinity had determined to celebrate the 4th of July in the western grounds surrounding the Capitol under the auspices of the National Democratic Association, and soliciting the consent of the House of Representatives to occupy the Hall of the House in case the day should be intensely hot or otherwise inclement.

Mr. COX. I move that the request be granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is a possibility that the House may be in session.

Mr. COX. It is only in case the House be not in session that the request is asked.

Mr. STEVENS. I think this whole thing is very improper. I hope that the Senate will agree to-day to adjourn on Monday at twelve o'clock. But I think that this Hall should be reserved for the discharge of the business incumbent upon us, and that no further notice should be taken of this very improper application.

Mr. COX. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that this very polite request is made only in case the House shall not be in session on Monday.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that it is quite certain that the Senate will not be able to adjourn until Monday. It would be therefore improper to grant the request.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we cannot agree to it.

Mr. COX. It is only on condition the House will not be in session.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I do not think it is a proper use to apply the Hall of this House to. I am opposed to its being used for any such purpose.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Maryland should have made his speech and given his vote when the Hall was used for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. My speech! I never made any in this Hall except on legislative subjects.

Mr. COX. I did not mean that. I meant your vote to allow this Hall to be used for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I never voted to allow any one to use this Hall.

Mr. COX. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so, and to see that he does not agree with that side of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF STAFF OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to ask the House to pass a joint resolution amending the joint resolution of 20th May last, providing that staff officers on the staff of the Lieutenant General shall be entitled to the same pay and emoluments as staff officers of the same grade on the staffs of corps commanders. It turns out that there is one man on the staff of the Lieutenant General, Major Dent, who is a major in the regular service, but a major of infantry, and the Comptroller has decided that he does not come within the law. All the others get cavalry pay, while he gets only infantry pay. I hold in my hand a joint resolution to correct the error, and I ask the House to pass it now.

No objection being made, the joint resolution received its several readings, and was engrossed and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRADE WITH REBEL STATES.

Mr. FENTON, under the authority heretofore granted to the Committee of Ways and Means to report back at any time, reported from the said committee bill of the Senate No. 232, in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between the loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection.

Mr. FENTON. I desire to make a verbal correction or amendment in lines four and five in the fifth section. I move to strike out the words "or shall be in danger of their raids."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON. I now move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. Was not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] pending, and was it not referred to the Committee of Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the committee, but they have not reported it back.

Mr. PENDLETON. They may report it back unfavorably, but they must report it back.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is pending, and will be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Be it further enacted, That hereafter no special permits or license shall be granted for purchasing or selling property within the insurrectionary districts, but all regulations in reference to such trade shall be general and equally open to all loyal citizens.

Mr. FENTON. I desire to say before the vote is taken on that amendment that it is very important that the House should reject it, as it would render nugatory and operate to repeal all the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury approved by the President under the acts of 1861, 1862, and of March 3, 1863.

The general purpose of this bill is to restrict this class of permits to persons to trade in rebel States, and the more special object of the bill is to provide regulations in regard to the sale of abandoned or seized cotton. It will be seen at a glance by the reading of the third section that if this amendment should be adopted the bill itself would be substantially defeated. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FENTON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. FENTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF FEMALE CLERKS.

Mr. COX asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be instructed to report a bill at the next session fixing the salaries of all females employed in the Departments at the grade of $900 clerkships, and that the heads of the Departments be requested, in so far as they can consistently with the public service, to employ competent women as clerks.

PLATS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back bill of the Senate No. 278, prescribing the terms on which exemplifications shall be furnished by the General Land Office.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the House to pass a small appropriation bill to provide for an item which was omitted in the miscellaneous appropriation bill. It is a bill from the Committee of Ways and Means making an appropriation to carry into effect an act entitled "An act to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes."

Mr. BROOKS. I suppose that bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as it makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. If objection be made, it must go there.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask for its consideration in the House.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it a bill to provide for salaries?

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no. It is a bill to carry into effect the law we passed the other day about smuggling.

Mr. BROOKS. Then I make no objection.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise for the purpose of correcting an error in the Globe of last session, and I do it in justice to a gentleman who is not now here. In the report of a debate on the conscription bill on the 24th of February, I find this passage:

"Mr. STEVENS. I have not risen for the purpose of making a political speech. I cannot very well answer the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky for I did not hear him."

The name of Mr. Wickliffe was inserted after "Kentucky" by the reporter. I rise to say that I did not refer to Mr. Wickliffe, and his name ought not to have been inserted there. It was a mistake. I make this correction for the purpose of doing justice to a gentleman who might hereafter take offense at my remarks and who was not referred to at all.

ALEXANDER F. PRATT.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Alexander F. Pratt the sum of $530 in full for his services in pursuing and capturing one Elijah K. Jenner, convicted of counterfeiting United States coin.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is an old claim connected with a matter as far back as 1849, and I must object to it. The bill makes an appropriation and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LAND SURVEYS.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 404, to authorize a departure from the established mode of surveying in certain cases.

The bill provides that whenever in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office a departure from the ordinary mode of surveying public lands in mountain regions or in river valleys, especially in New Mexico and Arizona, would best promote the public interests, he may authorize such modifications as he may deem necessary to adapt the surveys to such localities; but such changes shall be made under specific regulations and instructions; and it is expressly provided that this law shall not be construed to authorize the surveying of any public lands into tracts containing less than forty nor more than one hundred and sixty acres each.

Mr. BROOKS. This bill does not concern me, but I wish to call attention to the fact that it changes the whole system of the survey of the public lands. If any special reason exists for it in New Mexico and Arizona, and the Delegates from those Territories are satisfied, I shall make no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I would inquire if this bill is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. DRIGGS. The bill has been prepared at the General Land Office to meet special and very urgent cases where a departure from the ordinary mode of survey is demanded by the public interests. There are certain valleys where it would be impossible to preserve the public interests and be governed by the old system of surveys. The bill is entirely satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the Committee on Public Lands, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. WILSON. Is there a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommending it?

Mr. DRIGGS. There was one sent to the committee, but I have not got it here now.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think we ought to pass a bill of this kind without some such recommendation being before the House.

Mr. JULIAN. The bill only relates to peculiar localities where the angulations of rivers leave the lands in narrow strips in such a way as that ordinary surveying is utterly impracticable.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is this bill recommended by the surveyor general of New Mexico?

Mr. JULIAN. I am not aware whether it is or is not.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. Was this bill prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. DRIGGS. It was prepared at the Land Office.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no doubt that it is done on the recommendation of the surveyor general of New Mexico, whom I know to be one of the most accomplished surveyors in the country, and in whose recommendation I should have the utmost confidence.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me call the attention of the House again to this most vicious system of legislation. Here is a proposition to change the surveys of the public lands in the Territories of the United States upon which are dependent the titles to all these lands. There is said to be a communication from the Commissioner of Public Lands recommending it. That communication was sent to the Committee on Public Lands and no record was made of it whatsoever.

As I said the other day, in connection with the Committee of Ways and Means, recommendations of this sort ought to go to the committees through the legitimate organ of the House, the Speaker of the House, so that a public record can be made of such recommendations and somebody held responsible for them hereafter. This is a very important recommendation. It may change the whole system of surveying the public lands in New Mexico and Arizona, and it may involve conflicting titles hereafter, besides enabling certain persons who have their eyes upon favorable sites to purchase these valuable lands in the angles of the rivers for $1 25 per acre, while the remaining portions of the lands, which are valueless without these strips, will never be brought into market.

I avail myself of the opportunity of once more protesting against the practice of the heads of Departments of sending their communications directly to the committees unless at the same time they send copies to the Speaker of the House. There is in to-day's newspaper a most important communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, which will unquestionably be highly to his credit if what he therein lays down and predicts shall prove to be true, and yet it will not pass into the history of the country except in the mere newspaper record, because the Secretary did not transmit it to the Speaker as well as to the Committee of Ways and Means. No record is made of it in the history of Congress, and it floats down into history without either credit or discredit to him. I think that in all such cases, and especially in regard to measures of this character, there should be an authorized record by which hereafter we can hold some person responsible for the changes made.

Mr. JULIAN. There is an official communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in this case, which I shall ask leave to file with the report as soon as I can procure it. I demand the previous question on the bill.

The question was put, and no quorum voted. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Brooks and Driggs were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPALDING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerks of all the standing committees of this House whose pay is less than five dollars per day shall be allowed five dollars per day during this session of Congress, or at that rate for their actual term of service if less than the whole session.

Mr. ECKLEY. I move to amend the resolution by adding to it the following:

And that the assistant librarian, R. J. Bennet, be paid the same compensation as the newspaper clerk.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. How much is that? I really hope we shall not go into this thing of increasing compensation now.

Mr. SPALDING. My resolution is merely designed to equalize the pay of clerks to committees.

Mr. FRANK. I object to the amendment.

Mr. ASHLEY. How can the gentleman object to an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane to the original resolution.

Mr. ASHLEY. The assistant librarian is in constant attendance on the House, and spends more hours here a day than any clerk about the House.

Mr. SPALDING. I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH L. HEYWOOD.

Mr. PRUYN. I ask leave to report from the Committee of Claims a joint resolution in relation to the claim of Joseph L. Heywood, late United States marshal for the Territory of Utah.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

PRINTING OF INTERNAL REVENUE BILL.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That six thousand copies of the internal revenue bill be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, also, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That ten thousand additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1863 be printed for the use of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts how many extra copies have already been printed for the use of the Department?

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. Ten thousand.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I think that is enough. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. STEVENS. It is not half enough for foreign distribution.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether these copies are to be distributed among the Chinese? I understand that the Commissioner has sent out an agent to China to obtain some curious specimens.

Mr. STEVENS. Copies are needed to distribute among the libraries and agricultural societies of foreign nations as well as our own.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. In voting money here I propose to vote it for the benefit of the American people. I represent the best agricultural district in this country, and I do not propose to vote to print agricultural reports except to be sent to it and to other agricultural districts.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. As I understand it, these extra copies are to go to the agricultural societies of this country with which the Department corresponds. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, and we have reported it back and ask the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. SLOAN. Can the gentleman state how many copies the Senate has had printed for the use of the Department?

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. Seven thousand.

Mr. SLOAN. That makes seventeen thousand in all.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to move to amend the resolution so as to provide that four thousand copies shall be for the use of the Department and six thousand copies for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I must decline to yield for that purpose. I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. FENTON. Had not the gentleman better move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs? [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. No, sir; let us table it.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. We reported the resolution that the House might act upon it as they pleased. I withdraw the demand for the previous question for the present.

The question was taken on Mr. WASHBURNE's motion, and it was agreed to—ayes 54, noes 38.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRIENDLY SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. WINDOM obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has just expired.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs bill of the Senate No. 225, for the relief of certain friendly Indians of the Sioux nation in Minnesota. I ask that the bill be read, and I am sure that no gentleman will object to it.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $7,500 for the benefit of certain friendly Sioux Indians in Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That bill makes an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. Will my friend from Illinois allow me to make a brief statement before he raises the point of order?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Certainly; I always hear my friend with pleasure.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman is going to make the point of order he may just as well make it at once and save time.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from Minnesota desires to make an explanation, and I will hear it with pleasure.

Mr. WINDOM. During the outbreak in Minnesota in 1862 some ten or twelve or perhaps fifteen of the Sioux nation of Indians were very active in rescuing the whites. One of them saved forty-eight persons. They were partially civilized Indians, and now they cannot return to their tribe on the Missouri river or they would be slaughtered for the part they took in the outbreak, and are left totally destitute. The Senate have passed a bill making this slight appropriation for their benefit, and I hope the House will pass it.

Mr. HARDING. I object to the consideration of the bill in the House.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. The morning hour having expired, I move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH ROBINSON.

The first bill in order on the Speaker's table was bill of the House No. 460, for the relief of Sarah Robinson, widow of Hon. John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana, returned from the Senate with an amendment to strike out in the eleventh line the words "without any interest or penalties whatever."

The amendment was concurred in.

MAJOR N. S. BRENTON.

Senate bill No. 323, for the relief of Major N. S. Brenton, a paymaster in the United States Army, was next taken up, and read a first and second time.

It provides that Major Brenton shall be credited in the settlement of his accounts with $2,600,000 for the money in his hands, as a paymaster in the Army, on board the steamer Ruth when destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th of August, 1863.

Mr. STEVENS obtained the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is that the bill releasing a paymaster?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands from the reading of it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to make a motion in regard to it.

Mr. STEVENS. If any gentleman desires any information in regard to the case, I shall be very happy to give it to him.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Can the gentleman inform us if there has been any investigation of the case so far as the paymaster is concerned—if the only investigation made was not with reference to the burning of the vessel, and not directed particularly to the fact whether the paymaster had anything to do with the loss of the money?

Mr. STEVENS. There are two reports of commissions sent out by the Department: one to investigate the destruction of the property, which found that this money was put in wooden boxes by the Department, and directed to be taken down the river by Paymaster Brenton, and that all of these boxes with their contents were destroyed by fire. That report is among the papers on the table. The other commission was sent out to inquire whether the fault was with the paymasters. That commission made an elaborate report, coming to the conclusion that there was no fault on their part; that the paymasters were entirely innocent, in the matter.

Mr. NOBLE. I rise to a question of order. I ask whether this is not a bill to appropriate money; and if so I raise the point of order whether it must not first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it does not make an appropriation within the meaning of the rule. The universal construction has been that bills directing the accounting officer of the Government to settle accounts are not appropriation bills. The universal practice has been that to require a bill to have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole it must appropriate money directly from the Treasury. The Chair will state further that the money in question in this bill has already been appropriated once from the Treasury.

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir; but it has been misappropriated since. I am informed that there is evidence of fraud in reference to this matter; that the probability is that this money was never lost at all but has been stolen. I have been admonished more than once to look out for this bill, and the pertinacity with which it has been attempted on three or four different occasions to pass it admonishes me now that we should be on the alert all the time.

The bill only involves, to be sure, the matter of $2,600,000, a sum hardly worth our attention when we are appropriating $100,000,000 a day, but still I hold that I as well as every other member of the House ought to have the opportunity of investigating the testimony before we are called on to pay this money again. I want to know whether there is a single man in the House, unless it be the chairman of the committee, who has ever read this testimony? I am told by those around me that it has never been printed.

Now, the other day, when this same measure was up in another shape, it was postponed or referred to a committee to be reported at the next session, in order to give an opportunity to have the testimony printed, and now it comes before us in a different shape with no more light on which to act than we had then. I hope that every man who looks to the interests of the country will unite with me in requiring this matter to be investigated before it is allowed to be passed by this body.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to say that I do not know who has warned the gentleman, but I do know it is some calumniator who knows nothing about it. Now, sir, this matter has not only been thoroughly examined by two commissions appointed by different Departments, who, after laborious investigation, reported that they were satisfied there was no wrong on the part of the paymasters, but it has been examined by the Military Committee; and I call upon the gentleman from Ohio, a member of that committee, to say whether it was not their unanimous opinion that it was a fair claim and ought to be allowed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will answer the gentleman that the Military Committee examined the claim, and without any exception, I believe, at any rate with great unanimity, decided in favor of the claim. The papers in the case have gone to the printer, and I suppose are printed by this time. I think the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. NOBLE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no desire to make any captious opposition in this matter. I have no wish to wrong this man; on the contrary I will go as far as any gentleman on this floor in voting what is right. But I want this measure to go to a committee, and it certainly cannot have my vote in its favor until we have a chance to investigate it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. When this bill was up the other day, I objected to it in its present shape. I did, however, tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am willing to say the same now, that if he will add an amendment something like this—that if upon examination by the Paymaster General said Paymaster General shall deem him justly entitled to said credit, said credit shall be allowed by said Paymaster General upon his approval thereof. I am willing from my knowledge of the character of Colonel Andrews, who I believe to be one of the most incorruptible men in the country, to allow this claim to pass upon his approval.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman moves that amendment I will not object to it. When this was up before I could not imagine that there would be much discussion about it. I know this paymaster, and I know that he is as honest a man as there is anywhere.

I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send up for the information of the House.

The Clerk read, as follows:

PAYMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 20, 1864.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to the necessity of your procuring, during the present session of Congress, the passage of a bill relieving you from accountability for the public money in your charge, lost on board the steamer Ruth. As matters now stand, you are unavailable for duty, and I do not consider that I am justified in allowing an officer of the pay department to receive full pay and allowances for which he renders no equivalent. Unless, therefore, you can procure the passage of such an act, I shall, on the close of the present session of Congress, recommend that you be honorably discharged the service as unavailable for duty; and at the close of the present month I shall relieve you from duty at this station, and allow you to remain, unassigned, until further action can be had in your case by the appointing power.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. P. ANDREWS,

Paymaster General United States Army.

Major N. S. BRENTON, Additional Paymaster United States Army, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEVENS. By the proposed amendment this whole matter will be referred to the Paymaster General's office. It seems to me that there can hardly be any objection to it. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes fifty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. STEVENS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORTH and ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 28.

The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative, making a quorum.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The amendment of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. NOBLE demanded the yeas and nays; and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NOBLE and McBRIDE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-four, more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 60, nays 41, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Boutwell, Boyd, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Gooch, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Davis, Dumont, Eden, Fenton, Finck, Frank, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Steele, Stuart, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Williams, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—81.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 483) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound on the Pacific coast, by the northern route; and

An act (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The Senate have sent a message to us asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 339, to repeal a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department, and for other purposes." I move that the request of the Senate be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY TO CLAIMANTS TO SEATS FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a privileged question. A resolution was offered the other day to pay the gentlemen who came here claiming seats as Representatives from Arkansas. That resolution was referred to the Committee of Elections, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred was entered. I call up that motion to reconsider.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. DAWES. This motion is not debatable, but I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

No objection was made.

Mr. DAWES. I did not introduce that resolution, but it was referred to the Committee of Elections, and a motion to reconsider was entered because that was the only way in which the matter could be brought before the House inasmuch as the Committee of Elections could not report it back at any time. I would now like to have the House consider the question whether they will send these gentlemen back to Arkansas without the slightest compensation or any recognition whatever. The House rather summarily declined to hear those gentlemen the other day. The other branch of Congress has paid the applicants to seats in that branch their mileage; and I submit to the House that if they lay this motion on the table they will say to those three gentlemen who have come here from Arkansas that you will not recognize them at all, but that you will make their cases exceptions to the principles which have governed you in your action on all other cases.

I submit to the House that that is hardly, in my opinion, what we ought to do to those gentlemen. It will be a sad answer for them to take back to their people. It may not be wise—I do not discuss that question here—to admit them to seats upon this floor, but that is not the question before the House. I should exceedingly regret to have them go back and say to their constituents they had neither an opportunity to be heard nor any recognition whatever here, and that while the other branch of Congress paid the claimants there they could not have even that question brought before the House.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, said: I introduced this resolution the other day to pay to these gentlemen mileage and monthly pay from the time their credentials were presented. I thought it just and fair that those gentlemen should be heard before the House, and that their claims for compensation should be allowed as well as those of other gentlemen who had come here to contest seats, and who had presented credentials no better than those held by these gentlemen from Arkansas. It will be remembered that gentlemen from Virginia appeared here with credentials not as good as theirs, and with no such vote as these gentlemen from Arkansas brought with them. Yet this House gave those Virginia claimants their pay; and it has given pay to every contestant who has presented himself from any portion of the country, whether he had sufficient cause to come to Congress and contest a seat or not.

The House will bear in mind that there has been in that State an entire reorganization; that a new constitution has been adopted; that they have put in operation all the different branches of a State government, and they are working to-day. They have, according to the proclamation of the President, according to the understanding of the Government, and with the consent of the Government, the whole machinery of their State. There was a man here from Arkansas at the early part of the session claiming a right to a seat; and he was refused a hearing before the committee of the House, and he was sent back to Arkansas. Under the new organization of the State government that same man went before his district and was elected by a larger majority than many men holding seats upon this floor obtained votes.

These men came here in good faith, as Union men, and as devotedly attached to the interests of this Government as you or I or any other man upon this floor; but at the close of the session their case could not be well understood or fully heard. They asked to be heard for fifteen minutes before this House and that was refused. They come now and ask you to give them mileage and monthly pay for the two months they have been here asking of this House their right to be recognized as Representatives from Arkansas. It is wrong, I tell you members of the House of Representatives, to send these men back without that recognition which will enable them to say to the Union people of Arkansas that they were recognized by this great Government as part and parcel of it. The people of this country have spoken, and have spoken since this Congress was elected, and the Union people of the country have declared by a large and tremendous vote that these people are recognized as patriots and should be considered as within the fold of the Union and not be kicked and buffeted about as outsiders. There stand to-day in the Union Army from this State as gallant bands of Union men as ever trod God's footstool; men firm, undaunted, unyielding in their devotion to the Union. They have answered to every demand of the Union, and they now claim here to be recognized as a part of the Union element of the country. These men who are here to-day have never submitted to the rebellion. They have been kicked and cuffed and taunted and insulted and driven from their homes time and again, and their families left they knew not how nor where, and yet they are as true to the Union, the Constitution, and the Government as any man who sits upon this floor, or as any man anywhere in this whole country. It is a duty which we owe to them and to ourselves; it is a duty which we owe to the future of our country; it is a duty which we owe to our children to recognize and sustain them. I hope the resolution will not be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to be heard upon this question for a few minutes.

No objection was made.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to say a word or two, in connection with this resolution, in relation to the vote I gave the other day on the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] Lest it might be supposed from the vote that I gave, to lay that resolution on the table that I was opposed then or am opposed now to admitting these gentlemen to seats here, I desire to say that I was in favor then and am in favor now of admitting them to seats here as Representatives from the State of Arkansas. What motives may have governed others in the votes they gave on that occasion I am not able to say, but so far as I am concerned, I wish to repeat that I was in favor of their admission, and voted to lay that resolution upon the table from the fact that I believed and thought then and do still believe and think that it was a direct insult to the loyal people of the State to talk about sending commissioners down there. How is this Union ever to be restored if we continue to treat the people of these so-called seceded States in the manner in which we have treated them in the States of Arkansas and Virginia? For one I am at a loss to conceive. I had supposed that it was our duty to foster, cherish, and encourage all the Union elements that might be found to exist in any of the seceding States. I believe that that is the true policy of the Government and that it ought to be the policy of this and of succeeding Congresses.

Now, these people down in Arkansas, as was well said by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. SMITH,] have suffered everything in the Union cause, and it does seem to me that the people of the loyal States will never fully appreciate the position of such people until they go down into the border States where this war is raging and experience some of the daily and hourly sufferings which these men have experienced. Until then they will never be able to appreciate what it costs a man in those States to be a loyal man.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand that this is a proposition to pay these men their mileage.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to know then how their case differs from that of Colonel Fields, who came here as a Representative from Louisiana? The House voted as I did, to pay him $1,500. I believe that all the members upon the other side of the House voted to pay him, and although it was determined that he had no right to a seat here we voted him that amount to pay his expenses. I want to know in what respect these cases differ from that of Colonel Fields?

Mr. BLAIR. I am not able to say.

Mr. DAWES. If I may be allowed, I might tell the difference. It is just this: the gentleman from Louisiana had but four or five hundred votes and these men had about as many thousand. That is the only distinction.

A MEMBER. Is there any evidence of that here?

Mr. DEMING. I object to further debate on this question.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been given to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BLAIR] to speak.

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has given to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] the information he desires. These men, I understand, have certificates that they were duly elected as members of this House to represent their respective districts in the State of Arkansas. What reason can this House give for rejecting this resolution?

I was about to say that it does seem impossible for northern men to fully appreciate the condition of those who live in the seceded States, who are Union men, and who have waded through fire and blood to prove their loyalty. In the northern States men can hardly be anything else than Union men, while in the southern States Union men are persecuted from day to day and have to sacrifice everything for their principles. If we do not encourage such men, if we turn them back and refuse to recognize them, how can we expect to have any Union sentiment in the southern States? I hope that justice will be done to these men; that their loyalty will be properly recognized, and that this resolution will be adopted.

Mr. ASHLEY. I object to any more performances of this sort, [laughter,] and call for tellers on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLAIR and ASHLEY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50; noes 43.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SMITH. I inquire of the Chair whether the resolution goes back to the Committee of Elections?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is there.

Mr. SMITH. I would inquire further whether if the committee do not report till next session of Congress, and then report favorably, these men will then be entitled to draw their mileage and per diem for that session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that will depend entirely on the action of the House at next session when the Committee of Elections shall be called, or at this session if it should be prolonged and the committee should be called again and report back the resolution. It will be in the power of the House to amend, reject, or adopt it.

REBELLIOUS STATES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been overthrown a republican form of government.

The amendment of the Senate was in the form of a substitute for the House bill, declaring that where the inhabitants of any State have been declared in a state of insurrection against the United States by proclamation of the President, by force and virtue of the act to provide for the collection of duties and imposts, and for other purposes, approved July 13, 1861, they are incapable of casting any vote for electors of President or Vice President of the United States, or of electing Senators or Representatives in Congress until such insurrection in such States is suppressed or abandoned, and until the inhabitants have returned to their obedience to the Government of the United States, and until such return to obedience shall be declared by proclamation of the President issued by virtue of an act of Congress hereafter to be passed authorizing the same.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we had better concur. It is one good thing to get, if we cannot get anything else.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. It will be for the committee of conference to see whether we cannot get better.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not want to have electors sent from Arkansas to the next presidential election.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. HARDING called for tellers on the motion to concur.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 51.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the Senate amendments on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, but the Chair will state that it will carry the whole bill with it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is what I desire.

Upon the motion to lay on the table 38 voted in the affirmative and 41 in the negative; no quorum.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 42, nays 65, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Blair, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Denison, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Ganson, Griswold, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Knapp, Law, Long, Marcy, McAllister, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Nelson, Noble, John O'Neill, Odell, Patterson, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robinson, Ross, Smith, William G. Steele, Stiles, Wadsworth, Whaley, Wheeler, and Chilton A. White—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Higby, Hotchkiss, Ashbel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stevens, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, and Windom—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, William G. Brown, Chanfer, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dumont, Eden, Farnsworth, Fenton, Finck, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hutchins, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knox, Lazenby, Le Blond, Mallory, Marvin, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Morrison, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thayer, Thomas, Voorhees, Ward, Webster, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—75.

So the Senate amendments were not laid on the table.

During the call of the roll, Mr. HALE stated that he had paired on all political questions with Mr. KALBFLEISCH.

Mr. BLAIR. Is a motion to postpone in order?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question be not seconded a motion to postpone will then be in order.

On seconding the demand for the previous question 49 voted in the affirmative and 21 in the negative; no quorum.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. NELSON, and DAVIS of Maryland.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-seven, a further count not being demanded.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

On the question of the House insisting on its disagreement and asking a committee of conference 53 voted in the affirmative and 20 in the negative; no quorum.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. NORTON and C. A. WHITE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 42.

So the House determined to ask a conference with the Senate on the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which a conference was asked for; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CARMACK AND RAMSAY.

Mr. ALLEY, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the House (No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsay, reported that the committee had met, and after full and free conference had found themselves unable to agree.

Mr. HALE. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and ask for another conference on the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLEY. I do hope that motion will not prevail. The Senate were unanimous in insisting on their amendment, and it is useless to waste further time in regard to the matter.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Before the House disposes of this matter, I hope it will understand what will be the effect of its action. I understand that unless this bill passes the Government will feel itself instructed to pay out of the Treasury to these parties a very large sum of money.

Mr. HALE. Unless this resolution passes I understand the First Comptroller has declared his intention to pay to these parties a very large sum of money.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Exactly; and this joint resolution is to prevent it.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think the House by a very large majority decided that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. HALE. That is true.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. ALLEY. I hope I shall have the opportunity of saying a word before the vote is taken upon that motion. It is unfair to allow reasons to be stated on one side and to exclude them on the other. I desire to say that the remark of the gentleman from Illinois is calculated to produce an entirely wrong impression.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to debate.

Mr. SPALDING. I will withdraw the motion to lay on the table to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to explain.

Mr. ALLEY. I stated that I hoped the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HALE,] to appoint another committee of conference would not prevail, for the reason that the Post Office Committee on the part of the Senate were unanimous in the position taken by the amendment of the Senate, as were the committee of conference on the part of the Senate; and I believe their action was right. If the motion to lay the whole subject on the table should prevail, then there would be no further action in the matter. I however prefer that that course should not be pursued. I think it is due to these parties that the House should determine the matter one way or the other. I however would much prefer that it should be disposed of as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] than that another committee of conference should be appointed upon it.

Mr. HALE. I want to say one word before the vote is taken upon the reference of this bill to another committee of conference. The House will recollect that in the last Congress this very claim was before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and that that committee reported unanimously against it. In the mean time, however, after the adjournment of Congress, the present First Comptroller of the Treasury, who may be a very good man for aught I know, for I know nothing about him, declared his intention of going on and awarding damages to Carmack & Ramsay under the act of 1856. The First Comptroller of the Treasury to whom that matter was referred by that act of Congress, at that time investigated the claim and reported against it, that these parties were not entitled to damages. And so that claim remained until the last session of Congress, when the new Comptroller came into office.

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman claims that the First Comptroller decided against it.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir. That was Mr. Medill.

Mr. SPALDING. Did not his predecessor, Mr. Whittlesey, decide in favor of it?

Mr. HALE. He made no decision.

Mr. SPALDING. He did decide in favor of it.

Mr. HALE. There is no record of that fact. I understand that in conversation he was in favor of the claim, but he never decided in favor of it in his official capacity. The only report ever made was that of Mr. Medill, who decided that these parties were not entitled to anything.

Now, notwithstanding the decision made by the tribunal to which that matter was referred at their own suggestion, Carmack & Ramsay, not satisfied with that decision, want the new Comptroller to reopen the case. I hope that will not be done. It is a large claim. It is difficult to say how large the claim is. It is something over one hundred thousand dollars. It may be half a million dollars for aught we know.

Mr. WINDOM. I was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads which examined into the subject, and I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to understand whether the Comptroller will allow $1,860,000, the amount they first asked for, or $100,000 which they at last agreed to take?

Mr. HALE. I do not know, but the Comptroller has expressed his determination to reopen the case. I cannot say what the Comptroller will allow. He has declared his intention to reopen the case, and on further investigation he may allow these parties whatever he sees proper.

The case has been once before the Comptroller, and he has decided against these parties.

Under the circumstances, I submit to the House whether the proposition is not fair and just to refer the whole subject to the Court of Claims, because one Comptroller has decided against it, and the other Comptroller, it is said, will decide in favor of it. That is the proposition of the House. The Senate struck that out and provided that the Comptroller should allow damages under certain circumstances.

What objection is there to referring it to the Court of Claims? It is a competent tribunal where all the merits of the claim can be gone into. If they have a good claim, if they had a valid contract with the Department—I do not believe they ever had a valid contract with the Government, although these parties say they had—I do not wish, however, to go into a detail of the facts of the case. If the claim has merit, why do they decline to go before the Court of Claims? They have no right to go before the Comptroller and have the case reopened. Congress is willing that they may go to the Court of Claims, and we passed a resolution for that purpose. If they have a good claim they can make it appear to that tribunal. It ought not to be objected to by any person who is disposed to do justice alike to the Government and to these parties.

Mr. Speaker, this thing ought to be disposed of one way or the other, and I hope some one will call for the previous question. If we do not appoint another committee of conference the First Comptroller will go on and allow this large sum to these parties.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that the House will appoint a new committee of conference on this subject; and if they understand it, Mr. Speaker, as well as you understand it and as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands it, I shall have no fear of the result. This is an old customer. The Speaker will recollect that, when chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, he killed this claim of Carmack & Ramsay at the last session. But it seems to have as many lives as a cat. It has been here fifteen years, and decided against in every shape and form. They were allowed to take it before the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and Mr. Medill decided that they had no claim whatever. Afterwards, by some means, they got it reopened, and I supposed there had been a qualified decision by Mr. Whittlesey in regard to it; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania says there is no such decision on file. But I am told that unless Congress does something now the First Comptroller believes he is called upon to act under the law as it now exists, and that a very large sum will be awarded to these men—an amount which the House has decided over and over again is not their due, and which they will get unless this action is carried out.

The gentleman from Indiana, not now in his seat, examined this matter very thoroughly, and he was of opinion that there would be a vast loss to the public Treasury unless this resolution of the House should pass. It is fair and just, and to it no complaint should be made by Carmack and Ramsay. It refers the whole matter to the Court of Claims, which is the proper tribunal to examine a question of this kind if it is a proper tribunal for anything.

Mr. WINDOM. I was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads during the last Congress, and this question was thoroughly examined by that committee, and I was never more thoroughly convinced that a claim was without the shadow of a foundation than I was in this case. I am certainly unaware of what amount the Comptroller proposes to allow. If I am not totally mistaken in the facts, these parties originally claimed more than $1,800,000 and came into Congress and asked it, stating that it was a just claim. They finally agreed to take, if we would pass a bill to that effect, about $100,000.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to say to the House that I have examined this claim from its inception, from the first time it first found its way into Congress. I have examined the opinions of the different committees who have reported upon it; I have examined the opinions of the different Comptrollers who have had it under their consideration—the opinion of Mr. Whittlesey, of Mr. Medill, and I think I know the opinion of the present Comptroller, than whom a more honest and judicious man does not live in these United States—and I say considerably that I have never examined a case as a judicial officer where I was brought to a more satisfactory conclusion that there was justice in a case than in this of Carmack and the persons connected with him to a certain extent—to the extent of the expenditure made in preparing to carry out this large contract with the Government; and I believe this contract is doing gross injustice to an honest citizen, if Congress refuses to give him a hearing before this officer of the Government under the law of Congress passed some years ago.

Mr. HALE. Why does he not go before the Court of Claims?

Mr. SPALDING. Why do you not submit it to the officer before whom the claim should go? I charge that there are influences at work to bring this claim before the Court of Claims which should not be permitted to obtain in reference to this contract. I challenge that this claim has had an investigation by the chairman of the Post Office Committee of the Senate, who was himself Postmaster General for a number of years, and who as a lawyer stands without, perhaps, a competitor in this House. That man came, by his laborious examination, to the same conclusion to which my mind has been brought—that to the extent of nearly $200,000 this claim is just. We ought to look upon this matter with indulgence, and ought not to arraign an officer of the Government who, in the line of his duty, is about to investigate or perhaps has investigated this claim. I think I may be warranted in saying that he has already examined the evidence and heard the argument of counsel on both sides, and that, too, under the sanction of the Post Office Department, and when he was about to make up his decision deliberately, this measure was brought into the House for the purpose of arresting his judgment. The Senate committee has unanimously, as I understand, concluded that the case should be referred back to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and that he should award damages, if any are sustained, within the limits of time specified in the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, resumed the floor.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. This is not a question as to the merits of the claim at all. In 1856 Congress passed a measure referring the claim to the First Comptroller. That officer examined it and reported adversely to the claim. Since that time these same claimants have again presented this claim to another Comptroller, on the ground that it was not adjudicated by his predecessor. If this thing is to continue where is the claim ever to end? If the present First Comptroller decides adversely to the claimants they may present it to the next Comptroller under the same law of 1856. In consequence of these facts the House passed a resolution referring the case to the Court of Claims for adjudication, where, when once adjudicated, it shall not be again resurrected.

The Senate, however, amended the joint resolution by referring the matter back to the First Comptroller. The difference between the two Houses, as I understand, is simply whether this claim shall go to the Court of Claims, where it can be adjudicated and permanently decided, or whether the claimants shall be allowed to go before every Comptroller until they shall find somebody in that office who will admit the justice of their claim and give them what they ask. That, as I understand, is the only question to be decided. The merits of the claim are not involved in it at all.

● MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Hickey, their Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

CARMACK AND RAMSAY—AGAIN.

Mr. ALLEY. With some knowledge of the subject, I will certainly be permitted to say a few words.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I did not suppose that the gentleman desired to be heard, because he himself moved to lay the subject on the table, so that nobody could be heard.

Mr. ALLEY. Not at all. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I did not move to lay on the table. I simply renewed that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was before there was any discussion.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the feeling which this case always excites when it is brought into the House. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has told us that this case was examined by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; that he was a member of that committee, and that he understood the case thoroughly. The very statement he makes shows that he has not the first conception of the character of this claim, when he tells the House that it was for $1,800,000.

Mr. WINDOM. What was the amount originally claimed?

Mr. ALLEY. The amount they claimed to have expended was $264,000.

Mr. WINDOM. What was the amount of the whole claim brought before Congress?

Mr. ALLEY. The maximum amount fixed by the Senate and concurred in by the House could not exceed $113,000. That is the exact state of the case.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman does not answer me. I did not ask what expenses they claimed, but what was the whole amount of the claims that they raked up?

Mr. ALLEY. The claim formerly made by their counsel but ignored by them amounted to a very large sum, to something over a million dollars, but not the sum which the gentleman names and which has been used to the prejudice of the parties. That has been everywhere denied by them and disclaimed by them, and I contend that any gentleman who has investigated this matter and knows the merits of the case who will reiterate that statement does them gross injustice.

Mr. WINDOM. As the gentleman accuses me of doing gross injustice, I hope he will answer me one or two questions.

Mr. ALLEY. No, sir; I must decline to yield.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, that is hardly fair.

Mr. ALLEY. I say that when a gentleman on this floor makes a statement of that kind, it is clear to me that he has not investigated the matter.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I must resume the floor. The gentleman from Massachusetts holds the floor by my courtesy, and I think he ought to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALLEY. Certainly I will yield.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman accuses me of doing these parties injustice, or at least of carelessly misrepresenting them as to the amount of their claim. He says that he has given it a very thorough examination and that it is "something over a million dollars." How much above?

Mr. ALLEY. My impression is about half a million. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. That is $1,500,000. I would ask the gentleman whether he does not see that when a claimant employs an attorney and that attorney puts in a case, the client is responsible for what the attorney says?

Mr. ALLEY. I believe that these gentlemen are very honest men.

Mr. DAWES. Will my colleague let me answer the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. WINDOM. I want the gentleman to say if these parties are not responsible for the claim their attorney put in.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman not know that that was a separate and distinct claim and for prospective profits, and that this is a claim for expenses actually incurred? They are two distinct things.

Mr. WINDOM. I know the report said that it was for prospective damages, but I only alluded to the whole amount they had reckoned up as due them.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Now, I will let the gentleman from Massachusetts go on for a few moments and then I will call the previous question.

Mr. ALLEY. I wish to say, with regard to this matter of investigation, that the case did go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and was investigated. I was on the committee and participated in the investigation as far as it went, and concurred in the report of the committee. Subsequently I had a conversation with Judge COLLAMER of the Senate on the subject and told him that I thought it extraordinary that a claim of this kind should be presented there and should pass unanimously and that our committee, upon investigation, should find that it had no merit. The judge replied by saying, "Mr. ALLEY, if you will investigate this case thoroughly and understand it fully, if you do not find that these are honest men and have, to the amount of $100,000, an honest claim against the Government, then you are not the man I take you to be."

Mr. WINDOM. On the general question of honesty, when men put in a claim a part of which is false, does it not create a suspicion in the gentleman's mind that the whole may be false?

Mr. ALLEY. Not at all in this case. I am no lawyer; the gentleman is, and I think he has made a great many claims for his clients for much more than he thought them entitled to, and he would think it very hard if that was allowed to prejudice their claims, especially when it was done without their knowledge.

Gentlemen all over the House have alluded to these investigations, and the influence of the Speaker has been invoked and his action has been made known to the House. Now, no man has more confidence in the Speaker than I have, but I differed with him in this matter. I think I investigated it more thoroughly than he did. I think my opinion in this case is worth as much as his, because I believe I investigated it more thoroughly, and I have a right to differ with him. My mind was led to a reinvestigation of this case by the remarks of Senator COLLAMER, of Vermont, who was formerly Postmaster General, and knew all about this matter from beginning to end.

Now, Judge COLLAMER was of the opinion that these men were entitled to this sum of money. I had a conversation with Elisha Whittlesey upon this subject. I presume there is no man in this House who knew Mr. Whittlesey but what knows if he erred at all it was always against a claimant. He was so straight-backed in this respect that he leaned over the other way. That was his character, and yet he always maintained to the day of his death that the claim of these men was perfectly just. He told me that in the whole history of his experience in Congress as a member of the Committee of Claims, and in the Treasury Department, he never knew a case in which there was such prejudice, such combinations, such injustice and wrong inflicted upon innocent parties. He said that no parties in his judgment were ever entitled to compensation more than these were to the compensation they claimed.

Now, sir, this was the character of the claim in the opinion of Judge COLLAMER and Mr. Whittlesey, and it is, from all the investigation I have been able to give it, its just character in my opinion. The Postmaster General who made the contract with these parties made it in perfect good faith under a Whig Administration. The Postmaster General who succeeded was determined apparently—I say apparently, for it was the conviction in my mind after due investigation that he was determined to throw every obstacle in the way of these parties obtaining justice for the purpose of enabling persons of his own political fraternity to reap the benefits of that contract.

Mr. DRIGGS. I want to know of the gentleman, if that be the character of the claim, what objection there is to allowing it to be investigated and decided by the Court of Claims?

Mr. STEVENS. I should like to know of the gentleman to what political party he refers as being prejudiced against these men.

Mr. ALLEY. The Democratic party.

Mr. STEVENS. Why, sir, Mr. Ramsay was the bitterest copperhead I ever knew.

Mr. ALLEY. This was long before any such party as copperhead was ever known.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I must resume the floor.

Mr. ALLEY. I hope the gentleman will allow me for a moment longer. I desire to say that it is hardly fair for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make that remark in reference to Mr. Ramsay at that time. I do not know what he may be to-day. I do not know him personally; I never saw him.

Mr. STEVENS. I know him very well. He came from my district, and I say to the gentleman that he was born a copperhead and has been growing so ever since. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEY. I do not know anything about that. I know that this contract was made by the Postmaster General during Mr. Fillmore's administration, and that he was fully indorsed by his Postmaster General as an honest man. The merits of the case have not as yet been alluded to scarcely, and I should like to state the facts fully, but as I hold the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois I must yield to him.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Now, sir, I insist upon resuming the floor, and I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The motion that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask for another committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House asked another committee of conference; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL COMPENSATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, July 2, 1864.

SIR: In pursuance of a resolution adopted June 30, 1864, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to request Hon. BENJAMIN F. LOAN and Hon. GREEN CLAY SMITH to refund certain moneys specified in said resolution, the undersigned has the honor to report that during the month of April last Mr. LOAN called at this office to draw a month's salary, and on it being suggested that he had received pay as a military officer and as a member of Congress for the same time, he admitted it to be true, and inquired the course pursued by other officers under similar circumstances, and was informed they drew pay only as a member for the time they were out of the military service. Thereupon Mr. LOAN declined to draw any money, and stated that he could not recollect the exact day he quitted the military service, but would ascertain and report. Since the 4th of March last he has drawn no part of the salary due him as a member of Congress, and there is now standing to his credit with the United States—after debiting his account ($782 88) for the time he received pay as a military officer, namely, from the 4th March, 1863, to the 8th day of June, 1863—$217.

Mr. G. C. SMITH had the same suggestions made to him that were made to Mr. LOAN. He seemed surprised to learn that he had unlawfully received pay both as a military officer and a member of Congress, and stated that he could arrange to refund the amount, but up to this date has failed to do so, and has drawn his salary as member of Congress from the 4th day of March, 1863, to the 4th day of June, 1864, and is now indebted to the United States $1,717 12. On being requested, in accordance with said resolution, to refund the amount, stated that he himself would make a written statement to the House, which statement is herewith submitted as a part of the report.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
N. G. ORDWAY,

Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker of the House of Representatives, United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 1, 1864.

SIR: Your note with the account charged against me in favor of the United States was received this morning, and after consideration I answer as follows:

I was appointed brigadier general of United States volunteers 11th of June, 1862, and remained such to the 1st day of December, 1863. August 3, 1863, I was elected to a seat as a member of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. I continued in the service, however, until the 1st of December following, and drew pay to the 1st of December, when I ceased to be a brigadier general in the volunteer service. I drew no more pay as such. On the 7th day of December, 1863, I was sworn in as a member of Congress, and for the first time accepted said office. I was then no longer in the military service as an officer of the Army. I drew pay for such time only as I was in the service; when I ceased to be an officer I that moment ceased to draw pay. I was entitled to a regular salary fixed by law, to wit, $3,000 per annum. It matters not whether Congress sat one month or six, the members of Congress were entitled to their salary of $3,000. Now, when my resignation as brigadier general was accepted on the 1st day of December, 1863, I was neither an officer in the Army nor a member of Congress, and when on the 7th day of December I became a member of Congress I clearly thought I was entitled to my salary as such. This I claim as a matter of justice and right, for so much money was believed to be necessary to support and pay for time and labor in attending Congress. Formerly they were paid per diem, now they are paid a fixed salary, and as a member of Congress I believe I am entitled to that salary. I can conceive of no conflict, and so stated when my attention was called to the matter. I stated that if it was wrong for me to draw and use the amount of money now charged against me, I would refund it; yet I must claim that if in right I am entitled to my salary as a member of Congress I should not pay it back. I had no disposition then nor have I now to receive a dollar from the Government to which I am not legally and justly entitled. If this money is not mine I will with pleasure refund it; if it is mine the House will not ask me to pay it back. I submit this statement to accompany your report, that the question may be fairly brought before that body, and such action taken as will fully and justly settle the matter. When this was first brought to my attention, with a statement that I and one other gentleman were alone in this category, my impulse was to settle it, and I so declared and so intended, whatever my own opinion was in regard to it; but since the matter is before Congress by resolution, I have concluded now to test the matter and have the case decided in such way as it seems best.

Respectfully, &c.,

G. CLAY SMITH.

N. G. ORDWAY, Esq., Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to refer that communication to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COX. I hope we shall dispose of this matter now. I think it will be more satisfactory both to the gentleman from Kentucky and to the House not to allow the matter to go over to another session, as it will if it is referred. Let the House decide at once whether the member from Kentucky has money that does not belong to him or not.

Mr. ODELL. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will not prevail.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will say that I have no desire to refer that portion of the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms which relates to Mr. LOAN. That is disposed of by the report itself. I modify my motion so as to refer so much of the report as refers to Hon. GREEN CLAY SMITH to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COX. There is no necessity of having the resolution referred. Every one in the House has already decided the question. It is res adjudicata.

The SPEAKER. The pendency of the motion to refer cuts off all amendment.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will not prevail. Every man here has already made up his mind, and especially those who were members of the last House of Representatives. The question has been decided over and over again. There is nothing, sir, more clearly defined than that a member of Congress cannot draw pay for any other office. It is due to the gentleman and the House that they shall say now and at this time that no claim of that character will be allowed.

Mr. GANSON. I ask that the original resolution be read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. INGERSOLL demanded the previous question on the motion to refer.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question in order to let me make one remark.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the demand for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say at this time that I was never more surprised than I was the other day by the introduction of the resolution by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GANSON.] My attention had been called to the fact previously by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I had stated to him emphatically, as I have done to this House, that if I had done wrong I would certainly make it right.

I did not believe, sir, that it was intended a member of Congress should draw $1,000 only to pay the expenses of a long seven months' session in Washington. I believed I was entitled to the money that I drew or I would not have drawn it. What I did was done honestly and with no view that I was doing wrong. What I did I did openly, publicly, in the presence of everybody. There was the record of my resignation in the War Department to be seen by every member upon this floor. I stated to the officers of this House that I had resigned from the military service, and that I had drawn my pay as I believed I was entitled to it. I furthermore stated that if I had done wrong I was willing to make the proper correction. It is my intention to do that whatever my loss may have been.

And since the introduction of the resolution into this House I feel it to be my duty as a man, that I owe it to myself, and I believe that Congress owes it to me, that I shall have an investigation to go before the country to decide whether I am right or wrong. I had no notice, no consultation with any member upon this floor that any resolution of this kind would be introduced. I do not object to the resolution. I do not object to the whole world knowing what I do in a public or private capacity. All I want is a fair and full investigation that my people may know how this thing stands. That is all I have to say.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me for a moment. I do not want my action taken as having been instigated by anything personal to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH. I did not so understand it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. COX. I believe in the doctrine which we have already laid down in this House in the last and in the present Congress, that there shall not be any military men commissioned in this House.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman from Ohio will consult the archives of the War Department he will find that I went out of the military service in December last. I am not now in the military service.

Mr. COX. Then, according to the rate of pay fixed by law, and according to the usages of that service, the gentleman should not have drawn these $1,700 belonging to my constituents. As I have said, it is not a matter personal to the gentleman.

I have since I have been a member voted every time, on every opportunity, in favor of that high governmental principle that the military shall not by any construction sit and legislate in this House. It was fixed by our forefathers in the Constitution. It has been recognized again and again by other Congresses. It has been recognized by this Congress. If we recognize gentlemen in both capacities the Executive may have here his instrumentalities for the purpose of forwarding his own peculiar legislation. I stand upon principle.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it is not a principle, and has not been a principle recognized, that officers below the grade of brigadier general have held civil offices and received pay from the Federal Government while they drew pay for military offices which they held. If there is no conflict in the one case, why should there be in the other?

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman himself, in a report he made, laid down a rule entirely different. More than that, I do not know a civil officer who draws pay as a military officer at the same time. I know I could not get a bill through this House to pay a consul abroad simply because of his position in a hospital in South America, for fear we might be paying a civil officer twice. But there is an express statute which forbids Congress from paying a man twice, once for military and once for civil service. When Mr. Chandler's case came before us the other day, we refused to pay him the pay of a member of Congress because during all the time of the contest he was receiving pay as United States district attorney for Virginia.

We must stand upon principle, no matter what a man's name may be, whether it is Jones or Smith. We must stand upon principle, and I want the gentleman to come up and fork over that money which belongs in part to my constituents.

Mr. SMITH. I can say to the gentleman that my constituents have paid out more money and sent more men to the war than his have.

Mr. COX. I stand by the constitutional provision, and the gentleman places himself in a bad predicament before the country and before his constituents by receiving pay twice. But more than that; the gentleman was informed—

Mr. INGERSOLL. I must resume the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I want the gentleman to understand that so far as my constituents are concerned I am responsible to them.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I insist upon the previous question.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. INGERSOLL and Mr. COX.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-five, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question recurring on the motion offered by Mr. INGERSOLL to refer so much of the communication of the Sergeant-at-Arms as relates to the gentleman from Kentucky to the Committee on the Judiciary,

Mr. W. J. ALLEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 29, nays 81, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blair, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Garfield, Hale, Benjamin G. Harris, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, McBride, Samuel F. Miller, Charles O'Neill, William H. Randall, Scofield, Shannon, Spalding, Webster, and Wilder—29.

NAYS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Beaman, Bliss, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Dixon, Briggs, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Ganson, Good, Gri-wold, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Hooper, Augustus C. Chauler, Ambrose W. Clark, Brewster, Clarke, Clay, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Fink, Frank, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Herick, Higby, Holman, Hutchins, Jackson, Philip Johnson, Kauffisch, Kasson, Francis W. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—72.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Blow, Brundage, Brunnell, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Brewster, Clarke, Clay, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Fink, Frank, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Herick, Higby, Holman, Hutchins, Jackson, Philip Johnson, Kauffisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Lazar, Le Blond, Mallory, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, McClure, McKim, McKim, William H. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—72.

So the House refused to refer the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DAWSON stated that Mr. HOLMAN had paired off with Mr. ORTH.

Mr. ORTH. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that we are not paired upon questions on which we should both vote the same way.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to refer the whole subject to the Committee on the Judiciary; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I now offer the following resolution, and upon it I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That Hon. G. C. SMITH, a member of this House from Kentucky, be directed to repay to the Sergeant at Arms the sum of $1,750 which has been drawn from the Treasury of the United States in violation of law and the Constitution, and that if he fail to refund the same the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to deduct the same from his future salary as a member of the Thirty-Eighth Congress.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to say a word or two only on that resolution.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the demand for the previous question and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, holding the floor in the mean time.

Mr. SMITH. I understood the original resolution to be that I be requested, as well as the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. LOAN,] to refund this money to the Sergeant-at-Arms. I understand that resolution, together with the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to be now before the House. I do not understand the object of the resolution now offered, and especially the last part of it. I want the gentleman from Ohio to understand that the vote which has just been given by the House is a sufficient indication to me without that latter clause of his resolution. In my communication to the Sergeant-at-Arms, which accompanies his report, I said in polite and courteous terms that if this House decided that the money was due I would with pleasure refund it. I shall do so now. Why, then, the latter part of the resolution should have been added, that if I refuse to do it the amount is to be deducted from my future pay, I cannot understand, unless it be that there is lying beyond and far back of this proceeding a disposition to affect me at this time. Well, throw your shafts, put forth all your efforts, do what you please, act as you please, malign me as you please, you cannot defeat me, for I am the representative of truth and justice and right and of correct principles.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. After the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky that the money will be paid, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will accept this as an amendment to his resolution:

Resolved, That no member of this House can draw pay as a member and pay for any other office under the Government at the same time.

Mr. COX. I do not care about accepting that as a substitute for my resolution, although I have no doubt it is good as a general proposition.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COX. I prefer to answer what fell from the lips of the gentleman from Kentucky first. I have already told the gentleman from Kentucky that I meant nothing personal in the remarks I made about this matter. What I have said and done was not intended to affect his future politically, personally, or otherwise. He has taken a great deal more pains to affect the future of other members here who live across the Ohio river, and would bind Kentucky in this Union by all the bonds of kindness and friendship, than we have ever taken the pains to affect his political or personal relations.

I added to the resolution those last words about deducting this amount from his pay because the gentleman from Kentucky had been advised that he was drawing his pay wrongfully; and I understand from another gentleman from Kentucky that during the last campaign in that State it was charged upon him that he would draw double pay. He has had his mind called to the subject again and again. It is not without reflection that he has drawn this pay. He has refused to comply with the resolution of this House, adopted after a fair statement before the House of this question, and I would like to know how the United States Government can make itself whole unless they can make the gentleman square his accounts. I know nothing about a man's honor in this connection. I want simply the mercantile account stated, "Dr." so much, "Cr." so much, and at the end of the gentleman's term I want to see the account squared and balanced in the proper way.

Mr. SMITH. I want to know what gentleman from Kentucky made the statement the gentleman alludes to.

Mr. COX. It came from a Senator from Kentucky, Mr. GARRETT Davis.

Mr. SMITH. I pronounce it unequivocally false.

Mr. COX. I was informed of the fact by a gentleman from Kentucky who sits on my right.

Mr. SMITH. No such question entered into the campaign so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to say that Mr. DAVIS would be as far from making an incorrect statement as any man on this floor. I will remind my colleague that there was an anonymous letter published in the canvass between my colleague and Mr. Menzies stating that my colleague was drawing pay as a brigadier general, and would, if elected, also draw pay for the same time as a member of Congress. I ask my colleague whether such a letter was not published in the Louisville Journal?

Mr. SMITH. I will very readily answer my colleague that any number of anonymous letters were published and all sorts of efforts were made to defeat me. I am not responsible for such anonymous letters. The particular letter which my colleague refers to I cannot say whether I saw or not. I think I did. Whether that question was mooted I do not know. But I will say this to my colleague, that if a sage Senator of the United States from one of the Commonwealths of this Union takes an anonymous letter as the basis of a charge of this kind to affect the standing of a member of the House of Representatives from his own State, he shows that he carries his prejudice and malignity far beyond the high tone which should characterize a gentleman and a Senator.

Mr. HARDING. I want to understand from my colleague whether there was such a letter published in the canvass.

Mr. SMITH. I do not deny it, sir.

Mr. COX. Then I resume the floor. That is all the charge I made against the gentleman. Therefore when he denied this charge and intimated that it was made impertinently, of course he must have forgotten that there was a communication of that kind during the campaign. That is the most charitable construction I can give to his denial.

The reason why I added this last proviso to my resolution is this: the gentleman said the other day that he could not pay this sum back just now without some inconvenience.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman from Ohio never heard me say anything of the kind.

Mr. COX. I understood that the gentleman said so the other day on the floor of the House; and I was proposing to save the gentleman any inconvenience on that account. I propose, if possible, to bring the resolution within the line of his convenience by allowing the Sergeant-at-Arms to deduct from his future salary anything drawn wrongfully. What can be fairer or franker to the gentleman than that? But he seems to take it as a reflection upon his honor. Otherwise the gentleman might be compelled to go around and borrow money if he be in that condition, as I hope he is not. My resolution gives the Sergeant-at-Arms power to draw upon the gentleman's future salary. I think that was very kind and considerate on the part of the House, and the gentleman should so regard it. I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not press his resolution.

Mr. COX. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I only want to say that this matter is too clear to spend any time about it. It has been the subject of frequent reports from committees of the House. It is perfectly clear, and there is no occasion for the passage either of the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] or of that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

The question as to the construction of law in reference to our salaries was not a very clear one at first. The question arose upon the application of a gentleman from Kansas to draw his salary for the entire session, although he came to Congress at the very heel of the session. It was referred to the Committee of Elections, and a very able and ingenious argument was made by the gentleman from Kansas in support of the position that he was entitled to the whole salary, the point which I understand the gentleman from Kentucky now to make. The claim, however, was reported against by the committee, and the construction given by them was sanctioned by the House, and that construction has remained as the rule under which we have acted since that time.

There is no occasion, therefore, for any further resolution or any further action on the part of the House, especially as the gentleman from Kentucky has all along signified his readiness to conform to what was the construction of the House, and only desires to know what that construction is.

I say there is no need of any further action, for the rule upon the point is now established and clear, although there might have been at some time some doubt as to whether a man coming in and only serving a part of a Congress was entitled to pay for the entire Congress. I move, therefore, to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. COX. I did not give way for a motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman thinks I was not at liberty, holding the floor from him, to make the motion, I will wait until he moves the previous question, and will then make the motion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Like the gentleman from Massachusetts, I see no necessity for any resolution on this subject; and as my colleague is now satisfied what is the construction of the House and is ready to return the money, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw his resolution. I think it is due to him as a member of this House.

Mr. SMITH. I appreciate the courtesy of my colleague, but I hope nevertheless the gentleman from Ohio will carry out the dictates of his conscience in this matter.

Mr. COX. I will carry out the dictates of my own judgment in the matter, especially because otherwise it would operate as a censure upon the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. LOAN.] Inasmuch, therefore, as the gentleman from Kentucky insists upon it, I will hold on to my resolution and call the previous question for its adoption. I was about to modify the resolution under the generous and proper request of the gentleman's colleague, but as the gentleman himself insists upon it I will leave the resolution as it is and call for the previous question upon it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to suggest a modification to my colleague.

Mr. DAWSON. I object to that.

Mr. DAWES. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. DAWSON. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 41, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Coffroth, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Deming, Donnelly, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, McBride, McClurg, Samuel P. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stevens, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—72.

NAYS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Bliss, Chandler, Cox, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Ganson, Harding, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Long, Marcy, Middleton, Morrison, Amos Myers, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Pondicton, Prayn, Robinson, John B. Steele, Stiles, Sweet, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Wadsworth, Ward, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Winfield—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cobb, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Dumont, Fenton, Finck, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Jonckes, Philip Johnson, Kahlboischi, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Lazarus, Le Blond, Mallory, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, William H. Miller, Nelson, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Strouse, Swart, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—69.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF MORNING SESSION.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a privileged question.

I move to extend the time for taking a recess until five o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to take this opportunity of saying that I hope a quorum will be here at the evening session. There will be important business on which we shall have to act. The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am instructed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 339, to repeal a joint resolution to grant additional rooms to the Agricultural Department, and for other purposes, to submit a report, which I will explain in a few words in order to save the time of the House. The House struck out the section appropriating $100,000 for the erection of buildings for the Department of Agriculture, and the Senate recede from their disagreement to that amendment with the following amendment, in which the House agrees. The Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to select suitable rooms for the accommodation of his office and to make the necessary improvements, and $3,500 is appropriated to pay the rent of the same for one year; provided that such rooms shall not be rented for any period longer than three years. This gets rid of a very ugly question. It is a unanimous report, and I move that it be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think that this is a most unnecessary appropriation.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 438) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; when the Speaker signed the same.

PENSION LAW.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the general pension bill to inform the House that they have been unable to agree. I move that the House adhere. This is a subject, I will say, of the greatest importance. There are now upon file four to five thousand applications in the Pension Office which require legislation. I think it necessary that we should come to some conclusion upon this bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman proposes to adhere, that ends the matter. He should move to insist and ask for another committee of conference.

Mr. WHALEY. I make that motion, that the House insist and ask for further conference between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 511, to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the first amendment of the Senate, to which the committee of conference agrees, adds the word "marauders;" so that it will read, "guerrilla-marauders." It is a verbal and not a substantial amendment.

The third amendment of the Senate, in which the committee of conference recommends a concurrence, is in reference to soldiers dying in hospitals. It is provided by that amendment that soldiers dying in hospitals after their discharge, and not being able to get home, shall be considered as dying in the service so far as bounties are concerned.

We also amend the title to read, "For the more speedy punishment of guerrilla-marauders, and for other purposes." I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, moved to lay the report upon the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The report was adopted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

Mr. MORRILL. I am authorized by the Committee of Ways and Means to report a joint resolution imposing a special income duty.

Mr. ROSS. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read.

The resolution provides that in addition to the income duty already imposed by law there shall be levied, assessed, and collected on the 1st day of October, 1864, a special income duty upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceeding the time therein named for levying, assessing, and collecting such duty of all persons residing within the United States, or of citizens of the United States residing abroad, at the rate of five per cent. on all sums exceeding $600, and that the same shall be levied, assessed, estimated, and collected, except as to the rate, according to the provisions of existing laws for the collection of an income duty annually, where not inapplicable thereto; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as to time and mode, or other matters, to enforce the collection of the said special income duty provided for in the resolution as may be necessary; provided, that in estimating the annual gains, profits, and income for the foregoing special income duty no deductions shall be made for dividends or interest received from any association, corporation, or company, nor shall any deduction be made for any salary or pay received.

Mr. ROSS objected, and the resolution was not received.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

Mr. STEVENS. I report a joint resolution from the Committee of Ways and Means, which I send to the Clerk.

The resolution, which was read, appropriates $100,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for constructing the Washington aqueduct from a point between the White House and receiving reservoir, to unite with the aqueduct at a point near the station-house below said reservoir, without passing through the said receiving reservoir, and to defray the expenses incident to managing said Washington aqueduct.

It also appropriates $50,000 for the purpose of completing the cut-stone dam across the Potomac river and constructing a telegraph line from the fire department in the city of Washington to said station-house below the receiving reservoir.

Mr. DRIGGS. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. It is a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It is an appropriation bill, but not a general appropriation bill. The Committee of Ways and Means have the right to report general appropriation bills, but the rules lay down what are such.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose this is for carrying on what is already authorized by law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the 77th rule.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"77. It shall also be the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means, within thirty days after their appointment, at every session of Congress commencing on the first Monday of December, to report the general appropriation bills for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for consular and diplomatic expenses; for the Army; for the Navy; for the expenses of the Indian department; for the payment of invalid and other pensions; for the support of the Military Academy; for fortifications; for the service of the Post Office Department, and for mail transportation by ocean steamers; or, in failure thereof, the reasons of such failure. And said committee shall have leave to report said bill (for reference only) at any time."

Mr. STEVENS. I will state that this is an item of the appropriations of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. But that bill has been reported.

Mr. STEVENS. Cannot I report a second one?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. There can be no doubt about what the meaning of the rule is. It excludes everything of this kind.

Mr. STEVENS. I can only say that the soldiers are dying of thirst for want of this very water.

The SPEAKER. The committee have the right to report a general appropriation bill at any time, but not a special one.

LAND TITLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 91, to grant titles in favor of parties actually in possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia, was referred last evening to the Committee for the District of Columbia, in order to move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and it more properly belongs to that committee.

The SPEAKER. A change of reference can only be made by unanimous consent, as the vote by which it was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia was reconsidered and laid on the table last evening.

No objection being made, the Committee for the District of Columbia were discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR.

Mr. ALLEY. I wish to have a letter from the Postmaster General read if there is no objection.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is it about?

Mr. ALLEY. In relation to a clerical error.

The letter, which was read, inclosed the draft of a law for the correction of a clerical error in the post office bill of June 30, 1864, and states that this act, as originally drawn, contained substitute provisions for the act of 1863, which are repealed; that these substitute provisions were stricken out by the committee and the provision repealing the sections of the act of 1863 was inadvertently left in the act of the 30th of June.

Mr. ALLEY. I now offer the bill to correct the error.

The bill was read. It repeals so much of the act of June 30, 1864, as repeals sections seventeen, eighteen, thirty-five, thirty-nine, and forty-one of the act of March 3, 1863, to amend the laws relating to the Post Office Department.

Mr. ALLEY. I will only remark that these sections were stricken out by mistake. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill received its several readings, and was engrossed and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 460) for the relief of Sarah Robinson, widow of Hon. John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana;

An act (H. R. No. 564) for the relief of Eliza Cass Woodbridge; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata.

JOHN HASTINGS.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the bill from the Senate for the relief of John Hastings. I will say that it has passed the Senate three times.

The hour of five o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave now to introduce the joint resolution imposing a special income tax, and I will state that if we can get this joint resolution passed there will be no difficulty in our adjourning to-night. I will also say that it is the wish of the new Secretary of the Treasury that a measure of this kind shall be passed. I ask leave to report it from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say, then, that if there is not a quorum here to-night or on Monday it will be impossible for Congress to adjourn, because with less than a quorum we can only adjourn from day to day. I only desire to facilitate the business of the House and have such measures passed as are necessary for the ordinary business of the country.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAW.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

The report was read, and is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in cases of landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia," recommend to their respective Houses as follows: that the Senate recede from its disagreement with the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

L. M. MORRILL,
J. A. HENDRICKS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
EZRA WHEELER,
JAMES W. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. I desire to know what the amendments are.

The SPEAKER. The report recommends that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and the Senate has already concurred in the report. The bill is therefore now passed, and no action by the House is required upon the report.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. A. MYERS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That book-folders and laborers in the folding-room whose salary or per diem pay amounts to less than $1,000 per annum be paid at the rate of $1,000 per annum during the time they are employed, out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. STILES. I move to include other persons employed about the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. SLOAN. I object.

DUTIES OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. COLE, of California. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be authorized to extend their investigations under the resolution of May 30 to all persons in the employment of the Government, and that the committee be authorized to sit during the recess.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. I object.

BUSINESS ON SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The House resumed the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

WILLIAM H. JAMESON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 329, for the relief of William H. Jameson, a paymaster in the United States Army.

The bill was read a first and second time. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit Major William H. Jameson, a paymaster in the United States Army, with $954 14 for money in his hands as paymaster in the Army, lost on board the steamer Ruth, destroyed by fire on the 4th of August, 1863.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That bill cannot pass without amendment. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House in regular order

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN HASTINGS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 274, for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburg.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that there be a call of the House. There does not appear to be a quorum present, and it is absolutely necessary that there shall be one. The quicker we begin to procure the attendance of a quorum the better.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chauley, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cravens, Donnelly, Dumont, Finck, Frank, Gooch, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, Hubbard, Philip Johnson, Julian, Katfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Nelson, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Radford, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Scott, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Webster, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman.

One hundred and thirteen members having answered, all further proceedings under the call were, on motion of Mr. FENTON, dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, their Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on House bill No. 549, to further regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out of the national forces.

Also, that it had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill No. 339, to repeal a joint resolution assigning additional rooms to the Agricultural Department, and for other purposes.

CONSCRIPTION LAW.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 549) to further regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces to report that the committee, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommendations to their respective Houses. If gentlemen will turn to the printed bill I will explain what the committee of conference has done.

The House will recollect that we passed a bill known as the Smithers bill. That went to the Senate and was amended by a substitute, which was the Senate bill sent over to us a few days before. The committee of conference agreed to lay aside the Senate bill altogether and to take the bill passed by this body. That is the bill which is printed and is now on the desks of members. A large portion of the amendments, twenty-four in number, are merely verbal and do not affect at all the general provisions of the bill. The first amendment will be found in the eighth line of the first section of the printed bill, and merely adds the words "ward of a city."

The second amendment is in the ninth line, to insert after the word "district" the words "or of a county when not so subdivided." This is also added to make it conform to the other law.

The next amendment is in the tenth and eleventh lines, to strike out the words "and substitute," which were evidently put there by mistake, it being manifestly not intended that the substitute for a drafted man should enjoy the same bounty as a volunteer. To that no one, I presume, will object.

The next amendment is found in the fourteenth line of the section. The word "two" is stricken out and "one" inserted. The word "three" in the fifteenth line is also stricken out and "two" inserted; and in the seventeenth line the word "four" is stricken out and "three" inserted. These three amendments consist in this: the bill as it passed the House provided for giving volunteers $200 if for one year, $300 if for two years, and $400 if for three years. The committee of conference recommend a bounty of $100 if for one year, of $200 if for two years, and of $300 if for three years.

The bill as it passed the House provided that one half the bounty should be paid at the time of being mustered in, one fourth at the expiration of half the term, and the other fourth at the end of the term of service. The committee amended that so as to make one third of the bounty payable at the time of mustering in, another third at the middle of the term of service, and the remainder at the conclusion of the term of service, so as to more equally distribute the burdens of the Government.

The next amendment will be found in the twenty-fourth line. The committee recommend striking out the latter portion of the clause after the word "none," and inserting in place of it the words "to his mother if she be a widow." It will then provide that if a soldier dies the bounty is to be paid to his wife if he have one; if he have no wife then to his children, and if he have no children then to his mother, if she be a widow. It is not to be paid to the legal representatives unless they are collateral relations. It was deemed best that the bounty should go to his legal dependents, and not to mere strangers should they happen to be his legal heirs.

In the second section three amendments were made; the first merely formal, inserting after the word "ward" the words "of a city or town." The second amendment of the second section strikes out "sixty" and inserts "fifty" in its place, so as to require the President to give fifty days' notice before executing a draft instead of sixty as the original bill provided.

In the fifth line of the same section we insert after the word "shall" the word "immediately," so as to provide that the President shall immediately order a draft at the expiration of the fifty days, unless the quota shall have been filled by volunteering.

There is but one amendment to the third section, and that is to add after the word "rebellion" at the bottom of the 3d page of the printed bill these words, "except the States of Arkansas, Tennessee, and Louisiana." The House will notice that this is different from the amendment we passed yesterday. As we passed it then it was provided that the Governors of the loyal States might recruit in certain States enumerated, including all the States in rebellion except Tennessee. The committee also left out Arkansas and Louisiana, for the following reasons: a representative or gentleman from Arkansas was here and informed us that they had already in that State raised seven regiments which had been mustered into the service; that they had two other regiments ready to be mustered in, and that enlistments were going on vigorously. And they ask that we shall not allow the Governors of northern States to come in and take their people and put them into the regiments of other States. It seemed reasonable and just, and the committee have therefore omitted the State of Arkansas. Adjutant General Thomas is doing very thorough and efficient work in Louisiana; General Banks has also raised and thoroughly organized a large number of colored troops; and it was deemed best to leave the matter in their hands. So Louisiana is also excepted. The others are left as the House passed them.

There are no amendments to the fourth section.

In the fifth section there are two amendments. The first is to strike out the word "knowingly" in the ninth line. The House will see the reason for it. If an officer of the United States shall enlist and muster into the service of the United States a minor under sixteen years of age, whether knowingly on the part of the officer or not, we provide that the minor shall be discharged.

After the word "discharged" there is added "on the repayment of all bounties received." So that such person discharged from the service must, as the condition of that discharge, pay back all of the bounties he has received.

After the word "officer" in the thirteenth line we insert "who shall knowingly enlist any person under sixteen years of age;" so that it will read, "any officer who shall knowingly enlist any person under sixteen years of age shall be dismissed the service." Whether knowingly or not the person shall be discharged, but if he does it knowingly he himself shall be dismissed the service. That includes all the amendments to the fifth section.

There is but one amendment to the end of the sixth section, and that is to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred." That was done for the reason that the War Department sent a note informing us that if they were permitted to draw for one hundred per cent. more than were actually required it would enable them to fill up the call, for more than fifty per cent. of those drawn are exempt from disability and other causes. More than fifty per cent. is needed; and if one hundred per cent. provides too much, of course it will not all be taken.

No amendments are made to the seventh section.

To the eighth section there is but one amendment. The eighth section provides that persons in the naval service, not enrolled prior to the 24th of February last, may be credited to the township or district in which they reside. We found that loose in respect of this, that it did not say on what evidence; and we added after the word "shall" in the seventh line, "on satisfactory proof of their residence made to the Secretary of War." That is, the township that claims it ought to have credit must make proof to the Secretary of War that such naval persons resided in it.

There is no amendment to the ninth section.

We amended the tenth section in form. The present law is left standing in regard to persons who are conscientiously opposed to war. We provide that no section of this act shall be construed to alter or amend that part of the existing enrollment act.

The only remaining amendment is a new section which provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to affect the right of persons to procure substitutes when they are drafted.

That includes all of the changes. There have been only two material changes: first, in reducing bounties; and secondly, in reducing the number of days ten.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. This repeals the commutation clause. I do not want to vote against it, and I will not vote for it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 1; no quorum voting.

Mr. FENTON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARFIELD and KERNAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 14; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the 31st rule.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"31. Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put shall give his vote, unless the House shall excuse him. All motions to excuse a member from voting shall be made before the House divides, or before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced; and the question shall then be taken without debate."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 53, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Garfield, Gooch, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. White, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—64.

So the report was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH stated that Mr. A. W. CLARK was paired off with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. ORTH stated that he was paired off with Mr. HOLMAN, otherwise he would vote in the affirmative; also, that it was agreed with Mr. HOLMAN that he [Mr. ORTH] should be at liberty to vote should it become necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. STUART stated that he was paired off with Mr. THAYER.

Mr. HALE stated that he was paired off with Mr. KALBFLEISCH.

Mr. FRANK stated that Mr. POMEROY was paired off with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Ohio, stated that had he been in when his name was called he would have voted in the negative.

A number of additional votes having been recorded, and there being a quorum, lacking one vote,

Mr. ORTH said: It appearing now that my vote is necessary for a quorum, I vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HARDING stated that he would have voted in the negative had he been present when his name was called.

Mr. SWEAT stated that he was paired off with Mr. BLOW.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANCONA moved that the House adjourn; and upon it demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the motion.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, urging upon Congress an appropriation during its present session for the Washington aqueduct.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, asked unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the payment of the existing liabilities and the superintendence and repairs of the Washington aqueduct.

The resolution, which was read for information, appropriates the sum of $35,000 for the purpose of paying existing liabilities and the expenses of superintendence and repairs of the Washington aqueduct.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, objected.

JOHN HASTINGS.

A bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburg, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of John Hastings, as collector of the customs at the port of Pittsburg, to give him credit for the sum of $9,956 62, the amount of the public money of which he was robbed on the 10th of March, 1854, while acting in the aforesaid capacity.

Mr. HALE. That bill has now passed the Senate three several times. Even that alone would be sufficient to justify this House in passing the bill without at all entering into the merits of the case. But since the last passage of the bill before this time Mr. Hastings has entered the service of the country as a volunteer, and has been wounded in the service and is now a cripple for life. There is that additional reason why we should pass this bill now.

I will merely say that the testimony in the case shows conclusively that the custom-house at Pittsburg was broken open by robbers and the money taken out of the vault, and the object of this bill is to credit Mr. Hastings with the amount of money so taken from the safe.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I desire merely to say that there is very great doubt about the robbery of the custom-house in my mind and in that of the people of the district; but Mr. Hastings, who was the collector, has since served as a volunteer in the Army, and has been disabled for life; he is now a cripple, and will never be able to support himself. I do not, therefore, intend to make any opposition to the bill, but I am not willing that my colleague shall state to the House things as facts which I do not think are facts.

Mr. HALE. The testimony satisfied three committees of the Senate that the custom-house was broken open and the property taken. The bill has passed the Senate three times, and I think, under the circumstances, we may safely pass it now. I demand the previous question.

The question was put on seconding the demand for the previous question, and no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HALE and WILSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 64.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. MARCY, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Albert Brown.

SPECIAL INCOME DUTY.

Mr. MORRILL. I again ask the consent of the House to report from the Committee of Ways and Means a joint resolution imposing a special income duty.

Mr. DAWSON. I object.

BRANCH MINT IN OREGON.

Mr. McBRIDE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the Senate (No. 185) to establish a branch mint of the United States at Dalles City, in Oregon, with a view to its being put on its passage.

No objection being made, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. McBRIDE. Mr. Speaker, aware that this measure is liable to encounter some opposition in this House, and that there is with many members of this body a great want of information in regard to the merits of the proposition, I shall ask to be pardoned while I state as briefly as possible the reasons for the passage of this bill.

First allow me to state that the point where the proposed branch mint is to be located is about one thousand miles north of San Francisco and about three hundred miles in the interior from the mouth of the Columbia river. Its establishment at this point will accommodate all the mining region from the summit of the Rocky mountains westward, lying north of the southern tributaries of the Columbia river, an extent of country not less than from five to seven hundred miles from east to west and one thousand miles from north to south, in almost every quarter and portion of which extensive and productive mines are being discovered and worked. But the principal part of this extensive mining interest is upon those branches of the Columbia which drain the country east of the Cascade mountains, and the supplies for which are drawn from the sea by that great artery of the Pacific slope, the Columbia river.

The Snake river, its principal southern branch, is now regularly navigated to Lewiston, capital of Idaho Territory, and distant six hundred miles by water from the Pacific ocean. The Oregon Steam Navigation Company alone own and employ on this line more than a dozen first-class steamers, and have built and have in successful operation twenty-two miles of railway over the portages at the Cascades and Des Chutes falls, over which hundreds of tons of freight and merchandise are daily transported to the vast region of the interior.

I speak of these facts that the House may be assured that they are not being called upon to vote for a proposition that has no better foundation than an opinion that it may turn out a "good thing," but to show that already the vast material interests of the country which seek this legislation are so far developed as to place the propriety of the measure beyond a doubt.

The population of Idaho Territory alone, which is exclusively a mining community, cannot be less than fifty thousand; eastern Oregon is filled with either a strictly mining population or with those who depend upon the mines incidentally for their prosperity, and the same is true of all that portion of Washington Territory lying east of the Cascade range of mountains. When I place the population of this region of country, whose mining interests we propose to accommodate, at one hundred thousand, and which is being daily increased by an immigration of an extraordinary character, I am satisfied that I may far underrate the truth. Where eighteen months ago was a lonely wilderness, the home of the Indian and the wild beast, there stand to-day towns containing from two to five thousand people, and every gulch and ravine is yielding its treasure to the enterprise of the hardy miner.

Representing, then, sir, the interests of this large and increasing population, to whom it is important, almost indispensable, speaking relatively, I ask the adoption of this bill.

It is admitted on all sides that something ought to be done, and the Committee of Ways and Means reported a bill some months ago providing for an assay office and appropriating $75,000 for its establishment. The only difference between their proposition and the present one is, that this appropriates $100,000 instead of $75,000; that is a difference of $25,000 in the matter of expense; and some gentlemen have inquired of me why an assay office would not answer our purpose just as well. The reason why it will not is, that the local currency and standard of value on our coast are gold and silver. Producing it in our midst, never having had any paper currency whatever, (in my own State banks are prohibited altogether by the State constitution, and in the adjoining Territories they are as effectively prohibited by public opinion,) it is the only article which our people know as money. The man who undertakes to discharge his obligations to his creditor with "greenbacks" makes a wreck of his credit and reputation the moment he does it. An indignant debtor who has been sued or feels that he has been unjustly oppressed by his creditor sometimes pays off a judgment with Government currency, and when he has done so he feels that his wrongs have been amply revenged by the act. "Greenbacks" are bought and sold as any other commodity at fifty, sixty, or seventy cents on the dollar, as the case may be, but they form no part of the circulating medium of the country—what in other words we call money.

Such was the feeling of our people on this subject, that when our State Legislature last year (of which I was a member) appropriated the amount necessary to pay the direct tax levied upon us by the law of 1861, it was appropriated in coin. Although the Government was at the time paying its creditors with paper we felt it due to our own honor to pay our debts even to her in coin.

As an assay office only ascertains the amount of gold, and separates it from other extraneous matter and metal, it is obvious that it can be of no service in furnishing a circulating medium. Indeed, we have private assay offices in different parts of that country, but they do not supply the object for which we ask this appropriation. In assay offices the gold is melted and run into slugs and bars varying in size from a cake of soap up to a Patent Office report, with its weight and fineness stamped upon it. That is all. When the owner sells it, he must always submit to such a shave as the brokers who make their own terms see proper to inflict, and this last is made by a calculation of how much the miner will pay, submit to, before he will take the trouble and expense of going or sending to the mint at San Francisco.

When we ascertain that from Portland, Oregon, which is the seaport city of the State, and the entrepot of its trade with San Francisco, the express charges to the mint are five per cent., insurance two and a half per cent. more, and the loss of time from one to three months, we can have some idea of the amount of the shave which the people have to and do submit to. This is altogether exclusive of the charge of transmitting the bullion from three to six hundred miles out of the interior before it reaches this point.

But there is still another reason. Gold is various in quality—some is worth twelve and some eighteen dollars per ounce, and all along between these figures. Those who take coin into the mining region with which to buy it of course fix its value. It may be unjust to the miner, it never is to the purchaser; it is always arbitrary, the result of agreement among the buyers, but the seller has to submit. He is a thousand miles away from a mint, he needs the coin to pay his debts or purchase supplies, and whatever the speculator offers he is compelled to take. When, therefore, I state to this House that the mining population are, by the lack of minting facilities, robbed of from ten to fifteen per cent. of their product, I do not exaggerate the facts.

And now, sir, I propose to call attention to the amount of the annual product of these mines as derived from the best attainable data. And I ask that an extract from a letter addressed by my colleagues in the Senate and myself to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance on this measure while it was pending before that committee be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 20, 1864.

Much of the treasure taken from these mines finds its way out of the country in the hands of private individuals. There is no common place of deposit for it where it can be credited to its source, and making it almost impossible to estimate its amount justly. The various express companies can give the amount which they transport, but this leaves an immense amount, which any one knows to exist who is acquainted with the independent mode in which a great many persons transact their business, thus entirely unaccounted for. As an instance of this, a late Portland (Oregon) paper states that the express company brought down by the daily steamer of the Columbia river only $1,000 in gold dust, while the same paper gives the names of two passengers who had over three hundred pounds in their possession, and others mentioned had smaller amounts. We say, therefore, that while the books and receipts of express companies show the only accurate statistics on the subject, they give no idea of the vast resources in mineral of the section, the interests of which will be accommodated by this measure.

Such data as we have we now submit. There are three private assay offices in the city of Portland. The amounts received by them, as shown by their books, an abstract of which is published in the "Oregonian" newspaper for November last, from January 15, 1863, to October 20, following, is $2,486,496 65. As an evidence of the growth of the product of gold we may mention that one office, making monthly statements of the amount received, gave for each of the two months preceding the last account almost double that of those earlier in the year.

Mr. Benjamin Holliday, of New York, who is the owner of the line of steamships plying between San Francisco and Portland, informs us that he has transported from Portland an average of from six to seven hundred thousand dollars per month during the past summer and autumn. This statement does not include the amounts in the hands of passengers, of which he knew nothing, but which, owing to the high insurance, we must conclude were large.

There being no regulation at the branch mint in San Francisco requiring the depositor of bullion to designate whence it came, there is no other means of obtaining any just estimate than by reports of the kind to which we refer. The recently published reports from San Francisco, made by a commercial board of that city, of the amount of bullion received there for the past year, credits Oregon and British Columbia with a product of five millions. This, of course, is based upon the receipts by shipments and through express companies, and leaves a vast amount—the whole that is diffused through the mining region and that portion which enters the circulation of business and agricultural parts of Oregon, and that shipped in the hands of passengers—unaccounted for. This, we do not hesitate to say, we believe amounts to as much more.

We might give many items showing that the mines tributary to the proposed branch mint are very productive, but we refer to only one, and that only because it came directly to the knowledge of one of the undersigned. That was an instance where three men in six weeks' time, with their own hands, dug out $180,000. These instances are not common, we admit, but they serve to show the exceeding riches of some portions of this northern region, and indicate the wealth which must soon there be developed. For the purpose of stimulating this development by providing the miner with a place for the assay of his gold without the loss of time, the risk of transmission by sea to San Francisco, and the payment of expressage and insurance fees, and to prevent the swindling dealer in coin from robbing the miner of his fair earnings by his unjust discount, which many prefer to submit to rather than the inconvenience just alluded to, we ask you to favorably consider the proposition.

J. W. NESMITH,
B. F. HARDING,
JOHN R. McBRIDE.

HON. W. P. FESSENDEN,
Chairman of Senate Finance Committee.

TONS OF GOLD.—The Nez Percé Chief brought down last evening the richest freight that any steamer on the Columbia river ever bore. Wells, Fargo & Co. had 183 pounds, ($35,000); one party of six miners had 800 pounds, ($150,000); another party of six men had 700 pounds, ($134,400); another party of two men had 300 pounds, ($57,600); while one man had 150 pounds, ($28,000). Thus we have a total of 1,950 pounds ($370,000) in the hands of fifteen "honest miners," and 183 pounds ($34,000) in the hands of Wells, Fargo & Co. All of these fifteen persons our informant, who came down in the Chief, saw and conversed with. He also learned that nearly all the passengers had plenty of money. So it is fair to conclude that two tons of gold dust came down on the Chief last evening.—Dalles Journal, October, 1863.

Mr. McBRIDE. In corroboration of this I will remark that a subsequent publication of the amount assayed in the two assay offices of the city of Portland, Oregon, shows that from the month of June, 1863, to the month of February, 1864, about seven months, the amount assayed was only a small fraction below five million dollars. The Railroad Record of June 16, 1864, gives the increase in the amount of gold exported from San Francisco during the four months previous to May 1 over the corresponding period of 1863 at $6,001,624 89. This increase it is well known is owing to the shipments from the Columbia river to San Francisco, as the gold yield of California is known to be declining. When we recollect that there is another assay office at Dalles City from which we have no return, that the speculators and brokers in gold dust take their bullion to the mint in San Francisco without assay, and, in consequence of the shave which they impose upon those of whom they purchase, that large producers take their dust out of the country in private hands, the actual amount assayed furnishes no adequate idea of the amount produced. The Superintendent of the Mint at Philadelphia in his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury, speaking of this new region, says:

"Idaho at this time especially claims our attention. It is emphatically the land of promise and of gold. This region was set off as a separate Territory at the last session of Congress. It lies north of Colorado and Utah, and takes in the northern ranges of the Rocky mountains, with the headwaters of the Missouri, Columbia, Yellowstone, and North Platte rivers. The localities where workings have been commenced are numerous, but many of them have not been reported or described. They must be various and widely separated, judging from the characteristic varieties in quality of their productions. Among the deposits received we have had grades of fineness from 795 to 949 thousandths; the latter in considerable quantity from Salmon river, a tributary to the Columbia. The quality of the gold produced from the mines of Idaho is equal to that in the older regions of our country, and the quantity appears to be inexhaustible.

"Not less promising are the mines opening in Oregon and Washington Territory. The workings are numerous and constantly increasing in number. The characteristic energy of our people will no doubt soon develop the mineral wealth of those far distant regions, and thus invite and stimulate emigration to our north Pacific Territories.

"In Oregon the fineness of gold seems to be tolerably regular and steady and nearly equal to the average of California. In the gold from Washington Territory the variation is great, ranging from 650 to 938 thousandths.

"The returns from Oregon and Idaho and Washington Territories are as yet imperfect; but enough is known to warrant the statement that in quantity and quality the gold of those regions will rival if not surpass the productions of the California mines."—Report on Finance, pp. 187, 188.

And my honorable friend from Vermont, who is seldom given to exaggeration, in his late speech on the tax bill estimates the annual yield of bullion of the Territories of Idaho, Washington, New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Oregon, at $45,000,000. By far the larger portion of this must come from western Idaho, excluding Montana, Oregon, and Washington; so that in any separate estimate founded upon known facts, he must have intended to credit the district of country which this mint is to accommodate with not less than from twenty-five to thirty millions. And, sir, although I do not believe that so much as that was produced there the past year, I have no doubt that for the future it is a low estimate.

And, sir, while these people are pouring millions of treasure into the lap of the nation, is nothing to be done for them except to expose them to the extortions of money-brokers and speculators, and to fleece them by taxation? But for the bullion which the labor and energy of the miners of the Pacific coast supply, the fabric of your national credit would tumble into ruin within a month; and, sir, in one sense the destiny of this nation is in their hands. With the resources which they can furnish we can not only ride out the fearful whirlwind of this rebellion, but restore in time the material credit and prosperity of the nation. Anything which tends to and stimulates the development of these mines is a great national good, and as such should receive favorable consideration.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] thought the other day that the mining population "had been spoiled by indulgence," and that we were seeing the results of their indulgence in their wishes expressed in this Hall by their Representatives. Sir, the miners of the Pacific coast are not spoiled by favors; but they do know the immense power which is in their keeping, and their relative importance to this nation, and knowing this it is not strange that they should seek legitimately their just rights, and even the taunts of my friend cannot provoke them into anything but a fair presentation of their case before the country. When we can have a hearing we know that justice will be done. But when you approach a population producing from fifteen to twenty millions of treasure and tell them that though it will save them and through them the nation millions annually, you deny them an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of a branch mint, you need not be surprised if they upbraid you with the injustice of your course. You keep up the Mint at Philadelphia that coins $3,000,000 only per year, at an annual expense of hundreds of thousands, and refuse to establish one at small cost where there is absolute and imperative need for it. You have established branches at New Orleans, at Dahlonega, and at Charlotte, where during their whole existence they have not minted as much as our mines produce in a single year, but refuse a branch to us. You erected one in Colorado when the product of her mines as shown by accurate returns was only four millions, while you refuse it to us when we produce fifteen, with a speedy and certain promise of large increase. Sir, you may do this, but you cannot convince our people while you refuse this boon to them that you are not discriminating against them by partiality and injustice.

Some gentlemen are fearful lest the mint be made a source of great expense to the Government. This is a false idea. Any mint doing a large and regular business can be made self-sustaining. At even the moderate charges at present imposed, the San Francisco mint, as the late superintendent, Mr. Stevens, informs me, lacked only a few thousand dollars of paying expenses and sustaining itself. The Mint at Philadelphia costs us a large sum, but it has comparatively little to do and is not operated with any special regard to economy; indeed, if I were to say that it was more a political almshouse than a useful public institution, I presume I would do no injustice to the truth. A man in California can send his bullion to the Mint at Philadelphia and have it returned in coin with quite as much safety and expedition as a man in the mines of the northwest can send to San Francisco and procure his return. And it would be as unjust to compel us to go to San Francisco to mint our treasure as it would to compel the California miner to come to the city of Philadelphia.

Fully convinced that this bill is just and reasonable, that it is based upon sound policy, upon economy and fairness, I confidently appeal to this House to pass it without delay.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McBRIDE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES A. PITCHER.

Senate bill No. 338, (the last bill on the Speaker's table,) for the relief of Charles A. Pitcher, was then taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of Claims; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER then proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the committees for reports.

BUREAU OF FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the select committee on emancipation, reported back bill of the House No. 51, to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, and moved that the amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw this report for the present and let us go on with the call of committees. The Committee of Ways and Means will be reached in a few moments, and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] informs me that if the special income duty bill can be passed, all the remaining business of the session can be disposed of to-night. I hope, under these circumstances, the gentleman from Massachusetts will let this bill be passed over.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to ask if a motion to lay the bill upon the table is in order or not?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It would be in order, I presume, to move to postpone the bill until next session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have a right to make a motion to lay the bill upon the table, but any gentleman would have a right to demand the reading of the bill.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to postpone the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts demand the reading of the amendment?

Mr. ELIOT. I have not demanded it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] called for the reading.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw that call.

Mr. BROOKS. I will withdraw it for the motion to postpone.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move, then, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the 20th of December next, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to postpone was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, reported back the resolution referred to it to-day, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, directing the Clerk of the House to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Messrs. Rogers, Johnson, and Jacks, as claimants for seats on this floor as members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the State of Arkansas, the usual mileage of members for one session for the distance actually traversed by them, and moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OBITUARY ADDRESSES ON OWEN LOVEJOY.

Mr. BAILY, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution directing that there be printed for the use of the House three thousand copies of the addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives on the death of the late Owen Lovejoy, and moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the resolution was adopted.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution imposing a special income duty.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It directs that in addition to the income duty already imposed by law there shall be levied, assessed, and collected, on the 1st of October, 1864, a special income duty on gains, profits, or incomes for the year ending 31st December, 1863, of all persons residing within the United States and of citizens of the United States residing abroad, at the rate of five per cent. on all suras exceeding $600; provided, that in estimating annual gains, profits, or incomes no deduction is to be made for dividends or interest received from any association, corporation, or company, nor shall any deduction be made for any salary or pay received.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I raise the point of order that this being a revenue measure must be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the joint resolution imposing a special income duty.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FENTON in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution imposing a special income duty.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we had already introduced our last tax bill; but it seems to be necessary, from the fact that the enrollment bill requires bounties to be paid, and in consequence of an opinion that prevails in some quarters that our tax bill is not fully adequate, that we should introduce this measure. I desire to correct a misapprehension on the part of those who have made computations as to the amount of revenue that will probably be derived from the internal revenue bill. Important errors have been committed, as I think, in these calculations, and to which the late Secretary of the Treasury, without sufficient examination, has given currency in his letter to the Committee of Ways and Means already published. For instance, the estimate on railroads, steamboats, ferries, and vehicles is based on the idea that we have only included in that section just what was embraced in the former act, while we have really included in addition all the coasting trade, the lake trade, the river trade, and the freight on canals; so that not a pound of freight nor a passenger can be transported on our coasts, lakes, rivers, or canals, as well as on all our railroads, without contributing to the revenue of the country. I think there is an underestimate here of not less than $5,000,000.

Upon brokers' scales the estimate of the Department when the bill was introduced was $10,000,000. As the bill finally passed the rates were largely increased, and yet the estimate of Collector Orton and Cashier Rollins is only $2,000,000! All estimates must be more or less conjectural, but how so wide a discrepancy should have been made passes my comprehension. If we do not realize more than twice two millions it will be because the law is not executed.

On spirits, also, the amount, in my judgment, is very much underestimated by these gentlemen who have so swiftly furnished an estimate so much below that of the House Committee of Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance—including the new Secretary of the Treasury—as well as that carefully prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The amount of annual distillation of spirits in this country is not less than 100,000,000 gallons; the amount exported is usually about 10,000,000 gallons; and the amount consumed in manufactures is supposed to be not more than 5,000,000 gallons. Now, allowing that there may be a decrease in the amount of distillation in consequence of the high price of grain as well as in consequence of the high taxes imposed upon liquors; conceding that the production may be 25,000,000 gallons less than heretofore, there will still remain 60,000,000 gallons upon which a duty will be collected. I venture to argue that the amount of distillation will not fall off very materially until the 1st of February next, when the duty upon liquors is to be increased from $1 50 to $2 per gallon; so that the amount produced for this year will be nearly the same as usual. Making, however, all allowances for the falling off in the production and consumption which some gentlemen expect, the revenue upon this article should be based upon not less than 50,000,000 gallons, and will not be less than $15,000,000, therefore, in excess of what it has been estimated by Messrs. Orton and Rollins, and will more likely be $30,000,000 more than $15,000,000.

It was not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this bill at any length. I wish to show to the House some of the data upon which the amount of revenue to be derived from the bill we have passed has been much underestimated. I do not like to have so crude an estimate go forth to damage the credit of the country, though of course it was not so intended. There are many other articles to which I might refer. For instance, the article of gold watches to be assessed at one dollar each appears to be omitted, (for Schedule A is not increased enough to include them.) No mention is made either in the estimate referred to of pianos, on which a tax is to be paid of two and four dollars each. The amount we are to receive by increased taxes on stamps will be found to add considerably to the revenue. The increase is very large both in amount and in scope, and I think may be fairly computed at not less than $5,000,000 more than the estimate of Messrs. Orton and Rollins. The amount of increase on the single article of lucifer matches will be not less than $2,000,000, and yet no mention is made of them at all.

So of bank capital; beyond what is invested in United States securities no notice is taken of it at all, and yet no tax will be more surely paid, whatever it may be. Take the item of malt liquors: the consumption in 1860 was four million barrels, and with the high rate of tax now imposed on spirits will undoubtedly very soon be not less than five or six million barrels, or as soon as barley can be had at a reasonable price.

Take the item of successions to real estate; this estimate places the amount to be received at $750,000. Yet we know that the whole real estate of the country changes hands as often as once in thirty years or in the life of a generation. No part of this which passes each year can escape the tax, and must largely exceed that to be derived from legacies of personal property; but these gentlemen estimate the revenue upon legacies at $2,000,000, or nearly three times as much as upon the entire successions to real estate, whether by will or otherwise!

In relation to licenses I cannot think the general clause by which everybody having a profession or business by which a thousand dollars shall be obtained was thought of, nor could it have been borne in mind that wholesale dealers will be required to pay one dollar upon the sales of each additional thousand dollars above fifty thousand dollars.

These learned statisticians put down the revenue from tobacco, snuff, and cigars at $20,000,000. It cannot be less than $25,000,000; and if penalties shall be exacted in all proper cases, it is very likely to be more. The income tax is estimated at $30,000,000, and I think that is full enough, although the Commissioner of Internal Revenue calculates upon a much larger sum.

After making only reasonable corrections it will be seen that the amount to be anticipated will be not less than $40,000,000 beyond the late estimate of Messrs. Orton and Rollins. I concede that the bill will not produce so much the first month or two after it goes into operation as may ultimately be reached; but it will produce a very large amount more the first year than Messrs. Orton and Rollins have given us reason to expect.

I shall publish in the Globe this last estimate of Messrs. Orton and Rollins, with some corrections which appear proper to me; (A.) I will also insert the estimate made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when the bill was first before the House, (B;) and another by the Commissioner (C) as it passed the Senate. The committee of conference in almost every case, including the rates on liquors, agreed upon the highest rates, so that the act will bring in over twenty millions more than it would as the bill left the Senate.

* As the law finally passed, the Commissioner estimates the amount of revenue will be $275,000,000.

I know how uncertain predictions relative to financial affairs usually turn out, but with anything like the prosperity witnessed for the past two years in the business of the country our revenues from all sources will be ample and entirely unexampled in the history of this or any other country. Nearly two hundred millions of additional taxation will be at once placed upon the country. We may expect from October 1, 1864, to October 1, 1865, from the

Tariff.....	$85,000,000
Internal revenue.....	275,000,000
War income tax.....	20,000,000
Miscellaneous sources.....	10,000,000
Total.....	$390,000,000

This is surely large enough to make our people economical, to check all reckless extravagance, and give our securities a substantial foundation of credit here or elsewhere. It may not be known, but I learn the internal revenue for May or June last, I forget which, was $15,000,000, and that under the old law, or at the rate of $180,000,000 per year, which was not expected to produce much more than $100,000,000 annually. There need be no apprehension that the act of this session will not bring forth all that its friends have claimed for it.

In respect to the tax on incomes for 1863 it was fixed at three per cent. above $600 and not above $10,000, and for all over $10,000 at five per cent. This joint resolution proposes to impose a special tax upon incomes of five per cent. on all sums exceeding $600, payable out of the income of this year and based on the list of last year. I think as a whole, and taking it alone, there is no tax more equal than an income tax. Certainly it will press more severely upon my part of the country, upon New England, than any other portion of the country, with perhaps the single exception of the city of New York, and it is in all cases to be paid by those who are able to pay it and who have most at stake in sustaining the credit of the country.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me ask the gentleman from Vermont how much revenue he expects to derive from this joint resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. Not less than $20,000,000. The purpose is to meet the bounties which we have just authorized by the enrollment act, and it will just about do that. If we shall enlist by bounties two hundred thousand men it will require $20,000,000 to pay bounties, and this will do it.

Mr. Chairman, this subject has been so thoroughly discussed during the present session of Congress, that now, as we are approaching the last hours of the session, no gentleman will desire to make a speech upon the subject, and I will therefore move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion to allow me to submit an amendment and say a single word in explanation of it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I submit the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further resolved, That there shall be levied and collected from every bank, company, or association having notes in circulation as currency (other than national banks organized under the laws of Congress) ten per cent. on the average amount of the notes of such bank, company, or association in circulation during the year ending the 31st of December, 1864, and for each and every year thereafter.

My purpose in offering that amendment is this: we are proposing now to levy an extraordinary and almost oppressive income tax, and if we are to impose additional taxes I wish to see the Government taking a step in the right direction toward the cure of the great evil of its finances. When the Government now levies two dollars, we only get the value of one dollar. The reason of that is there are now two or three different currencies, one or other of which has reduced the value of the currency one half or one hundred per cent. and more. The reason of that is this: in 1860 the specie circulation and the circulation of the banks were about three hundred million dollars. Those two items now amount to $339,000,000. In addition to that we have of United States notes in circulation $448,000,000. We have in addition Treasury notes operating as circulation to the extent of $162,000,000. If we add up the items of the existing circulation of the country it runs up to $951,000,000, three times the actual circulation of 1860.

These figures explain the fact that gold is now two hundred or two hundred and fifty per cent. Those figures explain the fact that the enormous revenue we are raising will not pay the expenses of the Government. If you will strike out one half of the currency you will double the value of the revenue. If you will apply the remedy I have offered in my amendment I am willing to go for the additional income tax. If we are to incur two dollars for one dollar the tax cannot have my vote. I wish to see the Government take a step in the right direction. Cure the curse of inflated currency, and let us know if we levy a tax we get the value of the tax.

That is all I have to say. I renew the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I withdraw the motion and yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BROOKS. I have only a few words to say in reply to the gentleman from Maryland. In my judgment the best way in reference to these national banks would be to retrace our steps exactly as we have done in the gold bill, and repeal the whole system; whereby not only $300,000,000 of currency would be annihilated at once, but probably $600,000,000 or $800,000,000. A proposition so preposterous as that he has offered in reference to the State banks I do not think it worth while to discuss in the House. I think it will not have much support from either side of the House.

Why should this proposition for increased tax come from the gentleman from Vermont at this late day in the session? The other evening, when he addressed the House on the tariff bill and the internal revenue bill, the pictures which he drew of our prosperity were not only glowing but gratifying to both sides of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I do not take back a single word which I uttered on that occasion. But we have authorized bounties to volunteers, and it is perhaps right to provide for them.

Mr. BROOKS. I want the gentleman from Vermont to adhere to his own opinions. These rescripts which come in from the Departments, these edicts which come here from the Treasury Department and elsewhere, orders to pass bills as desirable to them, is not the parliamentary and proper way, and is not that which in any way is likely to lead to proper deliberation and legislation on the part of the House.

Why has the gentleman selected the incomes of the country, now heavily laden with a five per cent. tax? Why does he come here with an exclusive, denunciatory tax upon the industry, enterprise, and labor of the country; upon the manufacturing, commercial, and intellectual labor of the country? Why does he propose to lay his burdens exclusively upon them? Why has he not sought other sources of revenue? There is no other country where there is a landed property like there is throughout the United States, stretching from the lakes to the Gulf, and from the Atlantic seaboard to the distant shores of Oregon and California. Why has he not directed his attention to the farming interest of the country? That interest is now more prosperous than ever before. Hay is selling at forty dollars a ton, butter thirty to fifty cents per pound, and so on. The whole agricultural interest was never more prosperous than at this present moment.

The landed interest is not touched, not looked at at all; upon it no burdens fall, because the income tax levied upon landholders amounts to nothing, for in the adjudication of that income but few farmers pay any income whatever. They so regulate their work, so adjust their accounts, that little or no income tax comes from the farmers of the country. As the representative of a commercial, a manufacturing, and a mechanical people, as the representative of the commercial metropolis of the country, I protest against this heavy burden being placed upon that species of industry while the agricultural interest is exempt altogether.

Why is it not done? I know full well why it is not done. A presidential election is approaching, and the farming interest is powerful; farmers are numerous, their voice will be heard, and they are exempted solely because of their political power; while upon the mechanics of the country, the commerce of the country, and the manufacturers of the country, weaker in power, is proposed to be levied exclusively this income tax.

Be equal in your taxation; be just in your distribution of burdens. For political purposes gentlemen exempt the larger class of community from any of the greater burdens which ought to be imposed upon all equally. I hope some gentleman will propose to change this income tax, and provide that it shall be shared by the farmers of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. I am a little surprised that the gentleman from New York is not more conversant with our legislation on this subject, so that he can understand that the farmer will pay just as much as the mechanic, the merchant, or any person of any other class, provided he makes as much money. We tax gains, profits, and incomes, not men. Now, if there is a class that mainly makes the property of the country, which makes three, four, five, or ten dollars a day, thereby accumulating more than six hundred dollars a year, while the farmer with all his family at work barely makes a dollar a day, that class is to be taxed, and righteously taxed. There is no exclusion, and there is nothing but democratic equality in this income tax. Every man who makes more than six hundred dollars a year is to be taxed, let him be who he may, and taxed in just proportion to his annual gains and profits.

Mr. GANSON. When is this income to accrue?

Mr. MORRILL. It will be collected on the 1st of October next, before the year 1864 will have expired.

Mr. GANSON. I am rather surprised that the gentleman should propose a tax upon avails already expended when he opposes a tax on whisky on hand. He here proposes to tax incomes which have been exhausted, but does not propose to tax articles on hand.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman has an acute intellect, and he will not fail to discover the inconsistency and impropriety of proposing a tax for 1864, on the list of 1864, long before the year expires. This tax is based on the estimates or returns of 1863, and there is no other mode by which it could be properly reached. Of course we do not base it on the returns of income of 1864, which we have not yet reached, although we do so far anticipate as to make it payable out of the income of 1864.

I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FENTON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a special income tax bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate be closed on this bill in one minute after the committee shall again resume its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FENTON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special income tax bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope no gentleman will endeavor to embarrass this resolution by any amendments, for I am very sure that we shall not be able to pass anything but this.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I merely propose to carry out the rule which the Committee of Ways and Means have finally adopted, and which I had hoped they would have laid down at an earlier period of the session. They have now come to what I have all along contended for, the imposition of a tax on stock on hand. [Laughter.] I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to the pending amendment the following:

And be it further resolved, That all spirits of domestic production on hand for sale on the 1st day of July, 1864, and upon which no tax shall have been paid, shall be subject to a duty of 70 cents per gallon; and all such spirits on hand for sale upon which a prior duty shall have been paid shall be subject to a duty of 50 cents per gallon: Provided, That all bona fide retailers of spirits, duly licensed, shall not be taxed on their stock on hand where the quantity on hand does not exceed two barrels.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I merely wish to say that if the amendment be adopted it will yield a revenue of about $20,000,000.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 73, noes 29.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Davis] as amended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I did not offer mine as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland. Mine was a distinct proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it could not have been in order. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland was pending, and the gentleman from Illinois could only offer his as an amendment to that. It was so read and so voted on.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. It has been adopted as a part of my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I offered it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair distinctly stated to the committee that the question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, and it was put and carried. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland as amended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As there was evidently a misapprehension, I hope the committee will vote that down and then I will offer another amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I hope they will do no such thing. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and DAVIS, of Maryland, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 60.

So the amendment, as amended, was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move to add to the original joint resolution the following:

And be it further resolved, That all spirits of domestic production on hand for sale on the 1st day of July, 1864, and upon which no tax shall have been paid, shall be subject to a duty of 50 cents per gallon; and all such spirits on hand for sale upon which a prior duty shall have been paid shall be subject to a duty of 30 cents per gallon: Provided, That bona fide retailers of spirits, duly licensed, shall not be taxed on stock on hand where the quantity does not exceed two barrels.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to make it five barrels instead of two.

Mr. ASHLEY. I move to make it a hundred barrels.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to make it a thousand barrels.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this is the same proposition which the committee has just voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand. It is another and different proposition.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Entirely so.

Mr. GANSON. The tax is a different per cent.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I now offer my amendment to the amendment reducing the tax from 10 per cent. on bank issues to 3 per cent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman to offer his amendment to the joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I prefer to offer it here.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I hope not.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to my proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. It is as germane as the amendment is to the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken on Mr. DAVIS's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Private Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 438) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and

An act (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, (Mr. FENTON in the chair.)

The question recurred on Mr. WASHBURNE's amendment, and it was agreed to—ayes 59, noes 49.

Mr. GANSON. I propose to amend the joint resolution by adding the following:

And be it further resolved, That the direct tax provided by the act of 1862 on real estate be, and the same is hereby, revived, and the same shall be assessed and collected as provided by said act.

I offer it for the reason that—

Mr. MORRILL. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GANSON. The amendment speaks for itself.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 44, noes 57.

Mr. PRUYN. I move to amend by making the limitation $1,000 instead of $600, so that the tax shall apply only to incomes over $1,000. This bill as it stands would bear too heavily on men of small incomes.

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point of order that we have passed from the original joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative; there being, on a division—ayes 40, noes 53.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by adding, "and at the rate of ten per cent. on all incomes over $20,000."

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 45, noes 50.

Mr. GANSON. I move to amend by adding the following:

And be it further resolved, That the direct tax provided by the act of 1862 on real estate be, and the same is hereby, revived, and the same shall be assessed and collected as provided by the said act: Provided, The said tax shall not be collected in Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, and Virginia, for three years from the passage of this act.

Mr. ROSS. I propose to include Illinois.

[Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I would like to ask consent to oppose that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this resolution with a view of killing the whole measure.

On the motion of Mr. Cox 45 voted in the affirmative and 49 in the negative.

Mr. COX demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox and MORRILL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported

—ayes 49, noes 56.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move the following as an additional section:

Be it further resolved, That there be paid at the close of the present session of Congress to the officers, clerks, and other employes of the two Houses of Congress and such other persons in and about the Capitol as have usually been embraced in extra compensation resolutions a sum equal to twenty per cent. upon the amount of their annual compensation, and in case of such as do not receive an annual compensation a like per cent. upon the amount of compensation received by them respectively during the present session; and a sum sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to a question of order.

That amendment is not germane to a bill to raise revenue.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I think it is an amendment to raise revenue by appropriating an amount to enable these persons to pay their taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt as to whether the amendment is in order, but will submit the question to the committee whether it shall be received as in order or not.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 57.

So the amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, submitted the following as an additional section:

And be it further resolved, That in addition to the existing tax on bank notes there shall be levied and collected from every bank, company, or association, having notes in circulation as currency, (other than national banks organized under the laws of Congress,) three per cent. on the average amount of the notes of such bank, company, or association in circulation for each and every year after the 1st of January, 1865.

Mr. KERNAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "other than national banks."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and a message from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. HAY, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 460) for the relief of Sarah Robinson, widow of Hon. John S. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle and pay the claim of Anthony Sweeting, late pilot of the United States steamer Juniata;

An act (H. R. No. 483) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route;

An act (H. R. No. 561) to authorize the United States to acquire land in Wallabout bay, belonging to the city of Brooklyn, and to authorize the exchange of other lands therefor;

An act (S. No. 111) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrilla-marauders, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 564) for the relief of Eliza Cass Woodbridge.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX—AGAIN.

The committee resumed the consideration of the special income tax bill.

The question recurred on Mr. KERNAN's amendment to the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERNAN and HOOPER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 54.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, demanded tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FENTON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special income tax bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. I move a substitute for what has just been reported. I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to the condition of the bill presented to the House, and I urge those who intend to have any bill pass which will be efficient for the support of the Government and to add something to the amount of revenue, to vote for the substitute, pure and simple, without the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am sure, and I have no doubt that every man in this House understands well, that the tax upon liquors on hand stands no chance in the Senate.

In relation to another thing inserted, making a discrimination in the tax upon incomes, we have already done that in the bill which has been passed. I call the attention of every fair-minded man to the proposition introduced by the gentleman from Illinois. Gentlemen who have the misfortune to have incomes over $10,000 or $20,000 a year are to be fined, absolutely punished for having that amount of money. The Government should make its laws equal; and I think that five per cent. upon all incomes above $600 is not too much. I have discharged my duty, and I call for the previous question. If the substitute is not adopted, I have no more interest in the matter; but I hope that it will be adopted.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to encourage immigration. We strike out the third section of the House bill which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President, may reduce the tonnage duty upon vessels which bring in immigrants. We also strike out the provision in reference to baggage and personal effects and agree to the provision of the House bill. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the special income tax bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to withdraw the demand for the previous question so that I may have a vote on my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. If I yield to the gentleman I must to others. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. Ross's amendment.

Mr. ROSS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 40, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, adopted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 60, nays 47, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Baxter, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Eliot, Ganson, Gooch, Hotchkiss, Jencks, Julian, Kernan, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marcy, McClurg, Samuel F. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Scott, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Voorhees, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—75.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Pending the roll-call,

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois, stated that Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, had retired from the House on account of indisposition.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, stated that he was paired off with Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on agreeing to the substitute offered by Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. If the substitute is adopted will not the bill stand as it was originally introduced?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 59, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Ashley, Baily, Bliss, Coffroth, Cole, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Garfield, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hutchins, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Kelley, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, McBride, Moorhead, Morrill, James R. Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NOBLE] will withdraw his motion and let us go on with other business.

Mr. WILSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That takes precedence of everything except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when the House adjourns to-night, it adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock on Monday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. We can fix that hereafter.

The SPEAKER. When the States are called for resolutions that would not be in order without unanimous consent.

SEAMEN ON WRECKED VESSELS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 247, for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, reported that the committee had agreed to recommend that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House striking out the word "officers" where it occurs in the bill.

The Chair will state that if the House adjourns to-night and there should be no quorum on Monday there can be no adjournment sine die, as that requires a quorum.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope we will go on and finish this bill to-night.

Mr. ELDRIDGE called for the yeas and nays on that motion.

CONSCRIPTION BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill (No. 286) repealing the commutation clause, &c., was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I withdraw the motion to reconsider and report the bill back to the House. And inasmuch as the subject has been disposed of in another bill, I move to lay this bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. THOMAS. There is on the Speaker's table a bill of the House which passed here unanimously, and which has passed the Senate with an unimportant amendment. I ask the indulgence of the House to take up the bill and concur in the amendment so that the bill may become a law. It is House bill No. 305, to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the armies of the United States.

Mr. HOOPER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The House is in execution of an order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, and this bill therefore comes up in its regular order. The question will be on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senate amendment seems to be a rather long one, and I will therefore explain that it changes the House bill in only two particulars, and I think both are improvements upon our bill. One restricts the operation of the law to the loyal States; and the other requires that the stores, in order to be paid for, shall have been taken by the order of an officer of the Army. These are the only two points of change. I call the previous question on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 23.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCHENCK in the chair.)

Mr. STEVENS. I move to postpone all prior orders, and to take up the bill in reference to the Washington aqueduct.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I make the point of order that that cannot be done; that the business upon the Calendar must be laid aside each bill by itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well, then. Read the Calendar, and we will lay them aside one by one.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I want to be heard on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the gentleman have leave to fight it out on that line if it takes all night. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I want to make a proposition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not in order to discuss motions to lay aside in order to proceed to other business. From that decision the gentleman from Illinois takes an appeal. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 23.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, called for a division.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 77, noes 14.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCHENCK reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a bill (S. No. 348) to provide for the supervision, repair, liabilities, and completion of the Washington aqueduct, and had directed him to report the same to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 83, noes 11.

The main question was then ordered—ayes 87, noes 9.

Mr. UPSON moved to lay the bill on the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to lay the bill on the table—ayes 9, noes 83.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 83, noes 9.

The main question was then ordered—ayes 83, noes 11.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will let us have the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no; the votes already taken show that there is no negative vote.

Mr. DRIGGS demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to—ayes 86, noes 6.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

There was no objection; and the leave was granted.

THE ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next at ten o'clock, a. m.

Several MEMBERS. Say eleven.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; we had better meet at ten.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to the motion of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I move that we take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday next, after we shall have received a message from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Senate have already acted on a resolution to close the session at noon on Monday.

Several MEMBERS. That is a mistake.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we had better wait until we get a message from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that he is misinformed. It was stated to the Chair by some gentleman who had just come from the Senate Chamber that they had acted on the resolution to close the session on Monday at noon, and concurred in it. The Chair now learns that that is a mistake.

Mr. PENDLETON. I rise to a privileged question. I offer a concurrent resolution that the two Houses close the present session on Monday next at noon.

Mr. GANSON. I came from the Senate a moment ago, and they had not then acted on the resolution of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to send another resolution to the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would like to know what the object is in sending them another resolution of adjournment? They have already one or more of our resolutions for an adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of none for this particular date that have been sent to the Senate. Resolutions have been sent proposing various dates last week for an adjournment. If this one should be agreed to no further action would be required by the House for an adjournment on Monday.

The concurrent resolution was then adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. Is it in order now to move that when we adjourn we adjourn to meet at ten o'clock on Monday?

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent. A motion to take a recess till ten o'clock on Monday morning would be in order.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 406, supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, reported that the committee had met and had agreed upon certain recommendations to their respective Houses.

The report was read.

Mr. ROSS. If I understand the report, I hope it will not be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERHAM. I will explain the report. The House bill provided for the increase of pensions to privates and non-commissioned officers from eight to eleven dollars a month. The Senate amended the bill by striking out that provision; and the conference committee recommends the House to recede and agree to the amendment.

Another provision in the bill is that certain persons in the service of the United States volunteers not regularly mustered in, shall be entitled to pensions. We have in the report of the conference committee made certain provisions for that state of things.

The Senate added a section to the bill providing that the widows and children of colored soldiers shall be entitled to pensions upon making certain proof, the principles of which are stated in the section. The conference committee recommends that certain amendments be made in that section so as to guard more completely against imposition. That was the best arrangement that the committee of conference could make. The bill has been regarded as a very important one, and should be passed now. I hope the conference report will be agreed to, and I move the previous question on its adoption.

Mr. ROSS. I ask the gentleman from Maine to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PERHAM. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. ROSS. I certainly think it would be improper for the House to adopt the report. The House agreed to increase the pensions to widows of deceased soldiers and those disabled in the service from eight dollars to eleven dollars. It is well known that that is but a very small increase compared with the increased cost of living. The Senate struck out that increase; and the committee of conference recommend the House to concur in that amendment. I hope the House will not do so, but that it will stand by its original action. It would be disgraceful to the country to leave the widows and children of the soldiers who fell in its service subject to penury and want while Congress raises the pay of the clerks and civil officers of the Government. I trust, therefore, that the House will reject the report, and non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PERHAM renewed the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, which was on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ROSS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE OLD GUARD.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to introduce a bill to which I think there will be no objection. I ask that it be read for information.

The bill to authorize the President to raise and organize a force of volunteers over forty-five years of age, to be called the Old Guard, was read. It proposes to authorize the President of the United States, at any time hereafter, to accept of one hundred thousand volunteers for the term of one year, to be composed of men exceeding forty-five years of age, of requisite physical ability, who shall be employed in the service of the United States for post and garrison duty, to guard lines of communication, or such other military service as they may be found suitable for; such force to be organized and officered as other regiments and companies of volunteers, and to be styled the Old Guard, and to receive, in addition to such pay, rations and clothing as is now allowed to other troops in the service of the United States, $100 bounty, one half to be paid when the men are mustered into service, and the other half when honorably discharged therefrom, or at the expiration of the term of service.

Mr. WILSON. Unless the bill provides for a tax on whisky on hand out of which to pay these bounties I shall object to the introduction of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am very glad to see my friend from Vermont on the anxious seat. He is very anxious to have this bill passed, and I hope he will accept an amendment which I will now offer.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

WASHINGTON GAS COMPANY.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee for the District of Columbia Senate bill No. 336, to amend the act incorporating the Washington Gas-Light Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. UPSON. I object.

OLD GUARD—AGAIN.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to withdraw the objection to the bill which the gentleman from Vermont desired to report providing for the raising of an Old Guard. I am satisfied that the Committee of Ways and Means ought to go into the Old Guard, and I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARDING. I object.

RECORD OF A VOTE.

Mr. LAZEAR, by unanimous consent, obtained permission to record his vote in the negative on the enrollment bill.

Mr. BROOKS moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend so as to say eleven o'clock.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at thirty-five minutes after two o'clock, a. m.) the House took a recess until ten, a. m., on Monday.

MONDAY MORNING SESSION.

The House reassembled at ten o'clock, a. m., (Monday, July 4.)

THANKS TO THE SOLDIERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That before the adjournment of the present session of Congress, on this the eighty-seventh anniversary of the birth of our national independence, it is becoming and proper for the Representatives of the people to renew to our officers, soldiers, and seamen engaged in the great struggle for the suppression of the rebellion against our Government our profound and heartfelt thanks for their services, our sympathy for their sufferings, and to congratulate them on their successes and their triumphs, and the hope of a speedy termination of the contest and their return to the peaceful pursuits of life.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer that resolution not only as an expression of what I believe to be the sentiments of the House, but to enable me to congratulate the country on the successes and triumphs achieved by our arms, and the advances that have been made toward the suppression of the rebellion since the last anniversary of our independence. It is but a year ago that the rebel army, in all its power and strength, was far north of Washington and invading the great State of Pennsylvania, threatening its capital and the great commercial cities of Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. The Mississippi river was still closed, and although Vicksburg capitulated one year ago, yet the rebels held Port Hudson, and the great father of waters did not then "run unvexed to the sea." In Tennessee, we held only to Nashville and Murfreesboro'. Let us now, sir, contemplate the changes the year has brought to us in the military situation and let the country take heart and courage. The Mississippi is now open, and commerce floats there to-day comparatively unobstructed. Though we have lost many men and much war material in Arkansas and Louisiana, we now hold as much territory in those States as a year ago, besides holding points in Texas that we did not then have. The "hero of the Mississippi," fresh from his glorious successes on that river, snatches victory from the jaws of defeat at Chattanooga, fights a battle above the clouds, plants his victorious banner on the top of Lookout mountain, and opens the gateway to Georgia, the Empire State of the South. The heroic and undaunted Sherman, after driving Johnston and his veteran army for so great a distance through his own country and capturing Dalton, Rome, with all of its works and military stores, and many other towns, yesterday dated his dispatch from Marietta, Georgia, eighteen miles from Atlanta, the great rebel heart of the Southwest. Johnston and his army are flying before the invincible hosts of the army of the Southwest.

Where is the great army of Lee now? Two months ago this day, numbering one hundred and thirty thousand of the best soldiers of the bogus confederacy, this grand rebel army, resting in its magnificent intrenchments behind the Rapidan, confronted our forces which were on this side of that now famous river. Our Army, led by that child of victory, has advanced from the Rapidan to the south of Petersburg. General Grant has driven the desperate and maddened hordes of Lee through sixty miles of his intrenchments, outgeneraling him in every movement, and beating him in every battle. He now holds both Petersburg and Richmond by the throat. All the fight is whipped out of Lee, and he now cowers in his defenses, not daring to come out and give battle to that army of the Potomac which by its long-continued and desperate fighting, its persistent and heroic courage, has made itself a name and a fame that will live forever in history. The campaign has been one of the greatest and most remarkable the world has ever known. While the country has been concerned at the magnitude of our own loss, it seems not to have considered the appalling losses of the enemy. He has lost sixty thousand men in killed and wounded and sixteen thousand prisoners; he has lost innumerable standards and battle-flags and twenty-three guns. He has lost twenty-six general officers in killed, wounded, and prisoners. Our losses in prisoners have not been more than six thousand, and our whole loss, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, does not exceed that of the rebels. We have lost but five guns by capture by the enemy, though both Wilson and Hunter had to destroy some fifteen or twenty small pieces to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy. We have lost seventeen general officers in killed, wounded, and prisoners. Our forces have destroyed the Virginia Central railroad from the South Anna to near Gordonsville, rendering it impossible for it to be repaired for a long time. I do not consider the reported raid upon the Baltimore and Ohio railroad as of any significance. Richmond has now no railroad communication north. We hold the Petersburg and Weldon railroad, the great line of communication south to Wilmington and Charleston.

Wilson and Kautz, two of the most daring and gallant soldiers in the service, have in their recent daring and successful raids, thoroughly destroyed thirty miles of the Petersburg and Lynchburg railroad and twenty-five miles of the Danville road, besides destroying three trains of cars, two locomotives, and a vast amount of supplies. Hunter, called by the rebels a "fanatic, but a fighter," in his recent expedition achieved great success, going it absolutely wild, capturing Staunton with all its vast depots of supplies, taking Lexington, the residence of the rebel ex-governor of Virginia, John Letcher, and burning the military institute there, a hateful nursery of treason. He tore up railroads, burned their bridges, cut the canal, destroyed barges containing ordnance and ammunition, and inflicting irreparable damage upon all the country. Every railroad running into either Richmond or Petersburg is now cut off, and the Richmond papers say no trains of cars are running out from the city. Petersburg is substantially at our mercy to be shelled and destroyed, and both that city and Richmond, short of supplies and their communications cut, must soon succumb. Lee's army, powerless for attack upon our brave troops, short of necessary supplies, must soon be cooped up for eventual capture or make its way south toward the Carolinas. Our troops are in the highest spirits, full of hope and courage, and every man confident of success. The whole military situation never looked more promising than at present, and I believe we are now rapidly approaching the triumphant end of the great struggle. This Congress has nobly accomplished its duty. With all the necessary legislation passed, with the certain prospect of filling up the ranks of the Army, with the patient and trusting patriotism of the people, all loyal men can now look forward with hope and faith. The first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress will adjourn under favorable auspices. Returning to our seats on the 1st of December, as I hope we all may, I trust we shall see the rebellion crushed, peace restored, and the country regenerated and disenthralled.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate have passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 461) for the relief of John C. McConnell; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty.

Also, that the Senate have agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for an adjournment of the present session of Congress on Thursday, the 30th of June, with an amendment striking out "Thursday, the 30th of June," and inserting in lieu thereof "Monday, the 4th of July;" in which amendment he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have adopted a resolution providing for a suspension of the 16th and 17th joint rules for the remainder of the present session; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the message of the Senate stating that the Senate have amended the concurrent resolution passed by the House so as to fix the date of final adjournment of the two Houses of Congress at twelve o'clock, m., Monday, July 4, instead of Thursday, June 30, was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate concurred in.

SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH JOINT RULES.

On the suggestion of the SPEAKER, the message from the Senate announcing the passage of a concurrent resolution by the Senate suspending the 16th and 17th joint rules for the remainder of the present session was taken from the Speaker's table.

The 16th and 17th joint rules were read, as follows:

"16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the last three days of the session.

"17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session."

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

ACCOUNTS OF JUSTIN HARLAN.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the accounts of Justin Harlan, Indian agent within the southern superintendency, for the first quarter of 1864; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I ask the consent of the House to report back from the Committee for the District of Columbia Senate bill No. 336, to amend the act incorporating the Washington Gas-Light Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I desire to say that I am instructed by a majority of the Committee for the District of Columbia to report the bill back.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order except by unanimous consent.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The SPEAKER stated that the business in order was the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

RICHARD G. MURPHY.

Senate bill No. 346, for the relief of Richard G. Murphy, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill directs the repayment to Major Richard G. Murphy of the sum of $1,800 for amount paid by him as agent of the Sioux Indians on false vouchers transmitted to him by Willis A. Gorman, late superintendent of Indian affairs for the northwestern superintendency. The bill also directs suit to be commenced against W. A. Gorman for said amount wrongfully taken from the Treasury.

Mr. KERNAN. Can the Committee on Indian Affairs give us any information about that bill?

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Indian Affairs have thoroughly examined that bill, and they are unanimously of the opinion that it ought to pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBMARINE INVENTIONS.

Senate bill No. 343, making an appropriation for testing submarine inventions, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill appropriates $25,000 for the purpose of testing the value of submarine batteries and other submarine inventions, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF DELEGATE.

Mr. McBRIDE asked consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the Delegate from the Territory of Idaho the sum of $220, being the amount deducted from his salary on account of absence from the House occasioned by the time necessarily employed in travel from Idaho to Washington.

Mr. ENGLISH objected.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 346) for the relief of Richard G. Murphy;

An act (H. R. No. 305) to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 510) further to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels;

An act (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) explanatory of a joint resolution relative to pay of staff officers of the Lieutenant General;

An act (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government;

An act (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty;

An act (H. R. No. 461) for the relief of John C. McConnell;

An act (S. No. 348) for the supervision, repairs, and completion of the Washington aqueduct;

An act (S. No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service; and

An act (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia.

CHANGE OF DATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the House having on Saturday taken a recess until this morning instead of adjourned, this is in fact a part of Saturday's session, and inasmuch as there may be a discrepancy of dates in the business of the two Houses, if there be no objection the Chair will direct that the entries of this morning's proceedings be made on the Journal as the 4th of July instead of the 2d.

There was no objection.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that there be no further business transacted by the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order by unanimous consent.

Mr. ECKLEY. I object.

NEVADA HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Mr. WINDOM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of the preëmptors and locators with half-breed scrip in Nevada Territory; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

JOHN J. MICHIE.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 338) for the relief of John J. Michie, of New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.

PAY OF DELEGATE.

Mr. McBRIDE. The gentleman from Connecticut now withdraws his objection to the resolution which I asked consent to offer a few moments ago to pay the Delegate from Idaho the amount deducted from his compensation in consequence of his absence from the House while on his way here. I now ask that the resolution may be received and acted upon.

Mr. ENGLISH. I will say that when I objected to the resolution of the gentleman from Oregon I did it on the supposition that the Delegate might have left the Territory in time to have been here at the beginning of the session. I understand, however, that he was not elected until the beginning of October, and that he started immediately, on being notified of his election, for the capital. Under this statement of facts I withdraw my objection to the resolution.

There being no further objection to the resolution, it was received and adopted.

Mr. McBRIDE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WEBSTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution granting additional compensation to the employés of the two Houses of Congress; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the cost of living in this city has increased at least one hundred per cent.: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid, at the close of the present session of Congress, to the officers, clerks, and other employees of the two Houses of Congress, and such other persons in and about the Capitol as have usually been embraced in extra compensation resolutions, a sum equal to twenty per cent. upon the amount of their annual compensation; and in case of such as do not receive an annual compensation a like per cent. upon the amount of compensation received by them respectively during the present session; and a sum sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WEBSTER moved the previous question on the engrossment of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ALLEY called for tellers on its passage. Tellers were not ordered.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. WEBSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. MICHIE.

Mr. HOTCHKISS again asked consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of John J. Michie.

Mr. BOUTWELL objected.

RELEASE FROM DRAFT.

Mr. ECKLEY asked consent to introduce a joint resolution releasing from draft certain persons called into service for one hundred days by the Governor of Ohio.

Mr. ANCONA objected.

COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, asked consent to introduce a bill fixing the salary of the Commissioner of Public Buildings at $3,000 per annum.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I desire to say that the present salary of the Commissioner of Public Buildings is but $2,000. He has a very large amount of business to transact and a large responsibility to incur, entirely disproportionate to the salary. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I cannot withdraw it.

SUSANNAH DEFALCO.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by unanimous consent, reported adversely on the petition of Susannah Defalco; which was laid on the table, and the committee discharged from its further consideration.

PAY OF LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPERS.

Mr. CRESWELL, by unanimous consent, made an adverse report on the petition of the keepers of the light-houses in the fifth congressional district of Maryland, asking an increase of compensation; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. MORRILL asked unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution requiring the report of the census of 1860 to be completed within one year, and limiting it in extent to three volumes of the size of the one already printed.

Mr. STEVENS objected.

RECESS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, (at ten o'clock and forty-five minutes, a. m.) the House took a recess until eleven o'clock and fifteen minutes, a. m.

At the expiration of the time designated, the House reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate have passed a joint resolution (S. No. 78) providing for the appointment of a commission upon the subject of raising revenue by taxation; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have passed without amendment a bill (H. R. No. 32) to regulate the sessions of the circuit court of the northern district of New York, and for other purposes.

DIRECT TAX IN REBEL STATES.

Mr. FENTON. I rise to a privileged question. I report back, in accordance with the permission given by the House to report at any time, the bill of the Senate (No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of the direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

REVENUE COMMISSION.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the vote is taken on that bill, as it may disclose no quorum present, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. No. 78) providing for the appointment of a commission on the subject of raising revenue by taxation.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commission to consist of three persons to inquire and report as to the best mode of raising the revenue required to supply the wants of the Government; the commission to have power to take testimony and to obtain information in such manner as they may deem expedient or as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The joint resolution also appropriates such an amount as may be necessary to defray the expenses of the commission.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe there will be no objection to that resolution from any part of the House. It is manifest that such a commission ought to have existed from the very foundation of the Government, and it is indispensably necessary in these times to enable Congress to legislate wisely on the subject of taxation.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask whether these commissioners are to be appointed from outside the Treasury Department?

Mr. MORRILL. They are to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury from any class of persons he may select for the purpose of obtaining information on the subject of taxation.

Mr. COX. If they are to be appointed from persons outside the Treasury Department I desire to inquire what salary they are to receive.

Mr. MORRILL. Nothing more than their expenses is provided for by this resolution. They are to take the testimony of merchants and others, and their report, if they act judiciously, cannot fail to be very valuable. It is impossible now for any one to tell in every case how much taxation many articles will bear without the tax becoming oppressive. Take, for instance, the large number of articles of which alcohol forms a component part, or those goods made in part of silk, and so of many others; the information which such a commission may obtain from merchants largely engaged in the purchase and sale of such articles will be invaluable. I hope there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. KERNAN. If I were satisfied that business men and not politicians would be appointed I would not object.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will have to trust the Secretary of the Treasury for that.

Mr. COX. I do not like the idea of allowing merchants to come and make arrangements to favor their own commodities. It is the business of the Treasury Department to collect all necessary information on this subject, and they already have that power. I am opposed to going outside that Department to appoint new officers for this purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I assure the gentleman the Treasury Department possesses no such power as this resolution provides for.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I must object to that proposition.

DIRECT TAXES IN REBEL STATES—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will be on the passage of the bill reported by the gentleman from New York from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of that bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FENTON. As I am informed there may be no quorum present if the vote is taken at this time, I will, with the consent of the House, ask that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There being no objection, the bill was accordingly recommitted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 575) to correct a clerical error in the law of June 30, 1864, relating to the Post Office Department;

An act (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Horace Gates;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty;

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate have passed a joint resolution (S. No. 79) to increase the compensation of matrons in the hospitals, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate have passed without amendment a bill of the House (No. 421) to pay in part for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes.

JOHN J. MICHIE.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I believe all objection is now withdrawn to the bill for the relief of John J. Michie, and I ask that it may be passed.

There being no further objection, House bill No. 338, for the relief of John J. Michie, of New Orleans, Louisiana, was brought before the House, (the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar having been discharged from its further consideration,) ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF HOSPITAL MATRONS.

The House next proceeded as the regular order of business to the consideration of the Senate joint resolution No. 78, to increase the compensation of matrons in the hospitals; which was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that hereafter the compensation of matrons in hospitals shall be ten dollars per month and one ration.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was

The latter motion was agreed to.

GILBERT AND GERISH.

Mr. SWEAT, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution for the relief of Gilbert & Gerish; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides for refunding to Gilbert & Gerish certain advances made to the United States marshal of the Territory of Utah in 1855, for which they have never received payment.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWEAT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELEASE FROM DRAFT.

Mr. ECKLEY again asked unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution releasing from draft certain persons called into service for one hundred days by the Governor of Ohio.

Mr. KERNAN objected.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to suspend the rules to enable him to introduce the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. I see no reason why men who have served for a hundred days should be exempted from draft for three years, nor why, if they are to be, the joint resolution should be confined to Ohio so long as other States are similarly situated.

Mr. ECKLEY. No other State is similarly situated. Some of these men have already been drafted.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 80, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ashley, Boyd, Cobb, Eckley, Frank, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Loan, McClurg, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Spalding, Stevens, Elihu B. Washburne, and Windom—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Bailey, Baxter, Blair, Boutwell, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Cravens, Gresswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Fenton, Gausson, Gooch, Griswold, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, John H. Hubbard, Hutchins, William Johnson, Kelley, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, Longyear, Marcy, McBride, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Noble, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Shannon, Smith, Smithers, John B. Steele, Sweat, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Winfield, and Woodbridge—80.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James G. Allen, William J. Allen, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Clay, Dawes, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Herrick, Higley, Holman, Hooper, Hurlbut, Jencks, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Lazear, Mallory, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, McDouge, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Anos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, John O'Neill, Orth, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Prayn, Radford, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scott, Sloan, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Voorhees, Wadsworth, William B. Washburn, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—84.

So the rules were not suspended.

COMPENSATION OF GLOBE REPORTERS.

Mr. DAWSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk pay out of the contingent fund to the reporters of the House for the Congressional Globe an amount equal to twenty per cent. of their compensation as such reporters for the present session of Congress.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 421) to pay in part for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 118) for the relief of sufferers by a late accident at the United States arsenal in Washington, District of Columbia.

REVENUE COMMISSION.

The House, by unanimous consent, proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 78) providing for the appointment of a commission upon the subject of raising revenue by taxation.

Mr. MORRILL moved the previous question. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that resolution makes an appropriation, and must be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order on the ground that it is too late, the previous question having been ordered upon it.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that resolution for a moment, to enable me to introduce a joint resolution to correct an error in the tax bill.

Mr. ODELL. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will not withdraw it; but I hope gentlemen upon this side of the House will cease their objections to it, for the reason that it is a measure requested by the new Secretary of the Treasury. The commission which it provides for are to report at the next session of Congress such information as they may collect to enable Congress to judge how they can best apportion the burdens of taxation upon the country. It is an important measure, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

CORRECTION OF INTERNAL REVENUE BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution to correct errors in the internal revenue bill; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution makes various corrections in the internal revenue bill, principally in respect to referring to sections by wrong numbers.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ENROLLED RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 118) for the relief of the sufferers by a late accident at the United States arsenal in Washington, District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (S. No. 79) to increase the compensation of matrons in the hospitals.

RECORD OF VOTES.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to record his vote in the negative upon the passage of the enrollment bill.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to record his vote in the negative upon the reconstruction bill.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, (at three minutes before twelve o'clock,) a concurrent resolution was passed extending the time of the session for ten minutes.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. STEVENS moved that a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait on the President and inform him that if he has no further communications to make to Congress the two Houses are now ready to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. STEVENS, WASHBURN of Illinois, and DAWSON, as such committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed the concurrent resolution of this House extending the time of the session for ten minutes.

Also, that the Senate have appointed a committee on its part to join the committee appointed on the part of the House to wait on the President and inform him that if he has no further communication to make Congress is now ready to adjourn.

PAY OF LABORERS, ETC.

Mr. A. MYERS asked consent to introduce a resolution that the laborers and book-folders about the Capitol whose salaries are less than $1,000 per annum shall be paid at that rate for the present session of Congress.

Mr. COX. I object to that unless the gentleman will add also the female employes in the Departments.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that at the close of the proceedings of the House the Clerk read Washington's Farewell Address.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed to read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. ASHLEY. I object; I think we had better see whether we have any more business to do.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President, by Mr. HAY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed an act (H. R. No. 46) for the relief of John C. McConnell.

MOVEMENTS OF THE CLOCK.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. That clock is going backwards. [Laughter.] Some minutes ago it stood three minutes before twelve, and now it is five minutes before twelve.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that he supposes the clock has obeyed the instructions of the House to extend the session ten minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Well, I suppose it is going the same way as the country.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh no; the gentleman means the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Let me say to the gentleman that the clock is precisely with my watch.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Well, it is not with a watch on the Democratic side of the House. [Laughter.]

REVENUE COMMISSION—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I now call up the Senate joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission upon the subject of raising revenue by taxation, upon which the previous question has been seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order. That is the same resolution which we have once had before the House, and it is not in order to call it up again.

The SPEAKER. It is the same resolution, but it was laid over informally, and comes up in order under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to the question of order that it makes an appropriation and cannot now be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order, on the ground that it is now too late to raise it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. ODELL. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Vermont is like the clock, always going backwards.

Mr. ODELL. I think the gentleman from Vermont is not like the clock, but that the gentleman from Wisconsin is like the clock in that respect now. I am sorry to see that this side of the House oppose such a resolution, the sole object of which is to enable Congress when it shall again convene to legislate intelligently upon a subject which is now of the deepest interest to the Government as well as to every citizen of the country—the subject of internal revenue. I consider the action of the gentleman upon this measure as factious to a degree that does not reflect credit on the side of the House to which I belong.

The best tariff law ever enacted—that of 1846—was the result of a commission appointed by a Democratic Government to collect information, not in this country alone, but in Europe. That investigation led to wise legislation, as I have no doubt this now proposed would if permitted to be made.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the joint resolution on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PRINTING OF FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. ROSS, by unanimous consent, moved that ten thousand copies of Washington's Farewell Address be printed for the use of the House; which motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

JAMES SAUNDERS.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That James Saunders be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for his services during the present session of Congress the same amount of compensation as is paid to the regular laborers of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. FENTON moved that the Clerk proceed to read the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. WINDOW. The emancipation proclamation is also called for.

Mr. WHALEY. I move to amend by substituting Jefferson's inaugural address and President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FENTON. I call for a vote on reading the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; that is a revolutionary, insurrectionary document, calculated to give aid and comfort to the rebellion, as gentlemen on that side seem trying to do. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Clerk proceeded to read the Declaration of Independence, as follows:

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the Powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these, are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new Government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established, should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But, when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these colonies, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former system of government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object, the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world:

He has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his Governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained; and, when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the Legislature; a right inestimable to them, and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing, with manly firmness, his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused, for a long time after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large for their exercise; the State remaining, in the mean time, exposed to all the danger of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose, obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

He has obstructed the administration of justice, by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies, without the consent of our Legislature.

He has affected to render the military independent of, and superior to, the civil power.

He has combined, with others, to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment, for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing taxes on us without our consent:

For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury:

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses.

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries, so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these colonies:

For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering, fundamentally, the powers of our governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated government here, by declaring us out of his protection, and waging war against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is, at this time, transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation, and tyranny, already begun, with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow-citizens, taken captive on the high seas, to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections among us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction, of all ages, sexes, and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions, we have petitioned for redress, in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attention to our British brethren. We have warned them, from time to time, of attempts made by their Legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them, by the ties of our common kindred, to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too, have been deaf to the voice of justice and consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace, friends.

We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general Congress assembled, appealing to the supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name, and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that, as free and independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do. And, for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other, our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

The foregoing declaration was, by order of Congress, engrossed, and signed by the following members:

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PENDLETON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk pay, at the close of this session, out of the contingent fund of the House, to the officers, clerks, and other employes of the House a sum equal to twenty per cent. on their annual compensation respectively; or, where not receiving an annual compensation, on the amount received by them during the session.

Mr. PENDLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 79) to increase the compensation of the matrons in the hospitals.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have passed without amendment a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 563) in addition to the act respecting quarantine and health laws, approved February 25, 1799, and for the better execution of the third section thereof;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) to correct errors in the internal revenue bill; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of certain moneys therein mentioned.

Also, that the Senate have adopted a concurrent resolution providing for an extension of the present session ten minutes longer than the time already fixed; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

The message just received from the Senate extending the time of the session for ten minutes was taken up, and the resolution adopted.

CHARLES A. HICKBORN.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Invalid Pensions Senate bill No. 303, for the relief of Charles A. Hickborn.

The bill was read. It provides for placing Charles A. Hickborn, infant son of a late contract surgeon, upon the pension roll at the rate of twenty dollars a month, until he shall arrive at the age of sixteen years.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It occurs to me that that bill is a departure from the uniform practice of the Government in relation to granting pensions. I should like to hear an explanation of it before I can vote for it.

Mr. WHALEY. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Senate passed the bill and it was received here and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions too late to give it much examination; but supposing that the Senate would not have passed it if it had not been right, I have reported it back.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As the gentleman acknowledges that his committee have not considered the bill, I move to recommit it to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

FURTHER EXTENSION OF TIME.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate have passed a concurrent resolution extending the time of the session for ten minutes longer, until half past twelve o'clock, p. m.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the resolution was, by unanimous consent, taken up and adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. EDEN called for the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 13, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blair, Boyd, Cobb, Coffroth, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Rollins, Scott, Sloan, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Thayer, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—85.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) to correct errors in the internal revenue bill; when the Speaker signed the same.

REPORT FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. STEVENS, from the committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, reported that the committee had discharged the duty imposed upon them, and that the President had informed them that he had no further communication to make, except to send a "God bless you" to each of the members.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived,

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the hour of adjournment has arrived, and I wish you, one and all, a happy reunion with family and friends in the charmed circle of home. Thanking you for the kind and generous manner in which you have sustained me in the administration of the difficult and responsible duties of this chair, and hoping and trusting, when we reassemble in these Halls next December, Providence may have so crowned the endeavors of our heroic defenders in the field that we may be permitted to rejoice over the full realization of the prayer of so many millions of your constituents, "God save the American Republic," I do now, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of both Houses, declare the first session of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Eighth Congress of the United States adjourned sine die.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 4, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is no objection, I move to postpone all prior orders, with a view to take up the joint resolution from the House of Representatives which is now on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator that that had better be deferred a few moments to allow Senators to come in.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow it to proceed as far as its passage I shall have no objection to allowing it to go over for a time if the Senator desires it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income duty was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in addition to the income duty already imposed by law, there shall be levied, assessed, and collected on the 1st day of October, 1864, a special income duty upon the gains, profits, or income for the year ending the 31st of December next preceding the time named for levying, assessing, and collecting the duty of all persons residing within the United States, or of citizens of the United States residing abroad, at the rate of five per cent. on all sums exceeding $600, which is to be levied, assessed, and collected, except as to the rate, according to the provisions of existing laws for the collection of an income duty where not inapplicable. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as to time and mode or other matters to enforce the collection of this special income duty as may be necessary. In estimating the annual gains, profits, or income for this special income duty, no deduction is to be made for dividends or interest received from any association, corporation, or company, nor is any deduction to be made for any salary or pay received.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the resolution had better lie over for the present until the Senate is full.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we have a quorum now.

Mr. MORGAN. This is a very important measure, and there are some Senators not now here who would like to be present when the vote is taken upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We passed this same proposition the other day after debate. If the Senator desires it to lie over I have no objection, but I hope the Senator will allow it to pass.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to its passing at any time; I am ready to vote for it now; but I think it is due to Senators who take an interest in it that they should be allowed an opportunity to be present when it is to be voted upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator from New York that there is not a single Senator but what knew this resolution was to come up this morning for final action. We had it under discussion on Saturday night. We passed a similar proposition the other day after full discussion by a very large vote.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I hope the Senator from New York will waive his objection; and let this joint resolution be put upon its passage, and upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is only nine o'clock, and there are a good many Senators who I know want to be here when this resolution is acted upon. I think it had better lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CONNESS. There was a very full Senate on Saturday night, and it was the general assent of all the Senators present that this joint resolution should pass without any objection, and certainly it is due to Senators who have been in their places this morning. I hope it will not be longer delayed.

Mr. SUMNER. But was there any understanding that the resolution should be passed without amendment?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir. There is no quorum in the other House, and it must pass that way.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Has the resolution been read the third time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it had better go over for the present and let the yeas and nays be called upon it, and in the mean time we can transact such business as can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection if Senators desire it. Let the yeas and nays be ordered, if desired, and then let it go over.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TEN EYCK. They have been asked for. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Is not the joint resolution open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I understand that the Senate proposes to adjourn without providing additional taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I need not inform the Senator that according to the Constitution we cannot originate taxes, and the House of Representatives is in such a condition that probably we had better pass this without attempting to impose any additional taxes.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator has not read the Constitution very recently when he says what he does.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say we cannot originate a tax bill. We can amend this resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. We cannot originate such a measure, but we can amend this. We now have complete jurisdiction of this whole question. The language of the Constitution is as follows:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

Therefore, the whole question of taxation is now open on this joint resolution. We may meet all the demands of the late Secretary of the Treasury, we may meet all the demands of the country on this joint resolution. Any amendment can be proposed and carried, completely within the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, inasmuch as the joint resolution that he is speaking upon cannot now be considered, or as it is understood it shall be postponed informally, to allow me to call up House bill No. 421, the bill relating to the Congressional Globe.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must object to this joint resolution being laid aside until we can have a vote. The Senator from Massachusetts has made up his mind to propose amendments to it. We might as well dispose of the question at once, because it is not open to amendment without a reconsideration; we might as well have the question settled now as at any other time. I trust, therefore, we shall settle it now. If the Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider, I shall resist it, and we can have a vote whether the Senate will open this resolution to discussion and consideration with a view to amend it.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to move a tax on whisky on hand.

Mr. SHERMAN. That has been voted down.

Mr. SUMNER. I know it has been on former occasions voted down, but does it follow that it will be voted down now?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was voted down in the House of Representatives on Saturday.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says it was voted down in the House of Representatives on Saturday, but it was also voted up in the House on Saturday. There were several votes taken upon it, some one way and some the other. I am told there is not a quorum in the House. There again is an illustration of the ill-considered resolution which we adopted on Saturday night. I should like to have the resolution in such a situation that we can have a vote on the question of taxing whisky on hand.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of the honorable member from Massachusetts, without a motion to reconsider I suppose the debate is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is not in order in the range it takes at the present time.

Mr. SUMNER. I take it the whole resolution is under discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution, and the resolution itself is open to discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. Does not that open the whole question on the whole resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not the question of particular amendments.

Mr. SUMNER. I take it that when one question of taxation is pending before the Senate the whole vast subject of taxation is open. The question naturally is whether what you propose to enact is adequate, and all the considerations for and against are proper to be presented to the Senate. Now, sir, at this moment I feel that this resolution is inadequate. It is simply intended to meet the exigency created by the new enrollment act. It is not intended to provide those additional ways and means which the late head of the Treasury has told us the country now needs.

But the Senator from Ohio has informed us that the present Secretary of the Treasury does not desire any additional means. I deem it of vast importance to the country that that statement should go forth, but that it should be accompanied also with the reasons. I wish therefore to know in what the difference consists between the estimates of the late Secretary of the Treasury and of the present Secretary of the Treasury. I speak now for my constituents and for the country at large to know whether or not adequate means have been provided to meet the great emergencies. Can the Senator from Ohio enlighten us on the point?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts appeals to me. I now appeal to him as an American citizen and as an American statesman whether he desires to open these controverted questions at this stage of the session, the inevitable effect of which will be to defeat this resolution and prevent the enrollment act which he himself and his colleague have forced upon the country from being enforced. I beg him to allow this resolution to pass. He knows that in the present condition of affairs we cannot amend it without defeating it. I trust, therefore, that he will not delay action on this resolution or hinder its passage. If our measures should prove insufficient—and I have been from the first in favor of the largest taxation—the President of the United States can call us together to-morrow, or the next day, or at any time, and we can make any further provision that is deemed necessary.

As for going into the views of the present Secretary and the former Secretary of the Treasury, getting up a dispute between those two gentlemen—

Mr. SUMNER. No dispute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or showing that there is a difference of opinion between them, or might possibly be a difference of opinion between them, I will not do it. The only question now before the Senate is on the passage of this joint resolution, whether we will agree to levy an income tax for the purpose of meeting the bounties provided for by the enrollment act. There is no other question before the Senate. I appeal to the Senator to allow the resolution to pass. He knows very well that an attempt to amend it at this stage of the session in the present condition of the House will be to defeat the resolution. He has it in his power, any Senator has it in his power, to defeat this resolution. It is a question of responsibility, of patriotism, of duty; and I for one consider my duty best performed by not answering the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts, by not going into these controverted matters, although I might vote with him and agree with him at other times. The question is, shall we pass this joint resolution in order to provide the bounties demanded by the enrollment act? That is the only object, the only intention of the resolution; not to reopen these questions of taxation. The House, in pursuance of its constitutional duty, has refused to open up those questions, refused to send us propositions of that kind, and if we now attach them to this resolution, however just and meritorious they may be, it will only create trouble, confusion, delay, and the defeat of the measure.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Ohio entirely misunderstands me. I have no purpose of defeating this measure. I want it passed, but I also want something more. I wish so far as I can as a Senator here to meet this occasion. I do not wish to desert my post here leaving that duty undone; and I, on my part, now in these last hours appeal to the Senator from Ohio to exercise his commanding influence over these questions to endeavor to satisfy the demands of his country. In various quarters we already hear that Congress will be soon convened again in order to meet the exigency and to do what we now leave undone. I call upon the Senator from Ohio by energetic action to render any extra session of this Congress unnecessary. Let him not chide others who now seek to animate Congress to their duty, but let him join in the work which the hour requires.

Sir, I am with that Senator as he knows very well on this resolution; but I ask in the name of my country that adequate means shall be supplied in order to carry on this war to maintain the national credit. Is the Senator from Ohio ready to go home now and leave the national currency and the national credit all afloat? Sir, it does not belong to a Senator in his position to abandon that great, transcendent duty at this moment. He errs when he seeks to stifle discussion; he errs when he seeks to supersede amendments to the resolution now under consideration. According to the strict provisions of the Constitution, the resolution is open to amendment; there is no proposition of increased taxation which may not be properly attached to it; and the country now looks to us to see that adequate means are supplied.

Sir, I regret the mood of the Senator from Ohio. I regret that he joins in dismissing this Congress, and to cause disappointment to our fellow-citizens at home. As I have already said, I have no opposition to make to the joint resolution. I am speaking sincerely in the interests of my country as I understand them. I do not doubt, of course, the patriotic purpose of the Senator from Ohio; but I think that he has yielded, unhappily, to what I will call this madness of the hour, this desire for the sake of the comforts of home to leave these seats and to abandon the high duties that have been imposed upon us.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I beg to say one word in reference to the extraordinary exhibition of the Senator from Massachusetts on the present occasion; but I shall not allow myself to be betrayed into any extended remarks at this hour. I cannot account for the position of the Senator from Massachusetts in any other way than as an effort at this stage of the session to screen himself from the responsibility which he has taken and to place it upon the shoulders of somebody else. We have had during this session of Congress revenue bills before us; we have had tax bills before us; we have spent weeks and months upon them; and now at this hour the Senator from Massachusetts rises and asks if we are to desert our positions without answering the demands of the country, because he wants a tax on whisky on hand!—Sir, that Senator has stood here and persistently voted against putting a tax on whisky on hand.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator voted against it when it was introduced, unless I am greatly mistaken.

Mr. SUMNER. When introduced in the beginning of the session I voted against the tax; but when it was introduced on the tax bill I voted for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it ill becomes the Senator, who stood in his place and fought the imposition of a tax on whisky at this very session of Congress, to rebuke those who struggled for it and did all they could to impose it, now in the closing hours of the session, and say, "You are the gentlemen who are deserting the interests of the country." If we had had the powerful influence of the Senator from Massachusetts at the start to put this tax upon whisky, instead of having that influence against it, doubtless ere this we could have put the tax upon whisky on hand. But, sir, I promised when I rose to go into no extended discussion. I think this Congress has done a great deal to sustain the Government. We have increased the tariff; we have passed an internal revenue bill after great consideration which it is hoped will raise a very large sum. Congress has acted, I doubt not, according to its best judgment in these particulars; and now at this hour to say that we should revise and unsettle all that we have done seems to me most extraordinary. But lest anything I may say should provoke discussion, which I do not wish to do at this hour, or to have any controversy with the Senator from Massachusetts, I shall not continue my remarks. My only object in rising at all was to show that if Congress has not done its duty, and if our expenses were likely to be larger than we anticipated, the Senator from Massachusetts is the one who aided in passing a bill giving bounties and increasing our expenses; the Senator from Massachusetts is the one who aided in preventing a tax on whisky on hand at a time when, with the aid of his influence, we could probably have passed it.

Mr. SUMNER. I have only one word to say in reply to the Senator. I have a very severe cold, so that I speak with difficulty. I am unwilling to be presented in the attitude in which he presents me. Sir, I have from the beginning voted for the largest tax which, at the time, seemed to me practicable. When the question of taxing whisky on hand was presented as a separate measure, I did not see my way then, on grounds of policy and expediency, to vote for it. It was at the beginning of the session. I did not speak on the question. I exerted no influence over it beyond that of my silent vote. When the question was presented again on the tax bill remodeling our whole system of taxation, then I devoted myself strenuously to procure a tax on whisky on hand. And now the Senator rises in his place to rebuke me for having opposed the very taxation which I sought to establish.

He further charges me with having exercised a peculiar influence with regard to the recent enrollment act. The Senator knows very well that none of those propositions relating to bounties came from me, nor did they receive my support except as I voted for the bill. So far as I made any motion on that bill, it was all in a different sense. I moved more than once a proposition to require in addition to a substitute the payment of a certain portion of one's income graduated by an ascending scale according to the income, thus striving to put money in the Treasury rather than to take it out; and yet the Senator from Illinois, entirely ignorant of the facts, charges me with having exerted an influence to take it out. Such influence as I had was given in precisely the other direction; and now such influence as I am able to exercise, it may be only in the nature of a protest, is to put money into the Treasury of my country.

Mr. HARLAN. I have voted for the highest tax proposed on all the various commodities that it was supposed would bear the tax suggested in all the bills that have been pending, believing that it would be better for the country to levy and for the people to pay a large tax than to permit the difference between gold and currency to be increased. But, sir, at this time I am unwilling to unsettle the legislation that has been had on that subject. Those that are wiser than I am have had this subject under their control during the whole session; their bills and various measures have been matured and have received the approval of both branches of Congress; and I have understood that it is believed by the gentleman who has been, recently appointed to control the financial department of the Government that the passage of this one additional measure will give him the revenue necessary to enable him to meet the various demands on the Treasury during the current fiscal year. I am therefore unwilling to unsettle what has been done and propose a larger tax on any commodity whatever.

It would be much more pleasant to me to go home and say to the people I represent on this floor that a light tax has been levied than to tell them that a very heavy one has been levied; and when those who have been appointed by the proper authorities tell us that the bills that have been passed with the addition of this single measure will enable them to meet all the accruing interest on the bonds that have been issued, and to meet the other debts of the Government during the current fiscal year, it seems to me that it is folly and worse than folly for Congress to remain here for the purpose of unsettling the legislation of the session with a view of imposing a greater burden on the people than that which is supposed to be necessary to meet all the demands of the Government. If the question was now open, if Congress had not previously settled on the tax to be levied on these commodities, I would vote with the Senator from Massachusetts; but it seems to me it would be unwise at this time to go back and undo that which we have previously done. I therefore hope that we shall come to a vote on this resolution, and that we may be able to adjourn at the hour fixed by the Senate and House of Representatives on Saturday evening.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlisle, Davis, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Nesmith, Sprague, and Wright—13.

So the joint resolution was passed.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

Mr. FOOT. I offer the usual resolution for the suspension of the 16th and 17th joint rules:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the 16th and 17th joint rules of the two Houses be suspended so far as respects any bill or joint resolution which may pass either House for the residue of the present session.

I will read those rules, to show the necessity for the adoption of this resolution. It is one which is adopted at the close of every session.

Mr. HALE and others. There is no objection to it.

Mr. FOOT. If there be no objection I shall not read them. It is a question that is to be decided without debate under the rules of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That Albert Brown have leave to withdraw his memorial and other papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. WILEY, it was Ordered, That J. O. Armes have leave to withdraw his petition and other papers from the files of the Senate.

JOHN C. McCONNELL.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 461, for the relief of John C. McConnell.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not worth while to read the bill. It appropriates $2,000 for the benefit of—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill had better be read. It has not been read at all except by its title.

The Secretary read the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John C. McConnell the sum of $2,000, in full payment for money advanced and service rendered in raising troops in the State of Maryland.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about to say that the Committee on Claims reported against the bill because there was nothing before them, as the chairman told me, to show that that amount of money was expended; but I know personally that he spent a much larger sum than that in raising troops who were mustered into the service, and so informed the honorable chairman of that committee. I believe he has now no opposition to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator is mistaken about speaking to the chairman of the committee; it was I. The chairman of the Committee on Claims is now in the chair. The committee reported against this claim because there was no evidence, at least no sufficient evidence, before the committee to support it. The Senator from Maryland says it was within his knowledge that the money was paid.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. Upon that statement I have no objection to the bill passing.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN INDIAN SUPERINTENDENCY.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow a vote to be taken on a motion to reconsider a bill. It will only occupy one moment. It is Senate bill No. 59, to consolidate certain Indian superintendencies. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WILKINSON] who introduced the bill has no objection to having it reconsidered, with a view of letting it go over to the next session.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator if that includes northwestern Iowa?

Mr. HARLAN. The bill proposes to consolidate Minnesota with Dakota as an Indian superintendency. There are some objections to passing the bill, but the Senator from Minnesota does not insist on having the vote taken upon it, nor do I. I desire the vote passing the bill to be reconsidered in order that it may go over until the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 59) extending the limits of the northern Indian superintendency was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I now move that the bill be postponed until the first Monday of December next.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 542, to regulate the pay of paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not press that until I can get a vote on a bill that was unfinished on Saturday.

Mr. WILSON. This will take but a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. But then I shall lose the floor. Mr. President, I was unfortunate, perhaps I may say, without impropriety, disappointed in not getting the floor upon a bill of some considerable importance to my constituents on Saturday night until a large amount of business was transacted. When I succeeded in getting the floor and getting the bill before the Senate, I was fortunate enough to obtain an emphatic judgment of the Senate in favor of its passage. I desire very much to take the effect of that judgment. It can be passed in a very few moments; and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not oppose my having that bill taken up and having a vote taken upon it. I desire to say further to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] that I hope he will not by indirection attempt to defeat the bill when he sees that a large majority of the Senate are in favor of it. I appeal to the Senator from Illinois whether or not he considers it his duty to pile on this bill amendments which he does not himself approve for the purpose of defeating it when two thirds of the Senate are in favor of its passage.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New York certainly will remember that the Committee on the Judiciary deliberately considered this subject. It is not proper to speak of what individuals did; but as the organ of that committee I cannot consent certainly to take one judge out of the general rule which we agreed upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must state to the Senator that debate upon the merits of a bill is not in order on a motion to take up.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I only wish to make that suggestion to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to take a vote on that bill.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 32, to regulate the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I must object to taking up that bill. It involves the question of raising the salary of the judge of the northern district of New York; and if his case is taken up, I must insist that we shall equalize the salaries of the judges generally throughout the United States. His case is not peculiar. The Committee on the Judiciary have determined not to raise salaries generally. If the Senate, however, is of a different opinion, that the salaries ought to be raised, then I think we should do justice to the other judges; and I must insist upon amendments to carry out that object if the bill should be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 32) to regulate the sessions of the circuit court and district courts for the northern district of New York, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. TRUMBULL to amend the bill by adding at the end of the fourth section the following:

And in lieu of the salary now paid to the judge of the district court of the United States for the State of Connecticut, there shall be allowed and paid quarterly to the said judge out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $3,500 per annum.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator from New York allow me to pass some resolutions for the printing of documents?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot. I shall lose a vote on the bill if I give way any longer. I will not, at this stage of the session, attempt to debate this question any further; but if any amendment shall be put upon this bill by which it shall be necessary to send it back to the House of Representatives, I shall abandon it. Although the bill is important in its other provisions in relation to the rearrangement of the courts in this large district of New York, and I regard it as very important independent of this question of salary, yet if it is changed in any way so that it shall have to go back to the House, I shall abandon the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me if there is an importance in this bill that the Senator from New York had better consent to concur with the report of the committee and adopt the rest of the bill, leaving out the fourth section, which raises the salary of this judge; then there will be no difficulty about it; and let it go over until the next session, when we can probably agree to scale the salaries of these judges properly.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will move an amendment to reduce the salary of the judge in his own district, which is now $3,500, the amount that is sought to be paid to this judge of the northern district of New York, there will be some propriety in his opposing this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New York knows that the Constitution would not allow me to do that. He would not ask me, certainly, to move an unconstitutional amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not aware of any constitutional objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am very much mistaken in the provision of the Constitution if it be not so. I will call the attention of the Senator from New York to that provision of the Constitution which I think is applicable to such a case. I am very much mistaken if it does not provide that the salaries of judges—

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator need not read the Constitution. I am aware of the provision to which he refers; but if the Senator desires to accomplish that end I will show him the way to do it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood the Senator from New York to say that he knew of no constitutional objection to the reduction of the salary of a judge of a United States court.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I submit that it is rather late in the session to go into a constitutional argument.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is not too late to abide by the Constitution. I will read a portion of the first section of the third article of the Constitution:

"The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

If there is any way to diminish the salary of a judge of a United States court under that provision I am not aware of it. Besides, there would not be the propriety which the Senator seems to suppose in diminishing it. The Senator made an argument the other night to show that there was a large population in western New York. Why, sir, the amount of business does not depend upon population. There are more cases in the city of Chicago than in Judge Hall's whole circuit.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think not. I think the records will show that there are more cases in that city alone than in Judge Hall's whole circuit. I should be very much mistaken if it is not so.

Mr. HARRIS. You are very much mistaken. Mr. TRUMBULL. Has the Senator got the statistics?

Mr. HARRIS. I know how it is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will not set up my opinion against that of the Senator, because I have not got the official statements; but I know that the court in the city of Chicago is in session nearly the whole year. I do not think there are sixty days in the year that the United States court for the northern district is not in session in the city of Chicago. The judge of the southern district of Illinois has but $2,500. The idea that the salary of a judge is to depend upon the population in his district is a mistaken notion altogether.

As I said the other day, I think there is a propriety in paying the judges of the United States courts a larger salary than they now receive in many instances; and particularly is that true in regard to the judge in reference to whom an amendment is now pending; that is, to increase the salary of the district judge of the State of Connecticut. Senators are aware, I presume, that under the laws as they now exist it is competent to call a judge from one district to perform duties in another. Under that provision of law it has been the practice for years to call upon the judge of the district court of the State of Connecticut to hold courts in the city of New York. I believe he holds court there for months and months.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. HARRIS. I hope we shall have a vote on this bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It is utterly impossible to get it through by the hour of adjournment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is executive business to be done, I will yield.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. A message has just come in from the President of the United States requiring attention.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I yield.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senate will not agree to that motion until a vote is taken upon this bill. Although I have a complete answer, I think, to the suggestions made by the Senator from Illinois, I will not say another word. Let him defeat the bill if he can by his indirect motions.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Illinois has just commenced his speech, a constitutional argument, and it is idle for us to remain here to hear a speech at this stage of the session.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is no constitutional argument.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. That is his speech.

I insist on my motion unless the Senator from Illinois can close his speech now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will say to the Senator from Kansas I am not going to make a constitutional argument. I will say to the Senator from New York I am not going to take up time by making a speech to defeat this bill if the Senate think proper to consider it. I did want the Senate to see exactly the effect of raising the salary of one judge and not the others. It seems to me improper; and when I have presented that point I shall take up no time. I will inform the Senator from Kansas that if he will withdraw his motion I do not think I shall speak five minutes.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Five minutes is just what we cannot spare.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, we can.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. There is a large executive calendar yet to be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I will withdraw it for five minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate more than five minutes. I ask Senators, if I can get their attention for one moment, is it right to raise the salary of this judge when we have refused and your committee has acted upon it, to raise the salaries of other judges? I cannot now take up the cases, because it would occupy more than five minutes to go on and show the instances of judges with inadequate salaries. We considered this whole subject in committee, and we reported against raising the salaries of any of the judges at this time. I ask Senators all around me, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] and all others who see the difficulties the country is in, whether it is right to go on and raise the salary of one judge and not raise the others? Admit that this salary is inadequate. Why, sir, our salaries are inadequate. There is not a member of this body but is spending more money than he gets from the Government. Is it right to single out one judge without doing justice to the others? Is it not unjust to the other judges? I really wish the Senator from New York would not persist in this, and I think he ought not to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will withdraw my amendment and let us take the vote directly whether we will raise this one judge's salary.

Mr. HALE. What was your amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was to raise the salary of another judge, the judge in Connecticut.

Mr. HALE. I insist on the vote being taken on that amendment to raise the salary of the judge in Connecticut. I think it ought to be tried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is renewed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir. I think there is quite as much justice in that case as there is in Judge Hall's.

Mr. MORRILL. That will defeat the bill.

Mr. HALE. It will not hurt me very much if it does.

If we had time, which we have not got, I should like to give a little history of this Judge Hall, of the way he got his appointment, of the way he got on the bench; and if my memory serves me right—I think I am not entirely at fault—there is nothing in that history that would entitle him to ask the consideration of this Senate over and above the other district judges. Perhaps my friend from New York remembers it, or perhaps he does not; but, sir, the history of the elevation of Judge Hall to the district court of the United States is peculiar, very peculiar; and it is not such as entitles him, in my humble judgment, to say the least of it, to any consideration beyond the other judges; for instance, the judge of the district court of Connecticut, whose case is now pending. He is an eminent judge, and is required to go into the State of New York and hold courts there more than half the year.

Mr. SUMNER. The judge of the district court in Boston also—Judge Sprague.

Mr. WILKINSON. I want to inform the Senator from New Hampshire upon one point.

Mr. HALE. What is that?

Mr. WILKINSON. There is a reason why

Judge Hall should be selected out and his salary raised.

Mr. HALE. What is it?

Mr. WILKINSON. It is the course which he took on the indictments for the Jerry rescue. Perhaps the Senator remembers something about it.

Mr. HALE. I remember it. Judge Hall has done more. There has been on the part of several judges in this country a persevering, wicked, perverse determination and conspiracy to break down jury trials, and Judge Hall is one of the most prominent, and active, and conspicuous, and offensive of those judges. He has literally broken down the trial by jury in criminal cases in his court. Those that want to see the trial by jury broken down in this country may vote to give Judge Hall an extra salary for doing it. In the criminal cases which grew up under the legislation of 1850, he took the jury up and examined them one by one, and refused to let any jurymen sit on criminal cases that would not beforehand pledge himself, substantially, to give a verdict according to his direction. That attempt was commenced in New Hampshire. I believe the origin and the only foundation for it was found in an early decision in Indiana, and the Indiana court, to their credit, overruled that decision. Then it was persevered in and became the law of New Hampshire by the usurpation of the chief justice there, who was a very able man. When these trials came up under the fugitive slave law this doctrine was eagerly grasped upon by the judges of the United States court, and they virtually nullified the law, so that a trial by jury in criminal cases in the circuit court of the United States in the State of New York is not worth anything at all; it is nullified; and no man who will not consent to promise before he goes on a jury to render a verdict in criminal cases in matters of law according to the direction and dictation of the judge can sit on a jury. I suppose it is for that, in addition to the manner in which Judge Hall got on the bench, that he is to be paid this extra compensation. Sir, I am opposed to it, but I will not talk against time and kill it in that way. I will let a fair vote be taken upon it. I am opposed to raising these salaries, but if they are to be raised I want to begin with some men who have administered the law as they find it and who are not advocates for breaking down jury trials.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I will say a word or two, and not talk against time either. The Committee on the Judiciary agreed to report this bill, which modifies the times and places of holding the courts in the northern district of the State of New York, according to the desire of the people interested in those courts. That would seem to be a great measure of public convenience that is asked for and to which nobody has any objection; but we have here a most persistent effort to change and enlarge the salary of a judge. The amount involved is $750. That matter must arrest the attention of Congress and must stop its progress in the last hours of the session, for the purpose of giving this Judge Hall $750 at this time, and everything else must give way to that. We cannot go into executive session to confirm the nominations which are pending on the table, and all of which will be lost, simply because Judge Hall's salary must be increased $750, and that over and above the salary of the judge in almost every district in the northern portion of the United States. Now, sir, if this motion to go into executive session shall not be carried, I want to say something upon this subject, as I am a member of the Judiciary Committee and I think I understand something about it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Will the Senator from New Jersey give way for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. TEN EYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I make that motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw that motion for a moment until I can move to postpone prior orders with a view of taking up the bill from the House of Representatives in relation to the Congressional Globe. It is very evident that we must pass this bill now, or else the Globe stops; and I hope it is not the pleasure of the Senate that that great work, which has reflected so much credit upon the country, shall be allowed to fall for the want of proper support. My motion is, if the Senator will allow me, to suspend all prior orders to take up that bill. It is a bill of the House No. 421.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I cannot consent. The Senator from New York refuses to give way, and it will lead to discussion. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is not withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope this will not be done. Although I am strongly tempted to reply to some remarks that have been made by the Senator from New Hampshire and something that was said by the Senator from New Jersey, I will not break my promise. I only ask for a vote. I ask the Senate whether they will allow two or three gentlemen to defeat this measure after the emphatic vote we had on Saturday night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the Senator from New Jersey says he is going to discuss it.

Mr. HARRIS. He will not, I am persuaded, speak long. It is not the custom of the Senator from New Jersey to endeavor to defeat a measure by indirection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion for an executive session.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the vote will be taken upon this bill before we go into executive session. I shall not speak upon it. I think it is due to the Senator from New York to have a vote at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I will not interpose to prevent a vote on that.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a short statement of a personal nature before going into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island desires unanimous consent to make a personal explanation. The Chair hears no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a brief personal explanation. In a speech made in the House of Representatives, some weeks since, General Frank Blair, then claiming to be a member from Missouri, deliberately asserted that I had received some special privileges from Secretary Chase, by which I had made or would make some two million dollars, and he referred to Mr. Aspinwall as witness. Postmaster General Blair used the Post Office Department to circulate the speech, and so made himself a party in its vilification of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in its impeachment of my personal integrity.

I have heretofore treated this malignant charge with silent contempt, nor should I now notice it or its author, or the brother of its author, had not new currency been given to the slander. Lies reiterated, if uncontradicted, come at length to be received as truth. I have determined therefore to submit to the humiliation of noticing this. Not that I imagine myself the real object of attack. The brothers Blair and their tribe of falsifiers meant it to strike the Secretary of the Treasury. They had some political end to compass and were not scrupulous in choice of means. They did not care a fig how much the finances of the country might suffer; Army and Navy might go unprovided and unpaid; no matter what public evil might come; what they wanted was to reach him with their poisonous arrows; if through me, so much the better.

Some here may remember how, at the beginning of this war, I responded to the summons of the President. He was not of my party, but he was President of the United States, and the Union was in peril. I called Rhode Island to arms, and, great in spirit though small in size, she waited for no second call. Her brave sons were among the first to reach the beleaguered capital. I went with them into battle, and was not niggard either of labor or hazard. But I will not parade my acts. It is enough to say that I neither sought nor received the slightest return from President or Secretary. Then and ever since I have tried to render some service to my country. The consciousness of the endeavor is reward enough.

Since the beginning of the war the business in which I was then engaged has been almost wholly in other hands than my own. It is largely a manufacturing interest. Its managers have bought raw material and sold goods where and as they could. So far as I know they have had no favors from any Secretary or any officer of the Government. They have taken the chances of market with all others, and have had no favors or advantages which all others had not had. Neither for them nor for myself, nor for anybody else, have I asked or received any special privileges to buy cotton or anything else. Nor have I made since this war began, from any buying and trading in cotton, permitted or unpermitted, licensed or unlicensed, the millionth part of two millions of dollars, nor the millionth part of that millionth. If the Blairs know anything about the Treasury Department, they know that no permits or licenses to trade were granted by the late Secretary of the Treasury. He made regulations as the law requires, under which permits were granted, but he granted none nor allowed any to be granted, except under the regulations, and that without favor or partiality. Have the slanderers or their followers sought unauthorized favors and been disappointed?

Perhaps I ought to say that there was one transaction in cotton in which I took some interest. When Du Pont captured Forts Walker and Beauregard, and Sherman took possession of the sea islands of South Carolina, considerable quantities of cotton were found on the abandoned plantations. This was in the winter of 1861-62. Secretary Chase, with the approval and concurrence of the War Department, undertook the duty of collecting this cotton and consulted me about the selection of an agent. I recommended one, who was employed and proved faithful. A large quantity of cotton was collected and forwarded to New York and sold by Collector Barney at public auction; the proceeds, some three quarters of a million I believe, were deposited with Assistant Treasurer Cisco. If Mr. Aspinwall knows anything about any cotton business in which I took part it must be this, and in this I had not the pecuniary interest of a mill. I feel humiliated in noticing such miserable calumnies, but perhaps it is a duty; I think so, or I would not say a word. Henceforth these convicted slanderers may rail and falsify unnoticed by me.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COWAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to state that unless we can get through our executive business we shall be called back here in executive session, which I should consider a great misfortune to the country.

Mr. HARRIS. Somebody in Kansas wants an office, I suppose.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from New York, Kansas has not a single applicant for office on the docket.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Foot, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Ramsey, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wilkey, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Sherman, and Wright—16.

So the motion was not agreed to.

COURTS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill No. 32 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the question being on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Hale.]

Mr. TEN EYCK. There is propriety, I think, in calling the attention of the Senate to the situation of this question. It is not the simple question whether Judge Hall, the district judge of the western or northern district of New York, is to have an increase of salary to the amount of $750; but it is a question that at this time affects every judicial district in the Union, and in more ways than one will reflect upon the action of Congress. There is scarcely a district, perhaps not one, where with the present value of the currency the judge can live upon his salary; and that fact has been made apparent, I think, to the entire satisfaction of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary; but the committee thought this condition of things would not be permanent, and that under the pressure and stringency of the public necessities we had better let the whole matter go over until the next session.

Not only do the judges of the district courts want an increase of salary, but there is scarcely a man in the public service, either civil or military, in any branch or department of the Government, who is not asking for an increase of his salary; and many of them with the greatest propriety, because on the salaries they now have, in the existing state of things with reference to the price of gold, &c., they cannot live and pay house rent and maintain their families in the respectable way in which they have been in the habit of doing heretofore. If this state of things continues for any long period of time, there will have to be relief given, or these valuable public servants who have become familiarized with their duties by long experience will have to abandon their posts and seek some other positions. I am in hopes that a change will come over the spirit of this great public dream, that the war will be put an end to before a great while, that the currency will readjust itself, and then salaries will assume their ancient level, and those gentlemen who are now driven almost to desperation will be enabled to live on their salaries.

Now, sir, where is the propriety of increasing the salary of this respectable judge of the northern district of the State of New York, and turning a deaf ear to the petitions and appeals made on behalf of other judges, not by the incumbents themselves, but by their friends who know their condition, and refusing all action in their behalf? The salary of Judge Hall now ranges considerably above the salaries of the judges in the northern States, with a few exceptions of the judges whose districts include the large cities. The district judge of Maine gets only $2,000; the district judge of New Hampshire $2,000. So of Massachusetts, having Boston within its limits. The district judge of Connecticut, who holds court in New York, gets only $2,000. So in Vermont; so in Rhode Island. This Judge Hall in the northern district of New York gets $2,750, and the district judge of the southern district of New York gets $3,750. In Pennsylvania, the judge of the eastern district, including the city of Philadelphia, where the court is in session almost the whole year round, Judge Cadwalader, receives but $3,000; and yet you propose to give Judge Hall $500 more than he receives. In the western district of Pennsylvania, Judge McCandless gets $2,500, a venerable man who has grown gray in the faithful discharge of his duty; whose friends made an appeal before the Judiciary Committee, stating that he and his family of interesting daughters would absolutely have to sell the roof over their heads unless his salary was increased within a period of some few months to come. We propose to give this other gentleman $3,500. So with a number of other cases. In New Jersey, my own State, the judge gets $2,000, and since the passage of the enrollment law and other measures that have been passed by Congress during this rebellion, the judge is a very large portion of his time engaged in the duties of his court. His friends desire for him an increase of his salary. I have resisted that on the ground of the general principle involved, that we cannot raise the salary of one judge without raising the salary of the others. In Connecticut there would be eminent propriety in increasing the salary of that judge, but the Senator from that State, with me, acting as he thought for the public good, resisted the increase of the salary of any judge at the present time, hoping that a change might take place, and that perhaps by the next session of Congress we should be enabled either to see that they could live or then take up the whole matter and do justice to them all.

That is the ground of the refusal, no other; no impeachment of the character of this judge or the meritorious nature of his services or the extent of them. But, sir, I should feel that it was a reflection on myself if I did not say this much after having acted upon the Judiciary Committee, and after having turned a deaf ear, until it pained me, to the petitions and almost cries of the friends of these other judges, who said that they were in a condition of absolute destitution, and would have to sell their roofs over their heads unless within some few months relief was granted by Congress, or abandon their positions, and in their old age go back to the bar if they are fit to go there, or undertake to discharge some other duty.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Cowan] says I shall soon get eloquent; and rather than such a calamity as that should befall the Senate I will stop. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House fixing a day for closing the present session of Congress.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the resolution of the Senate to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules of the two Houses for the residue of the session.

REVENUE COMMISSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from New York to allow me to introduce a joint resolution, to which I know there will be no objection, to appoint a commission upon the subject of raising revenue by taxation.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for that purpose.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 78) providing for the appointment of a commission upon the subject of raising revenue by taxation; and it was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to hear the resolution read before I consent to its consideration.

The joint resolution was read. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commission of three persons to inquire and report at the earliest practicable moment as to the best and most efficient mode of raising by taxation such additional revenue as may hereafter be found necessary in order to supply the wants of the Government, with power to take testimony.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that in order to carry out the purpose of the resolution effectively, some one should be empowered to study the systems of taxation in European countries, especially in England and France, the great taxed countries of the world. I think some one probably should be instructed to visit those countries and put himself in connection with the administration of the tax systems there and make a report upon them. I think we should all be gainers by that. I do not know but that that may be done under the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the words are broad enough to cover the necessary examination. In framing the present tax law we found ourselves constantly embarrassed by the diverse statements of different persons. We propose to have testimony taken with deliberation and by commissioners, on which we can act in framing any changes that may hereafter be made.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 343) making an appropriation for testing submarine inventions; and

A bill (No. 346) for the relief of Richard G. Murphy.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (No. 121) granting additional compensation to the employees of the two Houses of Congress; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions;

which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 185) to establish a branch of the Mint of the United States at Dallas City, in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service;

A bill (S. No. 348) for the supervision, repairs, liabilities, and completion of the Washington aqueduct;

A bill (H. R. No. 244) to guaranty to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown a republican form of government;

A bill (H. R. No. 305) to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862;

A bill (H. R. No. 411) to encourage immigration;

A bill (H. R. No. 461) for the relief of John C. McConnell;

A bill (H. R. No. 510) further to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 549) further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 573) making an appropriation to carry into effect an act to prevent smuggling;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) explanatory of a joint resolution relative to pay of staff officers of the Lieutenant General; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) imposing a special income tax.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 349) to provide for the survey and sale of the mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the president of the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad Company, remonstrating against the extension of the Goodyear patent for the manufacture of vulcanized India rubber; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of Charles Wilkes, praying for indemnity for damage to his property, in the city of Washington, by excavations made in the adjacent streets, below the grade of those streets, by persons acting under the authority of the Government, and compensation for earth and gravel taken from his premises and used in the improvement of other streets in said city; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

COURTS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 32) to regulate the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FOSTER. The Senator from Kansas was good enough on Saturday night to withdraw a motion that he made in order that a bill for the relief of a widow whose husband has been lost in the service might be taken up. It is a House bill that has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. It is not more than three or four lines, and can be passed in a moment. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw his motion to allow me to ask the Senate to take up the bill for the relief of Deborah Jones.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Senator objects, of course it is the end of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I must insist on a vote upon the bill before the Senate.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I insist on my motion. My experience is that the best way to get all these bills through is to go into executive session, dispose of our executive business, and then open the doors and pass the bills.

Mr. HARRIS. I am surprised that the Senator from Kansas should be so persistent in this matter. I only ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. WILKINSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a report.

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot consent. I must have a vote on this bill if I can.

Mr. WILKINSON. Perhaps the Senator will not get a vote very soon.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, which is to add to the fourth section of the bill a provision making the salary of the district judge of the United States for the district of Connecticut $3,500.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Foster, Hale, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I feel it my duty to offer another amendment to this bill. When I go home and I am asked what were the peculiar merits that authorized Judge Hall to be picked out of all the judges in the United States and his salary raised, I shall not know what answer to give to the very worthy gentleman who is judge in my State, and who has to go to Boston to hold court and gets very much less salary than Judge Hall. I offer this amendment to be added to the fourth section of the bill:

And in lieu of the salary now paid to the judge of the district court of the United States for the State of New Hampshire, there shall be allowed and paid quarterly to said judge out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $2,500 per annum.

I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I see that the policy is to wear out the session on this bill. I move to dispense with prior orders and to take up House bill No. 421. It is the bill for the relief of the Globe, that its publication may be continued.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not press that now. I do not think this kind of opposition can be carried much further. I do not think there is a disposition to do it. I think the Senator from New Hampshire after he has had a vote on his amendment will allow the vote to be taken on the bill. I shall not persist much longer if I find there is a disposition to take up time in this way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. By the opposition calling the yeas and nays on every district in the United States we may consume the residue of the session; but I will withdraw my motion until I see whether we can soon come to a vote on this.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. HALE, resulted—yeas 6, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Foster, Hale, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Wade, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I consider it my duty as the organ of the committee that reported in favor of striking out one section of the bill to make that motion in the Senate and have a distinct vote on it. I move to strike out the section increasing the salary of the district judge of the northern district of New York. It is exceptional and contrary to the report of the committee, and I move to strike out that section, and on that motion I should like to have a vote of the Senate by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I again renew the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have the vote. It will take no time.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas is very persistent. He must have some object.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I withdraw my motion.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out the fourth section in the following words:

And be it further enacted, That in place and in lieu of the salary now paid to the judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York, there shall be allowed and paid quarterly to said judge, out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $3,500 per year.

Mr. HARRIS. I only desire to say that if this section is stricken out the bill must go back to the House of Representatives.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Saulsbury, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to suspend all prior orders and take up House bill No. 421, to pay in part for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARLILE. With the consent of the Senator from Indiana, as this proposition may lead to some discussion, I ask him just to let it be passed over informally to take up the House resolution which proposes to increase the compensation of the employes whose salaries do not really afford them a support. ["No," "No."]

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is of much more importance. We shall save time by putting this right through. Nobody objects to it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am about to move to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but before doing so I wish to introduce a resolution.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. This is the usual resolution, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire, to wait upon the President.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed on the part of the Senate to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have further communications to make, the two Houses, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we are not ready to adopt that yet. It is not twelve o'clock, and we have not finished the business.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I insist upon a vote on the proposition which I have submitted.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to proceed to the consideration of the bill in relation to the Congressional Globe.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a very important bill. I should like to have it read.

The Secretary read the bill. The first section is a direction to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to purchase from the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in the present and each succeeding Congress, who has not heretofore received the same, one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix.

The second section provides for paying to the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent funds of the two Houses, according to the number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix taken by each, one cent for every five pages exceeding three thousand pages for a long session or fifteen hundred pages for a short session, including the indexes and the laws of the United States for this and each future Congress.

The third section appropriates $98,544 for the purposes named in the act for the present Congress; $30,424 of it to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate, and the remainder by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The fourth section repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this; and contains a proviso that the preceding provisions are made upon the express condition that they may be abrogated by either Congress or the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix at any time after giving two years' notice for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. An amendment of this bill now is its defeat and the defeat of the Globe. It is a subject that is settled, and I hope no amendment will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have an amendment to offer to test the sense of the Senate. This is a very important measure, entering into a contract involving at least $100,000 per annum. I have presented a resolution which was carefully prepared and submitted to the Committee on Printing, directing an inquiry to be made into the propriety of continuing the present publication of the Globe, and also into the cost of the building, materials, &c. I ask that that resolution be read, and I wish to offer it as a substitute for the pending bill. I do not want to delay the Senate; if a majority are determined to pass this bill, I shall not stand in their way; but I should like to have a vote on my resolution as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. HALE. My motion to amend is first in order, I suppose.

THE PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that my proposition be read for information.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we may as well test the sense of the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. It is understood that any amendment defeats the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, if my resolution is read, Senators will see that probably the defeat of the bill would make no great difference. I ask that the resolution be read as part of my remarks.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Printing be directed to ascertain the actual cost of reporting the proceedings of Congress, and of the publication of the reports as they now appear in the Daily and Congressional Globe. Also, what would be the cost of the publication of reports of the congressional debates if published under the direction of the Superintendent of Public Printing. Also, what arrangements, if any, could be made with the heirs of the late John C. Rives for the purchase of the materials and the purchase or rent of the buildings used in the publication of the Congressional Globe. Also, what sum, if any, ought in equity to be allowed to said heirs for the publication of the Globe during the present session and until Congress shall determine whether to extend or change the publication of the Globe. Also, that the Superintendent of Public Printing communicate this information to the Senate at its next session, with any other facts on the reporting and publication of congressional debates that he can obtain.

THE PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out the first section of the bill after the enacting clause.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to strike out the entire bill after the enacting clause and insert the resolution just read as a substitute for it; and on this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to make an inquiry before the yeas and nays are taken. Cannot this investigation be made just as well after as before the passage of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill, if passed, will operate as a contract for two years. I do not think we ought now to make any contract until we have this information. I have an estimate carefully made by an actual practical printer, showing that the work can be done in the Government printing office at the prices now paid, and I believe the official report of the Superintendent of Public Printing will show that this work can be continued at its present cost to the Government; and consequently all that is proposed to be paid for back numbers and future numbers is substantially a gratuity, which we can save by continuing the publication of the Globe ourselves. I am willing to vote for a liberal allowance to the heirs of John C. Rives for the loss they may have incurred during the present session, and this inquiry will bring out and ascertain that loss. I here say beforehand that if it shall appear after this report is made that the heirs of John C. Rives have lost by continuing the Globe during the present session and shall lose during the next session until the time we act upon the subject finally, I for one, as an individual Senator, will vote to repay that loss. I do not think we ought now at this stage of the session to make a contract so important as this without full information.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I recollect that some years ago a similar inquiry was made to that now proposed by the Senator from Ohio, and we had a response to it. I cannot recollect now, I have not investigated it, what the precise reply was; but at any rate it was not such that Congress thought proper to take any action upon it. The late Mr. Rives was known to us all; he was an unassuming, quiet man, and I think strictly a truthful man, one of the most honest and liberal men, in a quiet, unobtrusive way, that I ever knew. I had several conversations with him in his lifetime, and I know that the Globe was the peculiar pride of his life, and he was continuing it as he told me at an actual loss. We all know how expenses have increased since.

I do not want to do anything more than is necessary to be done; but I think the Globe ought to be continued; I do not think we should suspend the publication of it; and certainly we cannot ask any one to continue it as a matter of pride. We cannot ask the heirs of Mr. Rives to do that, and we ought not to have asked him to do it. I am inclined, therefore, to vote for the bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives, and after that I shall be willing to vote for the inquiry proposed by the Senator from Ohio, and if it turns out as he supposes it will, we may abrogate the arrangement.

Mr. POWELL. I desire to say in behalf of the Joint Committee on Printing that we have given this matter of the publication of the Globe the most mature consideration, and both the committee of the House of Representatives and the committee of the Senate came to the conclusion that the plan now proposed in the bill before us is the very best thing that could be done. That is the mature conclusion of the committee. The House of Representatives have passed the bill, and I hope the Senate will pass it. Then, if the Senator from Ohio desires to have his resolution adopted in addition, I shall have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall detain the Senate but a moment, and nothing but a sense of public duty would induce me to say a word. This is substantially a gratuity of $100,000 a year for books in violation of the law of Congress under which we are paid. I am not disposed to vote for it. I am as friendly to Mr. Rives as any man in the Senate. I remember the inquiry that was made before, and the result of that inquiry was to take off the very thing that this bill now proposes to put on, and that is the one fifth of a cent a page for the extra pages.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. This is the first time in my life I ever heard it suggested that a Government could do work of this kind as cheap as individuals. I should like to know how it can be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. In reply to that, I will say that we have actually made the experiment, and was are now doing the public printing in all branches of it at less, even with the present high rates, than we formerly paid. Under the circumstances, I do not think at this period of the session we ought to vote ourselves these looks.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to inquire of any Senator who may have examined this subject, whether if the Senate shall pass this bill agreeing to take the back numbers of the Globe, the cost of the books will not have to be deducted from the salaries of Senators and Representatives under the law of Congress fixing the pay of members of Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill seems to provide for that, and it makes an appropriation for the books. I am told by the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, that the additional cost of the back numbers is $98,000. I said $100,000.

Mr. SUMNER. The statute providing for the compensation of members of Congress expressly enacts that the cost of books furnished to them shall be deducted.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a subsequent statute, and modifies or repeals that statute to that extent.

Mr. HARLAN. But it seems to me it does not conflict with that statute, but it is in strict pursuance of it. That statute provides, if I remember it correctly, that the cost of any books hereafter received by members shall be deducted from their pay. We agree to take books, that is we agree to purchase them and take the cost from our pay as members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. We only agree to make the purchase in the way indicated by that law.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If that is the case, members need not take them unless they want to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall not detain the Senate. I have said on this subject before all that I have to say. The whole amount appropriated is $98,000 for the present Congress, this session and the next. The last section provides that "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be and are hereby repealed." I suppose that was intended to repeal the obligation of members to pay for the books; but I think with the Senator from Iowa that it does not perhaps do so. There is no law against members receiving books, but the law requires that those receiving them shall pay for them, and I do not see that this bill is inconsistent with that law.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Hale, Harlan, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Pomeroy, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wilkinson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Hale, Harlan, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Wiley, and Wright—14.

So the bill was passed.

HOSPITAL MATRONS.

Mr. WILSON. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution which is of great importance in regard to our hospitals.

There being no objection, leave was given to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 79) to increase the compensation of matrons in the hospitals; which was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1864, hospital matrons shall be entitled to and shall receive ten dollars a month and one ration.

Mr. WILSON. I hope by unanimous consent this resolution will be put on its passage and sent to the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I now move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARLILE. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw that motion for a moment to enable me to submit a motion to take up a House resolution presented to us this morning.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. That is a resolution to raise the salaries of employes, which will lead to debate; and while I should favor the proposition, I cannot give way.

Mr. CARLILE. It will not be debated on the part of its advocates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. If it is in order now before the call is made, I will ask for the passage of the resolution I offered a few moments ago.

Mr. HALE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Davis, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Wiley—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Nesmith, Sprague, Wade, and Wright—14.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nearly an hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Kansas, the resolution submitted by him for the appointment of a committee to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that unless he have some further communication to make Congress is ready to adjourn was taken up and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee; and Mr. LANE, of Kansas, and Mr. MORGAN, were appointed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Message of the President.

SENATE & HO. OF REPS.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Another year of health, and of sufficiently abundant harvests, has passed. For these, and especially for the improved condition of our national affairs, our renewed and profoundest gratitude to God is due.

We remain in peace and friendship with foreign Powers.

The efforts of disloyal citizens of the United States to involve us in foreign wars, to aid an inexcusable insurrection, have been unavailing. Her Britannic Majesty's Government, as was justly expected, have exercised their authority to prevent the departure of new hostile expeditions from British ports. The Emperor of France has, by a like proceeding, promptly vindicated the neutrality which he proclaimed at the beginning of the contest. Questions of great intricacy and importance have arisen, out of the blockade and other belligerent operations, between the Government and several of the maritime Powers, but they have been discussed, and, as far as was possible, accommodated in a spirit of frankness, justice, and mutual good will. It is especially gratifying that our prize courts, by the impartiality of their adjudications, have commanded the respect and confidence of maritime Powers.

The supplemental treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the suppression of the African slave trade, made on the 17th day of February last, has been duly ratified, and carried into execution. It is believed that, so far as American ports and American citizens are concerned, that inhuman and odious traffic has been brought to an end.

I shall submit, for the consideration of the Senate, a convention for the adjustment of possessory claims in Washington Territory, arising out of the treaty of the 15th June, 1846, between the United States and Great Britain, and which have been the source of some disquiet among the citizens of that now rapidly improving part of the country.

A novel and important question, involving the extent of the maritime jurisdiction of Spain in the waters which surround the island of Cuba, has been debated without reaching an agreement, and it is proposed, in an amicable spirit, to refer it to the arbitrament of a friendly Power. A convention for that purpose will be submitted to the Senate.

I have thought it proper, subject to the approval of the Senate, to concur with the interested commercial Powers in an arrangement for the liquidation of the Scheldt dues upon the principles which have been heretofore adopted in regard to the imposts upon navigation in the waters of Denmark.

The long-pending controversy between this Government and that of Chili, touching the seizure at Sitana, in Peru, by Chilian officers, of a large amount in treasure belonging to citizens of the United States, has been brought to a close by the award of his Majesty the King of the Belgians, to whose arbitration the question was referred by the parties. The subject was thoroughly and patiently examined by that justly respected magistrate, and, although the sum awarded to the claimants may not have been as large as they expected, there is no reason to distrust the wisdom of his Majesty's decision. That decision was promptly complied with by Chili, when intelligence in regard to it reached that country.

The joint commission, under the act of the last session, for carrying into effect the convention with Peru on the subject of claims, has been organized at Lima, and is engaged in the business intrusted to it.

Difficulties concerning inter-oceanic transit through Nicaragua are in course of amicable adjustment.

In conformity with principles set forth in my last annual message, I have received a representative from the United States of Colombia, and have accredited a minister to that republic.

Incidents occurring in the progress of our civil war have forced upon my attention the uncertain state of international questions touching the rights of foreigners in this country and of United States citizens abroad. In regard to some Governments these rights are at least partially defined by treaties. In no instance, however, is it expressly stipulated that, in the event of civil war, a foreigner residing in this country, within the lines of the insurgents, is to be exempted from the rule which classes him as a belligerent, in whose behalf the Government of his country cannot expect any privileges or immunities distinct from that character. I regret to say, however, that such claims have been put forward, and, in some instances, in behalf of foreigners who have lived in the United States the greater part of their lives.

There is reason to believe that many persons born in foreign countries, who have declared their intention to become citizens, or who have been fully naturalized, have evaded the military duty required of them by denying the fact, and thereby throwing upon the Government the burden of proof. It has been found difficult or impracticable to obtain this proof, from the want of guides to the proper sources of information. These might be supplied by requiring clerks of courts, where declarations of intention may be made or naturalizations effected, to send, periodically, lists of the names of the persons naturalized, or declaring their intention to become citizens, to the Secretary of the Interior, in whose Department those names might be arranged and printed for general information.

There is also reason to believe that foreigners frequently become citizens of the United States for the sole purpose of evading duties imposed by the laws of their native countries, to which, on becoming naturalized here, they at once repair, and, though never returning to the United States, they still claim the interposition of this Government as citizens. Many alterations and great prejudices have heretofore arisen out of this abuse. It is, therefore, submitted to your serious consideration. It might be advisable to fix a limit, beyond which no citizen of the United States residing abroad may claim the interposition of his Government.

The right of suffrage has often been assumed and exercised by aliens, under pretenses of naturalization, which they have disavowed when drafted into the military service. I submit the expediency of such an amendment of the law as will make the fact of voting an estoppel against any plea of exemption from military service, or other civil obligation, on the ground of alienage.

In common with other western Powers, our relations with Japan have been brought into serious jeopardy, through the perverse opposition of the hereditary aristocracy of the empire to the enlightened and liberal policy of the Tycoon, designed to bring the country into the society of nations. It is hoped, although not with entire confidence, that these difficulties may be peacefully overcome. I ask your attention to the claim of the minister residing there for the damages he sustained in the destruction by fire of the residence of the legation at Yedo.

Satisfactory arrangements have been made with the Emperor of Russia, which, it is believed, will result in effecting a continuous line of telegraph through that empire from our Pacific coast.

I recommend to your favorable consideration the subject of an international telegraph across the Atlantic ocean; and also of a telegraph between this capital and the national forts along the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico. Such communications, established with any reasonable outlay, would be economical as well as effective aids to the diplomatic, military, and naval service.

The consular system of the United States, under the enactments of the last Congress, begins to be self-sustaining; and there is reason to hope that it may become entirely so, with the increase of trade which will ensue whenever peace is restored. Our ministers abroad have been faithful in defending American rights. In protecting commercial interests, our consuls have necessarily had to encounter increased labors and responsibilities, growing out of the war. These they have, for the most part, met and discharged with zeal and efficiency. This acknowledgment justly includes those consuls who, residing in Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, Japan, China, and other Oriental countries, are charged with complex functions and extraordinary powers.

The condition of the several organized Territories is generally satisfactory, although Indian disturbances in New Mexico have not been entirely suppressed. The mineral resources of Colorado, Nevada, Idaho, New Mexico, and Arizona are proving far richer than has been heretofore understood. I lay before you a communication on this subject from the Governor of New Mexico. I again submit to your consideration the expediency of establishing a system for the encouragement of immigration. Although this source of national wealth and strength is again flowing with greater freedom than for several years before the insurrection occurred, there is still a great deficiency of laborers in every field of industry, especially in agriculture and in our mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals. While the demand for labor is thus increased here, tens of thousands of persons, destitute of remunerative occupation, are thronging our foreign consulates, and offering to emigrate to the United States if essential, but very cheap, assistance can be afforded them. It is easy to see that, under the sharp discipline of civil war, the nation is beginning a new life. This noble effort demands the aid, and ought to receive the attention and support, of the Government.

Message of the President.

SENATE & HO. OF REPS.

Injuries, unforeseen by the Government and unintended, may, in some cases, have been inflicted on the subjects or citizens of foreign countries, both at sea and on land, by persons in the service of the United States. As this Government expects redress from other Powers when similar injuries are inflicted by persons in their service upon citizens of the United States, we must be prepared to do justice to foreigners. If the existing judicial tribunals are inadequate to this purpose, a special court may be authorized, with power to hear and decide such claims of the character referred to as may have arisen under treaties and the public law. Conventions for adjusting the claims by joint commission have been proposed to some Governments, but no definite answer to the proposition has yet been received from any.

In the course of the session, I shall probably have occasion to request you to provide indemnification to claimants where decrees of restitution have been rendered and damages awarded by admiralty courts; and in other cases, where this Government may be acknowledged to be liable in principle, and where the amount of that liability has been ascertained by an informal arbitration.

The proper officers of the Treasury have deemed themselves required, by the law of the United States upon the subject, to demand a tax upon the incomes of foreign consuls in this country. While such a demand may not, in strictness, be in derogation of public law, or perhaps of any existing treaty between the United States and a foreign country, the expediency of so far modifying the act as to exempt from tax the income of such consuls as are not citizens of the United States, derived from the emoluments of their office, or from property not situated in the United States, is submitted to your serious consideration. I make this suggestion upon the ground that a comity which ought to be reciprocated exempts our consuls, in all other countries, from taxation to the extent thus indicated. The United States, I think, ought not to be exceptionally illiberal to international trade and commerce.

The operations of the Treasury during the last year have been successfully conducted. The enactment by Congress of a national banking law has proved a valuable support of the public credit; and the general legislation in relation to loans has fully answered the expectations of its favorers. Some amendments may be required to perfect existing laws; but no change in their principles or general scope is believed to be needed.

Since these measures have been in operation, all demands on the Treasury, including the pay of the Army and Navy, have been promptly met and fully satisfied. No considerable body of troops, it is believed, were ever more amply provided, and more liberally and punctually paid; and it may be added that by no people were the burdens incident to a great war ever more cheerfully borne.

The receipts during the year from all sources, including loans and the balance in the Treasury at its commencement, were $901,125,674 86, and the aggregate disbursements $895,796,630 65, leaving a balance on the 1st of July, 1863, of $5,329,044 21. Of the receipts there were derived from customs $69,059,642 40; from internal revenue, $37,640,787 95; from direct tax, $1,485,103 61; from lands, $167,617 17; from miscellaneous sources, $3,046,615 35; and from loans, $776,682,361 57; making the aggregate, $901,125,674 86. Of the disbursements there were for the civil service, $23,253,922 08; for pensions and Indians, $4,216,520 79; for interest on public debt, $24,729,846 51; for the War Department, $599,298,600 83; for the Navy Department, $63,211,105 27; for payment of funded and temporary debt, $181,086,635 07; making the aggregate, $895,796,630 65, and leaving the balance of $5,329,044 21. But the payment of funded and temporary debt, having been made from moneys borrowed during the year, must be regarded as merely nominal payments, and the moneys borrowed to make them as merely nominal receipts; and their amount, $181,086,635 07, should therefore be deducted both from receipts and disbursements. This being done, there remains as actual receipts $720,039,039 79; and the actual disbursements, $714,709,995 58, leaving the balance as already stated.

The actual receipts and disbursements for the first quarter, and the estimated receipts and disbursements for the remaining three quarters, of the current fiscal year 1864, will be shown in detail by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I invite your attention. It is sufficient to say here that it is not believed that actual results will exhibit a state of the finances less favorable to the country than the estimates of that officer heretofore submitted; while it is confidently expected that at the close of the year both disbursements and debt will be found very considerably less than has been anticipated.

The report of the Secretary of War is a document of great interest. It consists of—

1. The military operations of the year, detailed in the report of the General-in-Chief.
2. The organization of colored persons into the war service.
3. The exchange of prisoners, fully set forth in the letter of General Hitchcock.
4. The operations under the act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, detailed in the report of the Provost Marshal General.
5. The organization of the invalid corps; and
6. The operation of the several departments of the Quartermaster General, Commissary General, Paymaster General, Chief of Engineers, Chief of Ordnance, and Surgeon General.

It has appeared impossible to make a valuable summary of this report except such as would be too extended for this place, and hence I content myself by asking your careful attention to the report itself.

The duties devolving on the naval branch of the service during the year, and throughout the whole of this unhappy contest, have been discharged with fidelity and eminent success. The extensive blockade has been constantly increasing in efficiency, as the Navy has expanded; yet on so long a line it has so far been impossible to entirely suppress illicit trade. From returns received at the Navy Department it appears that more than one thousand vessels have been captured since the blockade was instituted, and that the value of prizes already sent in for adjudication amounts to over thirteen million dollars.

The naval force of the United States consists at this time of five hundred and eighty-eight vessels, completed and in the course of completion, and of these seventy-five are iron-clad or armored steamers. The events of the war give an increased interest and importance to the Navy which will probably extend beyond the war itself.

The armored vessels in our Navy completed and in service, or which are under contract and approaching completion, are believed to exceed in number those of any other Power. But while these may be relied upon for harbor defense and coast service, others of greater strength and capacity will be necessary for cruising purposes, and to maintain our rightful position on the ocean.

The change that has taken place in naval vessels and naval warfare since the introduction of steam as a motive power for ships-of-war, demands either a corresponding change in some of our existing navy-yards, or the establishment of new ones, for the construction and necessary repair of modern naval vessels. No inconsiderable embarrassment, delay, and public injury have been experienced from the want of such governmental establishments. The necessity of such a navy-yard, so furnished, at some suitable place upon the Atlantic seaboard, has on repeated occasions been brought to the attention of Congress by the Navy Department, and is again presented in the report of the Secretary which accompanies this communication. I think it my duty to invite your special attention to this subject, and also to that of establishing a yard and depot for naval purposes upon one of the western rivers. A naval force has been created on those interior waters, and under many disadvantages, within little more than two years, exceeding in numbers the whole naval force of the country at the commencement of the present Administration. Satisfactory and important as have been the performances of the heroic men of the Navy at this interesting period, they are scarcely more wonderful than the success of our mechanics and artisans in the production of war vessels which has created a new form of naval power.

Our country has advantages superior to any other nation in our resources of iron and timber, with inexhaustible quantities of fuel in the immediate vicinity of both, and all available and in close proximity to navigable waters. Without the advantage of public works, the resources of the nation have been developed and its power displayed in the construction of a navy of such magnitude, which has, at the very period of its creation, rendered signal service to the Union.

The increase of the number of seamen in the public service, from seven thousand five hundred men in the spring of 1861, to about thirty-four thousand at the present time, has been accomplished without special legislation or extraordinary bounties to promote that increase. It has been found, however, that the operation of the draft, with the high bounties paid for Army recruits, is beginning to affect injuriously the naval service, and will, if not corrected, be likely to impair its efficiency, by detaching seamen from their proper vocation and inducing them to enter the Army. I therefore respectfully suggest that Congress might aid both the Army and naval services by a definite provision on this subject, which would at the same time be equitable to the communities more especially interested.

I commend to your consideration the suggestions of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the policy of fostering and training seamen, and also the education of officers and engineers for the naval service. The Naval Academy is rendering signal service in preparing midshipmen for the highly responsible duties which in after-life they will be required to perform. In order that the country should not be deprived of the proper quota of educated officers for which legal provision has been made at the Naval School, the vacancies caused by the neglect or omission to make nominations from the States in insurrection have been filled by the Secretary of the Navy. The School is now more full and complete than at any former period, and in every respect entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress.

During the past fiscal year the financial condition of the Post Office Department has been one of increasing prosperity, and I am gratified in being able to state that the actual postal revenue has nearly equaled the entire expenditures; the latter amounting to $11,314,206 84, and the former to $11,163,789 59, leaving a deficiency of but $150,417 25. In 1860, the year immediately preceding the rebellion, the deficiency amounted to $5,656,705 49, the postal receipts of that year being $2,645,722 19 less than those of 1863. The decrease since 1860 in the annual amount of transportation has been only about 25 per cent., but the annual expenditure on account of the same has been reduced 35 per cent. It is manifest, therefore, that the Post Office Department may become self-sustaining in a few years, even with the restoration of the whole service.

The international conference of postal delegates from the principal countries of Europe and America, which was called at the suggestion of the Postmaster General, met at Paris on the 11th of May last, and concluded its deliberations on the 8th of June. The principles established by the conference as best adapted to facilitate postal intercourse between nations, and as the basis of future postal conventions, inaugurate a general system of uniform international charges, at reduced rates of postage, and cannot fail to produce beneficial results.

I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is herewith laid before you, for useful and varied information in relation to the public lands, Indian affairs, patents, pensions, and other matters of public concern pertaining to his Department.

The quantity of land disposed of during the last and the first quarter of the present fiscal years was 3,841,549 acres, of which 161,911 acres were sold for cash, 1,456,514 acres were taken up under the homestead law, and the residue disposed of under laws granting lands for military bounties, for railroad and other purposes. It also appears that the sale of the public lands is largely on the increase.

It has long been a cherished opinion of some of our wisest statesmen that the people of the United States had a higher and more enduring interest in the early settlement and substantial cultivation of the public lands than in the amount of direct revenue to be derived from the sale of them. This opinion has had a controlling influence in shaping legislation upon the subject of our national domain. I may cite, as evidence of this, the liberal measures adopted in reference to actual settlers; the grant to the States of the overflowed lands within their limits in order to their being reclaimed and rendered fit for cultivation; the grants to railway companies of alternate sections of land upon the contemplated lines of their roads, which, when completed, will so largely multiply the facilities for reaching our distant possessions. This policy has received its most signal and beneficent illustration in the recent enactment granting homesteads to actual settlers. Since the 1st day of January last, the before-mentioned quantity of 1,456,514 acres of land have been taken up under its provisions. This fact and the amount of sales furnish gratifying evidence of increasing settlement upon the public lands, notwithstanding the great struggle in which the energies of the nation have been engaged, and which has required so large a withdrawal of our citizens from their accustomed pursuits. I cordially concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, suggesting a modification of the act in favor of those engaged in the military and naval service of the United States. I doubt not that Congress will cheerfully adopt such measures as will, without essentially changing the general features of the system, secure, to the greatest practicable extent, its benefits to those who have left their homes in the defense of the country in this arduous crisis.

I invite your attention to the views of the Secretary as to the propriety of raising, by appropriate legislation, a revenue from the mineral lands of the United States.

The measures provided at your last session for the removal of certain Indian tribes have been carried into effect. Sundry treaties have been negotiated which will, in due time, be submitted for the constitutional action of the Senate. They contain stipulations for extinguishing the possessory rights of the Indians to large and valuable tracts of land. It is hoped that the effect of these treaties will result in the establishment of permanent friendly relations with such of these tribes as have been brought into frequent and bloody collision with our outlying settlements and emigrants. Sound policy and our imperative duty to these wards of the Government demand our anxious and constant attention to their material well-being, to their progress in the arts of civilization, and, above all, to that moral training which, under the blessing of divine Providence, will confer upon them the elevated and sanctifying influences, the hopes and consolations of the Christian faith.

I suggested in my last annual message the propriety of remodeling our Indian system. Subsequent events have satisfied me of its necessity. The details set forth in the report of the Secretary evince the urgent need for immediate legislative action.

I commend the benevolent institutions established or patronized by the Government in this District to your generous and fostering care.

The attention of Congress, during the last session, was engaged to some extent with a proposition for enlarging the water communication between the Mississippi river and the northeastern seaboard, which proposition, however, failed for the time. Since then, upon a call of the greatest respectability, a convention has been held at Chicago upon the same subject, a summary of whose views is contained in a memorial addressed to the President and Congress, and which I now have the honor to lay before you. That this interest is one which, ere long, will force its own way, I do not entertain a doubt, while it is submitted entirely to your wisdom as to what can be done now.

Augmented interest is given to this subject by the actual commencement of the work upon the Pacific railroad, under auspices so favorable to rapid progress and completion. The enlarged navigation becomes a palpable need to the great road.

I transmit the second annual report of the Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture, asking your attention to the developments in that vital interest of the nation.

When Congress assembled a year ago the war had already lasted nearly twenty months; and there had been many conflicts on both land and sea, with varying results. The rebellion had been pressed back into reduced limits; yet the tone of public feeling and opinion, at home and abroad, was not satisfactory. With other signs, the popular elections, then just past, indicated uneasiness among ourselves, while, amid much that was cold and menacing, the kindest words coming from Europe were uttered in accents of pity that we were too blind to surrender a hopeless cause. Our commerce was suffering greatly by a few armed vessels built upon and furnished from foreign shores; and we were threatened with such additions from the same quarter as would sweep our trade from the sea and raise our blockade. We had failed to elicit from European Governments anything hopeful upon this subject. The preliminary emancipation proclamation, issued in September, was running its assigned period to the beginning of the new year. A month later the final proclamation came, including the announcement that colored men of suitable condition would be received into the war service. The policy of emancipation, and of employing black soldiers, gave to the future a new aspect, about which hope and fear and doubt contended in uncertain conflict. According to our political system, as a matter of civil administration, the General Government had no lawful power to effect emancipation in any State; and for a long time it had been hoped that the rebellion could be suppressed without resorting to it as a military measure. It was all the while deemed possible that the necessity for it might come, and that, if it should, the crisis of the contest would then be presented. It came, and, as was anticipated, it was followed by dark and doubtful days. Eleven months having now passed, we are permitted to take another review. The rebel borders are pressed still further back, and by the complete opening of the Mississippi the country dominated by the rebellion is divided into distinct parts, with no practical communication between them. Tennessee and Arkansas have been substantially cleared of insurgent control, and influential citizens in each, owners of slaves and advocates of slavery at the beginning of the rebellion, now declare openly for emancipation in their respective States. Of those States not included in the emancipation proclamation, Maryland and Missouri, neither of which three years ago would tolerate any restraint upon the extension of slavery into new Territories, only dispute now as to the best mode of removing it within their own limits.

Of those who were slaves at the beginning of the rebellion, full one hundred thousand are now in the United States military service, about one half of which number actually bear arms in the ranks; thus giving the double advantage of taking so much labor from the insurgent cause, and supplying the places which otherwise must be filled with so many white men. So far as tested, it is difficult to say they are not as good soldiers as any. No servile insurrection, or tendency to violence or cruelty, has marked the measures of emancipation and arming the blacks. These measures have been much discussed in foreign countries, and contemporary with such discussion the tone of public sentiment there is much improved. At home the same measures have been fully discussed, supported, criticised, and denounced, and the annual elections following are highly encouraging to those whose official duty it is to bear the country through this great trial. Thus we have the new reckoning. The crisis which threatened to divide the friends of the Union is past.

Looking now to the present and future, and with reference to a resumption of the national authority within the States wherein that authority has been suspended, I have thought fit to issue a proclamation, a copy of which is herewith transmitted. On examination of this proclamation it will appear, as is believed, that nothing is attempted beyond what is amply justified by the Constitution. True, the form of an oath is given, but no man is coerced to take it. The man is only promised a pardon in case he voluntarily takes the oath. The Constitution authorizes the Executive to grant or withhold the pardon at his own absolute discretion; and this includes the power to grant on terms, as is fully established by judicial and other authorities.

It is also proffered that if, in any of the States named, a State government shall be, in the mode prescribed, set up, such government shall be recognized and guaranteed by the United States, and that under it the State shall, on the constitutional conditions, be protected against invasion and domestic violence. The constitutional obligation of the United States to guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and to protect the State, in the cases stated, is explicit and full. But why tender the benefits of this provision only to a State government set up in this particular way? This section of the Constitution contemplates a case wherein the element within a State favorable to republican government, in the Union, may be too feeble for an opposite and hostile element external to or even within the State; and such are precisely the cases with which we are now dealing.

An attempt to guaranty and protect a revived State government, constructed in whole, or in preponderating part, from the very element against whose hostility and violence it is to be protected, is simply absurd. There must be a test by which to separate the opposing elements, so as to build only from the sound; and that test is a sufficiently liberal one, which accepts as sound whoever will make a sworn recantation of his former unsoundness.

But if it be proper to require, as a test of admission to the political body, an oath of allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, and to the Union under it, why also to the laws and proclamations in regard to slavery? Those laws and proclamations were enacted and put forth for the purpose of aiding in the suppression of the rebellion. To give them their fullest effect, there had to be a pledge for their maintenance. In my judgment they have aided, and will further aid, the cause for which they were intended. To now abandon them would be not only to relinquish a lever of power, but would also be a cruel and an astounding breach of faith. I may add at this point, that while I remain in my present position I shall not attempt to retract or modify the emancipation proclamation; nor shall I return to slavery any person who is free by the terms of that proclamation, or by any of the acts of Congress. For these and other reasons it is thought best that support of these measures shall be included in the oath; and it is believed the Executive may lawfully claim it in return for pardon and restoration of forfeited rights, which he has clear constitutional power to withhold altogether, or grant upon the terms which he shall deem wisest for the public interest. It should be observed, also, that this part of the oath is subject to the modifying and abrogating power of legislation and supreme judicial decision.

The proposed acquiescence of the national Executive in any reasonable temporary State arrangement for the freed people is made with the view of possibly modifying the confusion and destitution which must, at best, attend all classes by a total revolution of labor throughout whole States. It is hoped that the already deeply afflicted people in those States may be somewhat more ready to give up the cause of their affliction, if, to this extent, this vital matter be left to themselves; while no power of the national Executive to prevent an abuse is abridged by the proposition.

The suggestion in the proclamation as to maintaining the political framework of the States on what is called reconstruction, is made in the hope that it may do good without danger of harm. It will save labor, and avoid great confusion.

But why any proclamation now upon this subject? This question is beset with the conflicting views that the step might be delayed too long or be taken too soon. In some States the elements for resumption seem ready for action, but remain inactive, apparently for want of a rallying point—a plan of action. Why shall A adopt the plan of B, rather than B that of A? And if A and B should agree, how can they know but that the General Government here will reject their plan? By the proclamation a plan is presented which may be accepted by them as a rallying point, and which they are assured in advance will not be rejected here. This may bring them to act sooner than they otherwise would.

The objection to a premature presentation of a plan by the national Executive consists in the danger of commitments on points which could be more safely left to further developments. Care has been taken to so shape the document as to avoid embarrassments from this source. Saying that, on certain terms, certain classes will be pardoned, with rights restored, it is not said that other classes or other terms will never be included. Saying that reconstruction will be accepted, if presented in a specified way, it is not said it will never be accepted in any other way.

The movements, by State action, for emancipation in several of the States, not included in the emancipation proclamation, are matters of profound gratulation. And while I do not repeat in detail what I have heretofore so earnestly urged upon this subject, my general views and feelings remain unchanged; and I trust that Congress will omit no fair opportunity of aiding these important steps to a great consummation.

In the midst of other cares, however important, we must not lose sight of the fact that the war power is still our main reliance. To that power alone can we look, yet for a time, to give confidence to the people in the contested regions that the insurgent power will not again overrun them. Until that confidence shall be established, little can be done anywhere for what is called reconstruction. Hence our chief care must still be directed to the Army and Navy, who have thus far borne their harder part so nobly and well. And it may be esteemed fortunate that in giving the greatest efficiency to these indispensable arms, we do also honorably recognize the gallant men, from commander to sentinel, who compose them, and to whom, more than to others, the world must stand indebted for the home of freedom disenthralled, regenerated, enlarged, and perpetuated.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

DECEMBER 8, 1863.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury.TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
December 10, 1863.

In submitting to the consideration of Congress the report on the state of the finances, required of him by law at the commencement of each session, the Secretary of the Treasury has much satisfaction in being able to say, in general, that the operations of the Department intrusted to his charge have been attended, during the last fiscal year, by a greater measure of success than he ventured to anticipate at its beginning.

At the beginning of that year all demands on the Treasury had indeed been discharged, and there remained a balance to the credit of the Treasurer of $13,043,546 81. But the large disbursements, constantly demanded by military and naval operations, reduced, by comparison, this seemingly considerable balance to almost inconsiderable proportions, and the practical operations of the restrictive provisions of the acts authorizing the negotiation of the bonds known as five-twenties, the most important loan acts not already fully availed of, made new negotiations for adequate amounts and on admissible terms quite impracticable. The reverses which befell our arms in June, July, and August, increased the difficulties of the situation, so that, though the Secretary was enabled under existing legislation to provide largely for the increasing disbursements, there remained necessarily unpaid, on the first day of the last session of Congress, requisitions on the Treasury, chiefly from the War and Navy Departments, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $46,394,875 80.

To provide for these requisitions and for current demands, Congress, on the 17th of January, 1863, authorized an additional issue of United States notes to the amount of $100,000,000; but did not reach any definite conclusions in regard to loans in time to embody them in an act before the day on which the session closed.

On that day, March 3, 1863, the act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government received the approval of the President, and became law. In addition to various provisions for loans, it contained clauses repealing the restrictions affecting the negotiation of the five-twenties, and thus disengaged that important loan from the embarrassments which had previously rendered it almost unavailable.

A week earlier, on the 25th of February, an act, even more important to the credit of the Government—the act to provide a national currency through a national banking system—had received the sanction of Congress and the President. The salutary effects of these two great acts were soon conspicuous.

Notwithstanding the aid afforded by the additional issue of the United States notes, under the joint resolution of January, the Secretary had found it impossible to prevent a gradual increase, during the session of Congress, in the amount of unpaid requisitions. Those which were unsatisfied at the beginning of the session were indeed discharged, and large sums were applied to new demands for current disbursements. But the aggregate of disbursements remaining necessarily unpaid, increased steadily, notwithstanding all efforts to prevent it, until it reached, at the close of the session, the sum of $72,171,189 41.

The loan act and the national banking act were followed by an immediate revival of public credit. Success quite beyond anticipation crowned the efforts of the Secretary to distribute the five-twenty loan in all parts of the country, as well as every other measure adopted by him for replenishing the Treasury. The result was that within two months after the adjournment of Congress the whole mass of suspended requisitions had been satisfied, all current demands promptly met, and full provision made for the pay of the Army and Navy. During the remainder of the fiscal year no embarrassments attended the administration of the finances except those which are inseparable from vast expenditures. Notwithstanding these expenditures, it is gratifying to be able to state that during the last year the total of disbursements did not greatly exceed, while the increase of the public debt did not equal, the estimates submitted to Congress by the Secretary at the last session. Thus, while it was then estimated that the public debt on the 30th of June, 1863, would reach the sum of $1,122,297,403 24, its actual amount on that day was $1,098,793,181 37; and while the disbursements for the year were estimated at $693,346,321 48, the actual total was $714,709,995 58.

The aggregate receipts from all sources, including the balance from the preceding year, as shown by the books of the Treasury, were, during the last fiscal year, $901,125,674 86, and the aggregate disbursements $895,796,630 65; leaving a balance on the 30th of June, 1863, of $5,329,044 21. But sums borrowed during the year, and applied during the same time in payment of debts, affect only nominally the total of receipts and of disbursements. The sums thus borrowed and applied during the last fiscal year amounted to $181,086,635 07. This aggregate, therefore, should be deducted from both sides of the statement, making the true amount of receipts, including balance from last year, $720,039,039 79, and the true amount of disbursements $714,709,995 58. The balance, of course, remains the same.

It is gratifying, also, to be able to state, that while debts did not reach the amount anticipated, the receipts from all sources of income, except internal revenue, exceeded the estimates. Thus the receipts from customs, estimated at $68,041,736 59, were actually $69,059,642 40; from lands, estimated at $88,724 16, were $167,617 17; and from miscellaneous sources, estimated at $2,244,316 32, were $3,046,615 35. Direct tax receipts were estimated at $11,620,717 99, and this amount, or nearly this amount, has been received in the form of payments for military supplies and services by the States, for which they are entitled to credit beyond their several proportions of the tax. In consequence, however, of incomplete settlements, only the sum of $1,485,103 61 appears on the books as received into the Treasury.

While the receipts from other ordinary sources of revenue thus closely correspond with the estimates, or largely exceed them, the receipts from internal revenue have alone disappointed expectation. The estimate, indeed, was made of the operation of a law recently enacted, and necessarily imperfectly executed; but such care had been taken to obtain correct premises that it was hardly thought possible that the conclusion deduced from them could be wide of the truth. Under the instructions of the Commissioner, at the instance of the Secretary, a very competent gentleman was for some time employed in ascertaining, with the aid of practical men, conversant with business, the probable amount of revenue from each object of taxation. The result of his inquiries was the estimate which, sanctioned by the Commissioner, was believed to be correct by the Secretary, and therefore submitted to Congress.

Experience has demonstrated its error. The estimate was $85,456,303 73, while the actual receipts were $37,640,787 95. A part of the deficiency may be attributed to the imperfect execution of the law, and a part to the changes made in it by Congress after the estimate was made; but it is not probable, had neither cause operated to reduce receipts, that the revenue from this source would have exceeded half the estimated amount. It is clear that the law, unless materially amended, will not produce the revenue expected from it.

The whole of the receipts and disbursements for the last fiscal year may be more easily understood from a somewhat more formal statement.

The receipts, estimated and actual, then, for the last fiscal year, ending on the 30th of June, 1863, were, including balance from the preceding year, as follows:

	Estimated.	Actual.
From customs.....	$68,041,736 59	$69,059,642 40
From lands.....	88,724 16	167,617 17
From miscellaneous...	2,244,316 32	3,046,615 35
From direct tax.....	11,620,717 99	1,485,103 61
From internal revenue,	85,456,303 73	37,640,787 95
Balance from last year,	13,043,546 81	13,043,546 81
Total receipts from all ordinary sources...	$180,495,345 60	$124,443,313 29

The additional sums, actual or estimated, necessary to meet disbursements, were, of course, derived, or estimated as derivable, from loans.

The disbursements, estimated and actual, were as follows:

	Estimated.	Actual.
The civil service.....	$33,811,543 23	$23,253,922 08
Pensions and Indians...	5,982,906 43	4,216,520 79
War Department.....	747,359,838 98	599,298,600 83
Navy Department.....	82,177,510 77	63,211,105 27
Interest on debt.....	25,014,532 07	24,729,846 61

Total gross estimate..	$93,346,321 48	$714,709,995 58
But this amount, it was supposed, would remain undrawn at end of year, and was therefore deducted from the gross estimate.....	200,000,000 00

Making actual estimate, $693,346,321 48

In his last report the Secretary stated that if the appropriations should equal the estimates, the balance unexpended at the end of the year would probably reach $200,000,000, and that this sum should therefore be deducted from the departmental estimates, to make the aggregate correspond with probable conditions. The above statement shows that the aggregate of estimates, thus reduced, was $693,346,321 48, while the expenditures were $714,709,995 58, exceeding the reduced estimates $21,363,674 10.

From the actual expenditures, $714,709,995 58, there must be deducted the actual receipts, $124,443,313 29, in order to show the amount derived from loans, $590,266,682 29, which sum, added to the amount of the debt on the 1st of July, 1862, $508,526,499 08, (heretofore erroneously stated at $514,211,371 92,) gives as the true amount of debt on the 1st of July, 1863, $1,098,793,181 37.

The estimates for the current fiscal year 1864 next claim attention. These are founded on actual receipts and disbursements for the first quarter, which ended September 30, 1863, and on opinions formed upon probable events and conditions as to the other quarters.

The following statement exhibits what is actually known, and what, after careful reflection, the Secretary thinks himself warranted in regarding as probable:

For the first quarter, ending September 30, 1863, the actual receipts were:

From customs.....	$22,562,018 42
From internal revenue.....	17,599,713 59
From lands.....	136,182 09
From miscellaneous sources.....	641,542 04
Total actual receipts for first quarter.....	40,939,456 14
To which add balance July 1, 1863.....	5,329,044 21

Making total receipts of first quarter, except loans..... 46,268,500 35

For three remaining quarters, ending on the 30th of June, 1864, it is estimated there will be received:

From customs.....	$50,000,000 00
From internal revenue.....	60,000,000 00
From lands.....	300,000 00
From miscellaneous sources, 5,000,000 00
	115,300,000 00

Making a total of receipts from ordinary sources actual and estimated, and including balance, of..... 161,568,500 35
To which add the actual and estimated receipts from loans..... 594,000,000 00

Making a total of actual and estimated receipts from all sources, for 1864..... $755,568,500 35

The expenditures may be stated as follows:

For the first quarter, ending September 30, 1863, the actual disbursements have been:

For the civil service.....	$7,216,939 31
For pensions and Indians.....	1,711,271 95
For War Department.....	144,387,473 97
For Navy Department.....	18,511,618 86
For interest on public debt.....	4,283,638 37

Actual expenditures for first quarter..... 176,110,932 46

For the remaining three quarters the estimates, founded on appropriations and estimated deficiencies, are as follows:

For the civil service.....	$27,050,872 21
For pensions and Indians.....	6,129,042 86
For War Department.....	741,092,037 14
For Navy Department.....	94,467,367 74
For interest on public debt.....	54,581,508 01
	923,621,027 96

Making a total aggregate of actual and estimated expenditures of..... 1,099,731,960 42
But as these estimates include all unexpended balances of appropriations from former years, they are necessarily much too large, and there may be safely deducted from their aggregate, as likely to remain unexpended at the close of the fiscal year, the sum of..... 350,000,000 00

Leaving the total actual and estimated expenditures for 1864..... 749,731,960 42

The total of expenditures being deducted from the total of receipts, there will be an estimated balance on the 30th of June, 1864, of..... 5,836,539 93

From this statement it appears that the total receipts required for the probable disbursements of the year, and including estimated balance at its close, will amount to..... 755,568,500 35

Of which there have been provided and applied during the first quarter..... 176,110,932 46

Leaving to be provided..... 579,457,567 89

Of which it is estimated there will be received from ordinary sources during the three other quarters..... 115,300,000 00

Leaving yet to be provided by loans..... $464,157,567 89

The amount of debt created during the quarter is ascertained by deducting from the total expenditures $176,110,932 46, the aggregate of ordinary receipts and balance from last year, amounting together to $46,268,500 35, which gives as the increase of debt $129,842,432 11. To this sum, if there be added the sum yet to be provided by loans, $464,157,567 89, the result will be $594,000,000, from which if there be deducted the estimated balance on the 1st of July, 1864, $5,836,539 93, the remainder will be $588,163,460 07, and will represent the total increase, on the basis of these estimates, of public debt during the year.

The debt on the 1st of July, 1863, was $1,098,793,181 37; to which if this estimated increase be added, the total debt on the 1st of July, 1864, will be $1,686,956,641 44, instead of $1,744,685,586 80, as estimated in the report of last December.

It is not certain, or perhaps probable, that the actual expenditures or actual debt will quite reach the amounts now estimated. Indeed, if the expenditures for the first quarter, $176,110,932 46, and the ordinary receipts, $40,939,456 14 for the same quarter, be taken as the standard, the total expenditures of the year will be $704,443,729 84, and the total receipts $163,757,824 56. To these receipts, if the balance on the 1st of July, 1863, $5,329,044 21 be added, it will make the total ordinary resources $169,086,868 77; and the subtraction of this sum from the total expenditures will give the whole amount to be provided by loans during the year as $535,356,861 07. This sum will therefore be, on this hypothesis, the increase of debt for the year, and, added to the debt existing on the 1st of July, 1863, will make the total amount on the 30th of June, 1864, $1,634,150,042 44.

It is not impossible that vigor in the prosecution of the war, and economy in every branch of expenditure, enforced by wise legislation, may reduce actual disbursements and consequent increase of debt even below these figures, and certainly few things can be more desirable than such reductions. The action necessary to these results is not, however, except as to the comparatively small expenditures of the Treasury Department, within the sphere assigned to the Secretary. He therefore prefers to accept the estimates of the several Departments, and the actual appropriations by Congress based upon them, deducting only that proportion which experience has indicated as likely to remain as balances unexpended at the close of the year. He thinks, too, that sound prudence requires adherence to the rule he prescribed to himself from the first, of overstating rather than understating the burdens created by the war and the demands thence arising upon the resources of the country. He has sought to avoid exaggeration on both sides, but he has thought it more prudent to excite a little too much apprehension than to encourage too sanguine hopes. The real difficulties have been, and are, too serious, and the real burdens too great, not to warrant earnest demands on all the resolution, all the energy, all the wisdom, and all the economy, which the strongest representations, sanctioned by reason, could or can bring into action.

In addition to the estimates for the current year just stated, the Secretary is required to submit estimates of the receipts and expenditures of the next fiscal year. These estimates, always uncertain, must, in the present condition of the country, be even less reliable than usual.

But the Secretary is encouraged to attempt them by the circumstance that the estimates for the fiscal year, 1864, submitted in his report of December, 1862, are less materially modified than might have been expected by the actual receipts of one quarter, and by the probabilities affecting those of the other three, and the general result is more favorable than was anticipated.

The aggregate receipts for 1864 were estimated in that report at $223,025,000, while the actual receipts, other than from loans for the first quarter, and the aggregate of expected like receipts for the remaining quarters, are now stated at only $161,568,500 35, in consequence of the large deficiency in the receipts of internal revenue. On the other hand, the aggregate expenditures were estimated last year at $845,413,183 56, and are now estimated, on the basis of actual returns for part and of estimates for the remainder of the year, at $755,568,500 35. The subtraction of receipts from expenditures shows the amount now estimated as required from loans for the year 1864 to be $594,000,000, instead of $623,388,183 56, as heretofore estimated. These figures show that the estimate of expenditures is now $89,844,633 21 less than the estimate of last year; so that, although the ordinary receipts as now estimated will be $61,456,499 45 less than was anticipated a year ago, still the increase of debt will be $28,388,183 56 less by the present than by the former estimate, which, it should be remembered, assumed the debt, on July 1, 1863, at $1,122,297,403 24, whereas in fact it only reached, at that date, the sum of $1,098,793,181 37.

With these illustrations of the uncertainty of estimates for a year, which is to commence more than six months after the making of them, and without professing any sanguine expectations that the estimates now to be submitted will, when tested by experience, prove, like the last, less favorable to the country than the actual results of administration, the Secretary submits the required statement for the fiscal year 1865, founded on the estimates of their probable requirements furnished by the several Departments, and on what seem to him probabilities concerning receipts from ordinary sources of revenue.

He estimates the probable receipts as follows:

Estimated balance, July 1, 1864.....	$5,836,539 93
From customs.....	70,000,000 00
From internal revenue.....	125,000,000 00
From lands.....	1,000,000 00
From miscellaneous sources.....	5,000,000 00

Making estimated aggregate receipts..... $206,836,539 93

And he estimates the expenditures as follows:

Estimated balance of former appropriations, unexpended July 1, 1864.....	$350,000,000 00
For the civil service.....	27,973,194 81
For pensions and Indians.....	9,631,394 73
For the War Department.....	536,204,127 77
For the Navy Department.....	143,618,785 40
For interest on public debt.....	85,387,677 15

Making the aggregate of estimated expenditures..... 1,151,815,088 86
But he estimates as likely to remain unexpended on the 30th of June, 1865, and therefore to be deducted from this aggregate..... 400,000,000 00

Making the real estimate of expenditures for the year..... 751,815,088 86
From which deduct estimated receipts from ordinary sources, as before stated..... 206,836,539 93

Leaving to be provided by loans..... $544,978,548 93

The sum to be provided by loans represents the increase of debt during the year. Assuming, therefore, the correctness of the estimate which puts the debt on the 1st of July, 1864, at $1,686,956,641 44, it will result from these estimates that the whole debt will have reached on the 30th of June, 1865, the sum of $2,231,935,190 37.

Tables are appended to this report exhibiting, in more detail and in a different form, the general results already stated. The first shows the actual receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863; the second the receipts and expenditures, actual and estimated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, and separately for the two months of October and November, 1863, with notes, showing in detail the amount received from new loans and applied in discharge of existing debt during the first quarter and the first two months of the second, and the amount yet required from loans for the year, and the probable increase of the public debt; the third shows the estimated receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865; the fourth is the Register's statement of revenue and expenditures during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863; the fifth is a similar statement from the same office for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1864, ending September 30, 1863; and the sixth is a complete statement of the origin, progress, and condition on the 30th June and 30th September, 1863, of the national debt.

The reports of the heads of the several bureaus of the Department, including that of Comptroller of the Currency and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, will also accompany this report of the Secretary. They show in detail the operations of the several bureaus, and the statements and suggestions made in them are commended to the consideration of Congress.

Another statement, showing the prices of the leading articles of consumption at New York, on or near the first day of each month, for thirty-nine years, commencing with 1825, has been prepared under the direction of the Secretary, and accompanies this report. From this statement he hopes that some help may be obtained toward correct opinions on many important questions, and particularly those concerning the contraction and expansion of currency, whether metallic or paper.

It has been already seen that the amount required for general disbursements, exclusive of payments on account of public debt, for the three last quarters of the current fiscal year, was, on the 1st of October last, $579,457,567 89, of which sum $115,300,000 were expected from ordinary sources, and the remainder, $464,157,567 89, was expected from loans.

The receipts and expenditures during October and November, other than on account of principal of debt, amounted each, so far as has been ascertained, to $147,060,731 16, without balance. Of these receipts, $35,629,703 18 were from ordinary sources, and $111,931,027 98 from loans, either temporary or permanent, leaving to be obtained during the remaining seven months from ordinary sources $79,670,296 82, and from loans, $352,226,539 82. On the basis of these two months, the receipts and expenditures from ordinary sources for the last three quarters of the year will respectively exceed the general estimates by $43,033,664 31, and $39,532,257 72, making a difference in favor of the country of $3,501,406 59.

The Secretary admits, therefore, no apprehension of deficiency on comparison with estimates, in any of the ordinary sources of income, except, perhaps, the internal revenue; nor does he anticipate any formidable difficulty in providing the amount to be obtained from loans; especially if the successes vouchsafed by a gracious Providence to our armies during the last nine months shall continue to attend them.

But no one can be more profoundly convinced than himself of the very great importance of providing even a larger amount than is estimated from revenue. To check the increase of debt must be, in our circumstances, a prominent object of patriotic solicitude. The Secretary, therefore, while submitting estimates which require large loans, and while he thinks it not very difficult to negotiate them, feels himself bound, by a prudent regard to possible contingencies, to urge on Congress efficient measures for the increase of revenue.

It is possible that a limited additional amount of income may be derived from judicious modification of some provisions of the laws imposing duties on foreign imports; but the chief reliance for any substantial increase, and even for the prevention of possible decrease, must be on internal duties.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends an increase of the tax on bank note circulation to two and two fifths per cent.; an increase of the duty on distilled spirits to sixty cents per gallon; an increase of the duty on tobacco to twenty cents per pound on leaf, and from five to twelve cents, according to quality, on manufactured; a duty of ten cents per gallon on crude petroleum; a duty of two cents per pound on cotton; the repeal of the tobacco and petroleum drawbacks; and various other changes of the internal revenue laws, designed to augment the receipts from this source. In the particular recommendations just mentioned, the Secretary fully concurs, and commends all his suggestions to careful attention. The enactment of such laws as will secure an increase of the internal revenue to the amount originally estimated, of one hundred and fifty millions a year, is required by the strongest considerations of public policy.

Hitherto the expenses of the war have been defrayed by loans to an extent which nothing but the expectation of its speedy termination could fully warrant.

In his first report, submitted at the special session in July, 1861, the Secretary stated his conviction that, to a sound financial condition, a system of taxation certain to produce a sufficient revenue to pay the whole ordinary expenses of the Government in times of peace, and the entire interest on the public debt, and to create a gradually increasing fund for the redemption of its principal, was indispensable. It was not important, so long as it seemed highly probable that the war would be speedily brought to a successful close, that the revenue should largely exceed the ordinary expenditures and the interest. On the contrary, it seemed wisest to obtain the means for nearly the whole of the extraordinary expenditures by loans, and thus avoid the necessity of any considerable increase of the burdens of the people at a time when the sudden outbreak of flagitious rebellion had deranged their business, and temporarily diminished their incomes.

The financial administration of the first fiscal year after the outbreak of the rebellion was conducted upon these ideas. The acts of Congress at the extra session of July, 1861, were framed with the intention of supplying the full amount of revenue demanded by them. But receipts disappointed expectation, and it soon became obvious that a much larger proportion of the means needed for the fiscal year 1862, than the principle adopted would allow, must be derived from loans.

When, therefore, Congress assembled in regular session on the first Monday of December, 1861, the Secretary directed attention to the necessity of increased taxation. The responsibility was promptly assumed by Congress, and the internal revenue law was enacted, and such modifications of the tariff act were made that ample provision for the desired objects was now supposed to have been certainly secured. It was not expected, however, that the influence of this legislation would affect the results of the then current year. Nor did it affect them. The total receipts from ordinary sources to the close of that year, June 30, 1862, were insufficient for the payments expected to be made from them. The receipts were $51,935,720 76, while the disbursements for the civil service, for pensions and Indians, and for interest, were $37,701,801 11; leaving only $14,233,919 65 for the War and Navy Departments, the expenditures of which in the last year of peace had been $27,922,917 24, and nothing at all for extraordinary expenditures or a sinking fund.

In his report at the December session, 1862, the Secretary, considering this deficiency, and assuming the correctness of the estimate of $150,000,000 as the amount of receipts from internal duties, and taking double the expenses of the War and Navy Departments in the last year of peace as the amount likely to be annually required after the suppression of the rebellion, expressed the opinion that the probable receipts under the legislation of the preceding session would meet all ordinary expenditures for the fiscal year 1863, and interest, and leave a large surplus to be applied, for the present, to the extraordinary disbursements of the war, or, after its close, to the reduction of debt. In that report, therefore, and in his subsequent communications to the proper committees, the Secretary suggested no increase of taxation, but confined his recommendations to other measures for the improvement of the public credit, among which those relating to loans and to uniformity of currency held the foremost place.

Congress gave effect to these recommendations by the loan act and the national banking act, but at the same time somewhat diminished the expectation of income by modifications of the internal revenue act.

Notwithstanding this diminution, however, and notwithstanding the much larger diminution caused by the failure of receipts expected from internal duties unaffected by this legislation, the Secretary has now the satisfaction of being able to show that the actual receipts of the last fiscal year did pay the whole interest, the whole amount of ordinary expenditures, estimated for the Army and Navy at double those of the last year of peace, and a portion of the extraordinary expenditures which, under the circumstances, was equivalent to a payment into a sinking fund.

Thus the total amount of receipts during the fiscal year 1863 was.....$124,443,313 29

While the expenditures were:
For the civil service and for pensions and Indians.....$27,470,442 87
For interest.....24,729,846 61

And would have been, for ordinary disbursements of War and Navy Departments, estimated at double those of the last year of peace.....55,845,834 48

108,046,123 96
Leaving difference between receipts and ordinary expenditures applicable to extraordinary expenditures or a sinking fund.....$16,397,189 33

Had it been possible, therefore, to suppress re-billion and restore expenditures to a peace basis after one year of war, and before the 1st of July, 1862, there would have been a balance on the 1st of July, 1863, of more than sixteen million dollars applicable to the reduction of debt.

So, assuming as correct the estimates of receipts and disbursements for the current year 1864, based on actual receipts and expenditures of one quarter, and making the total amount of receipts $161,568,500 35, and taking the disbursements for the civil service, pensions, and Indians, to be $42,108,126 33, for interest, $59,165,136 38, and for the ordinary expenses of the Army and Navy, as before, to be double those of the last year of peace, or $55,845,834 48, and deducting the total of these disbursements, $157,119,097 19, from the total of receipts, there will remain an unexpended balance of $4,049,403 16. Had it been possible to suppress rebellion after two years of war, and before July, 1863, this sum would have been applicable to the purposes of a sinking fund.

So, also, assuming again as correct the general estimates of receipts and expenditures for the next fiscal year, 1865, the total receipts for the year will be $206,836,539 93; while the expenditures for the civil service, and pensions, and Indians, will be $37,604,499 54; for interest, $85,387,676 15; and for the Army and Navy, observing the rule already stated, $55,845,834 48, making a total of $178,838,010 17, which sum, if deducted from the total of receipts, will give a remainder of $27,998,529 76. Should the rebellion be suppressed after three years of war, and before the 1st of July, 1864, that remainder will be applicable to payment of debt.

These statements are subject to some modifications besides those which may result from errors of estimates; but these cannot reduce, though they may increase, the applicable balances, and therefore cannot affect unfavorably any deductions from the figures which have been given.

These statements illustrate the great importance of providing, beyond all contingency, for ordinary expenditures and interest on debt, and for the largest possible amount of extraordinary expenditures, by taxation. In proportion to the amount raised above the necessary sums for ordinary demands will be the diminution of debt, the diminution of interest, and the improvement of credit. It is hardly too much—perhaps hardly enough—to say that every dollar raised for extraordinary expenditures or reduction of debt is worth two in the increased value of national securities, and increased facilities for the negotiation of indispensable loans.

These statements illustrate equally the importance of an economical and vigorous prosecution of the war. No prudent man will recommend economy at the expense of efficiency. Such nominal economy is real extravagance. But efficiency is not promoted by profusion or waste, and, least of all, by misuse of public money or public property. Every dollar and every man are freely offered by a generous people; how sacred the obligation that not one man should be wasted, and not one dollar misapplied! Nor is rashness, in war, vigor. But the vigilance that misses no opportunity, the energy that relaxes no effort, the skill that vitalizes all resources, and the perseverance that never grows weary, these make true vigor. If by such vigor the rebellion can be suppressed and the war ended before the 1st of July next, the country will be saved from the vast increase of debt which must necessarily attend its continuance during another year, and the debt itself can at once be placed in a course of steady reduction. And whenever progressive payment shall begin, the value of national securities will rapidly rise, and reduction in rates of interest will gradually diminish the burdens of debt.

While the Secretary thus earnestly urges that the largest possible proportion of expenditure be provided by direct contributions from the property and incomes of the people, he is aware that a still larger proportion must, as yet, be provided by loans.

In the creation of debt, by negotiation of loans or otherwise, the Secretary has kept four objects steadily in view: (1) moderate interest; (2) general distribution; (3) future controllability; and (4) incidental utility.

38TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SENATE & HO. OF REPS.

Towards the accomplishment of the first object, the nearest approach that seems possible has been made. The earliest negotiations were at the highest rates of interest; for it is a distinguishing characteristic of our financial history in this rebellion that the public credit, which was at the lowest ebb in the months which preceded its breaking out, has steadily improved in the midst of the terrible trials it has brought upon the country. The first loans were negotiated at seven and thirty hundredths per cent.; the next at seven; the next at six; more recently large sums have been obtained at five and four; and the whole of the debt which is represented by United States notes and fractional currency bears, of course, no interest.

The interest on the debt which exists in the form of Treasury notes and certificates of indebtedness or of deposits, and is called temporary debt, is paid in United States notes; while the interest on debt which exists in the form of bonds, and is called funded debt, is paid in coin—a discrimination which is intended to bring the payments of coin interest within moderate compass, and at the same time to offer special inducements to investments in bonds, in order to avoid a too rapid increase of circulating notes, and consequent depreciation.

The average rate of interest on the whole debt, without regard to the varying margin between coin and notes, was, on the 1st day of July, 1862, 4.36 per cent.; on the 1st day of January, 1863, 4.02 per cent.; on the 1st day of July, 1863, 3.77 per cent.; and on the 1st day of October, 1863, 3.95 per cent.

It will not escape observation that the average rate is now increasing; and it is obvious that it must continue to increase with the increase of the proportion of the interest-bearing to the non-interest-bearing debt. And as the amount of the latter, consisting of United States notes and fractional currency, cannot be materially augmented without evil consequences of the most serious character, the rate of interest must increase with the debt, and approach continually the highest average. That must be greater or less in proportion to the duration and cost of the war.

The general distribution of the debt into the hands of the greatest possible number of holders has been the second object of the Secretary in its creation. This has been accomplished by the universal diffusion of United States notes and fractional currency, by the distribution of certificates among great numbers of contract creditors and temporary depositors, and by arrangements to popularize the loans by giving to the people everywhere opportunities to subscribe for bonds. These subscription arrangements have been especially useful and successful. They have been adopted as yet with reference to only two descriptions of bonds—the two commonly known as seven-thirties and five-twenties; so named, the first from their rates of interest, and the second from their periods of payment. The plan of distributing the seven-thirties was that of employing a large number of agents in many places, and directing their action from the Department. It worked well for a time, but was soon found inadequate to the financial necessities of the Government. For the distribution of the five-twenties, therefore, a different plan was adopted. After ascertaining, by inquiry, that they could not be disposed of to capitalists in amounts sufficient for prompt payment of the Army and Navy, and for the satisfaction of the just claims of public creditors generally, without serious loss, the Secretary determined to employ a general agent, under adequate bonds, and confide the whole work of distribution, except so far as it could be effected by the Treasurer, Assistant Treasurers, and designated depositaries, to him and to sub-agents designated by him and responsible immediately to him. Under this plan, and chiefly through the indefatigable efforts of the general agent and his sub-agents, five-twenty bonds to the amount of nearly four hundred million dollars, in denominations of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, and one thousand dollars, were distributed throughout the whole country, not controlled by the rebellion, and among all classes of our countrymen. The history of the world may be searched in vain for a parallel case of popular financial support to a national Government. The Secretary is unable to perceive in what better or more effectual mode the important object of distribution could be accomplished, and he proposes no departure from it, except such as considerations of economy, harmonized with efficiency, may suggest.

The object of future controllability has also had a prominent place in the regards of the Secretary. Under the conditions which existed at the outbreak of the rebellion he acquiesced in the necessity which seemed to dictate the negotiation of bonds payable after twenty years; but he acquiesced with reluctance, and, as soon as permitted by circumstances, recommended the enactment of laws authorizing the issue of bonds payable after shorter periods, as well as the creation of temporary debt in other forms. In harmony with these views Congress provided for the issue of the bonds known as the five-twenties; and also for the issue of Treasury notes payable three years from date; for certificates of indebtedness payable in one year; and for temporary loans by deposits, reimbursable after ten days' notice. At the last session Congress repealed some embarrassing restrictions of former acts, and authorized the issue of bonds payable after ten years, and of Treasury notes payable at pleasure or three years from date. These Treasury notes were made legal tenders for face value, or convertible for amount and interest into United States notes.

The Secretary availed himself of this legislation by placing with the people as large an amount as possible of five-twenty bonds, and by using the other powers so as to put the whole debt, except the long loans first negotiated, in such a shape that prompt advantage can be taken of favorable circumstances to diminish the burdens it imposes on industry. Whenever the constitutional supremacy of the nation shall be reestablished over all its parts, it will be completely within the power of Congress and the Secretary to fund the whole or any part of the temporary debt in bonds bearing a very moderate interest, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after very brief periods, or, perhaps, at any time after their issue. Nothing further seems desirable on the score of controllability.

The final object of the Secretary was to extract from the unavoidable evil of debt as much incidental benefit as possible.

To this end, he desired authority to receive temporary loans in the form of deposits reimbursable after a few days' notice. This measure was regarded by many with something less than favor at first; but Congress, after full consideration, authorized the receipt of such deposits at an interest not exceeding five per cent. to the amount of $25,000,000, then raised the limit to $50,000,000; and then to $100,000,000; and provided a reserve of $50,000,000 of United States notes to meet demands for reimbursements beyond other convenient means of satisfaction. It was not long before these deposits reached the highest limit, and, before the flow could be well checked, somewhat exceeded it. The utility of the measure was very conspicuous on the recent occasion of great stringency in New York, when the Secretary was able to reimburse over fifty millions of these deposits during the last weeks of the year; by which action, the pressure was sensibly alleviated, with the use of only a fifth of the reserve.

In former reports the Secretary has stated his convictions, and the grounds of them, respecting the necessity and the utility of putting a large part of the debt in the form of United States notes, without interest, and adapted to circulation as money. These convictions remain unchanged, and seem now to be shared by the people. For the first time in our history has a real approach to a uniform currency been made; and the benefits of it, though still far from the best attainable condition, are felt by all. The circulation has been distributed throughout the country, and is everywhere acceptable. It is a gratification to know that a tribunal so distinguished by the learning and virtues of its members as the supreme court of New York, has given the sanction of its judgment to the constitutional validity of the law.

So, too, real and great advantages are derived from the wide diffusion of the debt among the people, through business transactions and through the exertions of the officers of the Department and the agents for loans, already noticed.

It is impossible to estimate the advantages to national unity and national strength secured by this distribution. Every holder of a note or bond, from a five cent fractional note to a five thousand dollar bond, has a direct interest in the security of national institutions and in the stability of national administration. And it is another and no small advantage of the distribution that the burdens of debt, always heaviest when loans are held by a few, and especially by foreigners, diminish in proportion as the receivers of interest become identified with the payers of taxes.

Another incidental good growing from the bitter root of debt, has been fully explained in observations heretofore submitted on the national banking system. Except through such a system no sure way is seen to the complete and permanent establishment of a uniform currency; and a system of national banking, fair to all and secure for all, can only be safely and firmly established by making use of a portion of the national debt as security for the national currency.

In these several ways may even such great evils as are brought upon us by rebellion be transmuted, by a wise alchemy, into various forms of utility. The Secretary has endeavored to use this alchemy, with what success the country will judge when time and trial shall have applied to his work their unfailing tests.

Meantime additional loans are required, and, as legislation now stands, several modes are open.

The limits of deposits for temporary loan are fixed at $100,000,000. The amount of this deposit on the 1st day of December had been reduced to $45,506,120 61, and payments of $10,000,000 had been made from the reserve. The additional payments will be confined within the narrowest possible limits, and can hardly exceed $25,000,000. The reflow of deposits has already begun, and will probably soon exceed reimbursements, and so arrest payments from the reserve. The whole reflow beyond the amount of these payments will be available as part of the additional loan required, and may be stated, without much risk of mistake, at $25,000,000. The Secretary perceives no solid reason for retaining the restriction on loans, in this form, to $100,000,000. It may, as he thinks, be usefully removed. As the advantages of these deposits become better and more generally understood, the loan in this form will doubtless, in the absence of restriction, be largely increased, and the possibility of demands for reimbursements, beyond means to meet them, can be fully provided for by an increase of the existing proportion between deposits and reserve. Such an arrangement, the Secretary inclines to think, would operate beneficially by increasing the amount of currency when unusual stringency shall require increase, and reducing its amount when returning ease shall allow reduction.

Another portion of the additional loan required may be obtained through the sale of the remainder of the bonds known as five-twenties. The amount of these bonds unsubscribed for on the 1st of December was $101,059,600. It will not be difficult to dispose of these at par, and it is possible that a small premium may be obtained on a part.

In a former report the Secretary placed the limit, to which the loan in the form of certificates of indebtedness could be carried, at $100,000,000. Experience has shown that it can be carried to $150,000,000, and that its natural limit is about that sum. On the 1st of December the amount of these certificates was $145,720,000. It would be unsafe, therefore, to rely on any substantial increase of loan in that form.

The limit prescribed by law to the issue of United States notes has been reached, and the Secretary thinks it clearly inexpedient to increase the amount. When circulation exceeds the legitimate requirements for real payments and exchanges, no addition to its volume will increase its value. On the contrary, such addition tends inevitably to depreciation; and depreciation, if addition be continued, will find its only practical limit in the utter worthlessness of the augmented mass.

When Congress authorized the creation of debt, to a certain extent, in the form of United States notes, and impressed on these notes the qualities of a circulating medium, its action was justified by the disappearance of coin in consequence of the suspension of specie payments; by the necessity of providing a medium in which taxes could be collected, loans received, and payments made; and by the obvious expediency of providing that medium in the form of national issues, instead of resorting to the paper of banks. Under the circumstances its action was wise and necessary; but it was equally wise and necessary to limit the extent of the issues by the necessity which demanded them. They were wanted to fill the vacuum caused by the disappearance of coin, and to supply the additional demands created by the increased number and variety of money payments. Congress believed that four hundred millions would suffice for these purposes, and therefore limited issues to that sum.

The Secretary proposes no change of this limitation, and places no reliance, therefore, on any increase of resources from increase of circulation. Additional loans in this mode would, indeed, almost certainly prove illusory; for diminished value could hardly fail to neutralize increased amount.
